INTRODUCTION

TO THE

PROVERBS OF SOLOMON,

THE SON OF DAVID, KING OF ISRAEL.

THERE has scarcely been any dispute concerning either the Author or Divine authority of this book, either in the Jewish or Christian church: all allow that it was written by Solomon; and the general belief is, that he wrote the book by Divine inspiration.

It has, indeed, been supposed, that Solomon collected the major part of these Proverbs from those who had preceded him, whether Hebrews or Heathens: but the latter opinion has been controverted, as derogating from the authority of the book. But this supposition has very little weight; for whatever of truth is found in or among men, came originally from God; and if He employed an inspired man to collect those rays of light, and embody them for the use of His church, He had a right so to do, and to claim His own wheresoever found; and, by giving it a new authentication, render it more useful in reference to the end for which it was originally communicated. God is the Father of lights; and from Him came all true wisdom, not only in its discursive teachings, but in all its detached maxims for the government and regulation of life. I think it very likely that Solomon did not make them all: but he collected every thing of this kind within his reach; and what was according to the Spirit of truth, by which he was inspired, he condensed in this book; and as the Divine Spirit gave it, so the providence of God has preserved it, for the use of His church.

That true Light which lightens every man that cometh into the world, first taught men to acknowledge Himself as the Fountain and Giver of all good: and then by short maxims, conveyed in terse energetic words, taught them to regulate their conduct in life, in respect to the dispensations of His providence; and in reference to each other in domestic, social, and civil life: and this was done by such proverbs as we find collected in this book. The different changes that take place in society; the new relations, which in process of time men would bear to each other; the invention of arts and sciences; and the experience of those who had particularly considered the ways of the Lord, and marked the operation of His hands; would give rise to many maxims, differing from the original stock only in their application to those new relations and varying circumstances.

The Heathen who had any connection with the first worshippers of the Almighty, would observe the maxims by which they regulated the affairs of life, and would naturally borrow from them: and hence those original teachings became diffused throughout the world; and we find there is not an ancient nation on earth that is without its Code of Proverbs, or proverbial maxims. The ancient SANSCRIT is full of them; and they abound in the Persian and Arabic languages, and in all the dialects formed from these, in all the countries of the East. The HEETOPADESA of Vishnoo Sarma, the Anvari Soheily, the Bahar Danush, Kalila we Dumna, and all the other forms of that original work: the fables of Lockman, Æsop, Phædrus, Avienus, &c. are collections of proverbs, illustrated by their application to the most important purposes of domestic, social, and civil life.

Those nations with which we are best acquainted have their collections of proverbs: and perhaps those with whose languages and customs we are unacquainted have theirs also. Messrs. Visdelou and Galand formed a collection of Asiatic Proverbs, and published it in their supplement to the Bibliotheque Orientale of D'Herbelot. This is a collection of very great worth, curiosity, and importance. Mr. J. Ray, F. R. S. formed a collection of this kind, particularly of such as are, or have been in use in Great Britain: this is as curious as it is entertaining and useful.

The term PROVERB, proverbium, compounded of pro, for, and verbum, a word, speech, or saying, leads us to an original meaning of the thing itself. It was an allegorical saying, where more was meant than met the eye—a short saying that stood for a whole discourse, the words of which are metaphorical: e. g. this of the Rabbins,—"I have given thee my lamp; give me thy lamp. If thou keep my lamp, I will keep thy lamp: but if thou quench my lamp, I will quench thy lamp." Here the word lamp is a metaphor, 1. for Divine Revelation; 2. for the human soul. I have given thee my word and Spirit; give me thy soul and heart. If thou observe my word, and follow the dictates of my Spirit, I will regulate thy heart, and keep thy soul from every evil: but if thou disobey my word, and quench my Spirit, I will withdraw my Spirit, leave thee to the hardness and darkness of thy own heart, and send thee at last into outer darkness.—Such as this is properly the proverb; the word which stands for a discourse.

But the Hebrew משלים mishelim, from משל mashal, to rule or govern, signifies a set or collection of weighty, wise, and therefore authoritative sayings, whereby a man's whole conduct, civil and religious, is to be governed; sayings containing rules for the government of life. Or, as the divine author himself expresses it in the beginning of the first chapter, the design is to lead men to know wisdom and instruction, to perceive the words of understanding; to receive the instruction of wisdom, justice, and judgment, and equity; to give subtilty to the simple, and to the young man knowledge and discretion, ver. 2, 3. This was the design of proverbs; and perhaps it would be impossible to find out a better definition of the design and object of those of Solomon, than is contained in the two preceding verses. See my Dissertation on Parabolical Writing, at the end of the Notes on Matthew chap. xiii.

Of the three thousand proverbs which Solomon spoke we have only those contained in this book and in Ecclesiastes; and of the one thousand and five Songs which he made, only the Canticles have arrived at our times: or, in other words, of all his numerous works in divinity, philosophy, morality, and natural history, only the three above-mentioned bearing his name, have been admitted into the Sacred Canon. His natural history of trees and plants, of beasts, fowls, and fishes, (for on all these he wrote) is totally lost. Curiosity, which never says it is enough, would give up the three we have for those on the animal and vegetable kingdom, which are lost. What God judged of importance to the eternal interests of mankind is preserved; and perhaps we know the vegetable and animal kingdoms now as well through Linneus and Buffon, and their followers, as we should have known them, had Solomon's books on Natural History come down to our times.

Others would investigate nature, and to them those researches were left. Solomon spoke by inspiration; and therefore to him Divine doctrines were communicated, that he might teach them to man. Every man in his order.

The Book of Proverbs has been divided into five parts:—

I. A master is represented as instructing his scholar, giving him admonitions, directions, cautions, and excitements to the study of wisdom, chap. i—ix.

II. This part is supposed to contain the Proverbs of Solomon, properly so called; delivered in distinct, independent, general sentences. From chap. ix. to xxii. ver. 17.

III. In this part the tutor again addresses himself to his pupil, and gives him fresh admonitions to the study of wisdom; which is followed by a set of instructions, delivered imperatively to the pupil, who is supposed all the while to be standing before him. From chap. xxii. 17. to chap. xxv.

IV. This part is distinguished by being a selection of Solomon's Proverbs, made by the men of Hezekiah, conjectured to be Isaiah, Hosea, and Micah, who all flourished under that reign. This part, like the second, is composed of distinct unconnected sentences, and extends from chap. xxv. to xxx.

V. The fifth part contains a set of wise expostulations and instructions, which Agur, the son of Jakeh, delivered to his pupils Ithiel and Ucal, chap. xxx. And the thirty-first chapter contains the instruction which a mother who is not named, gave to Lemuel her son, being earnestly desirous to guard him against vice, to establish him in the principles of justice, and to have him married to a wife of the best qualities. These two last chapters may be considered a kind of Appendix to the Book of Proverbs, see Dr. Taylor: but others suppose that the thirty-first chapter contains Bathsheba's words to Solomon, and his commendation of his mother.

There are many repetitions, and some transpositions, in the Book of Proverbs, which makes it very probable that they were not all made at the same time, that they are the work of different authors, and have been collected by various hands: but still this sum total is delivered to us by Divine inspiration; and whoever might have been the original authors of distinct parts, the Divine Spirit has made them all its own by handing them to us in this form. Some attribute the collection, i. e. the formation of this collection, to Isaiah; others to Hilkiah, and Shebna the scribe; and others to Ezra.

That Solomon could have borrowed little from his predecessors is evident from this consideration, that all uninspired ethic writers, who are famous in history, lived after his times. Solomon began to reign A. M. 2989, which was 239 years before the first Olympiad; 479 before Cyrus, under whom flourished the seven wise men of Greece; 679 before Alexander the Great, under whose reign flourished Socrates, Plato, and Aristotle; and 1011 before the birth of Christ. Therefore, to the Gentiles he could be but little, if at all indebted.

It is impossible for any description of persons to read the Book of Proverbs without profit. Kings and courtiers, as well as those engaged in trade, commerce, agriculture, and the humblest walks of life, may here read lessons of instruction for the regulation of their conduct in their respective circumstances. Fathers, mothers, wives, husbands, sons, daughters, masters, and servants, may here also learn their respective duties: and the most excellent rules are laid down, not only in reference to morality, but to civil policy and economy.

Many motives are employed by the wise man to accomplish the end at which he aims: motives derived from honour, interest, love, fear, natural affection, and piety towards God. The principal object he has in view is, to inspire a deep reverence for God, fear of His judgments, and an ardent love for wisdom and virtue. He exhibits injustice, impiety, profligacy, idleness, imprudence, drunkenness, and almost every vice, in such lively colours, as to render every man ashamed of them who has any true respect for his interest, honour, character, or for himself. And as there is nothing so directly calculated to ruin young men, as bad company, debauch, and irregular connexions, he labours to fortify his disciple with the most convincing reasons against all these vices, and especially against indolence, dissipation, and the company of lewd women.

Maxims to regulate life in all the conditions already mentioned, and to prevent the evils already described, are laid down so copiously, clearly, impressively, and in such variety, that every man who wishes to be instructed, may take what he chooses, and among multitudes those which he likes best.

Besides the original Hebrew, the Book of Proverbs exists in the following ancient Versions: the Chaldee, Septuagint, Syriac, Vulgate, and Arabic. But the Septuagint above all, takes greater liberty with the Sacred Text than any of the rest. It often transposes, changes, and adds; and all these in very considerable degrees; and this is the Version which is quoted in the New Testament. Several of these additions, as well as the most important changes, the Reader will find noticed in the following Notes: but to mark them all would require a translation of almost the whole Greek text. How our forefathers understood several passages will be seen by quotations from an ancient MS. in my possession, which begins with this book, and extends to the conclusion of the New Testament. It is well written upon strong vellum, very large folio; and highly illuminated in the beginning of each book, and the first letter of each chapter. The language is more antiquated than in the translation commonly attributed to Wiclif. It was once the property of Thomas à Woodstock, youngest son of Edward III., and brother to John of Gaunt and the Black Prince. I have often quoted this MS. in my Notes on the New Testament.

NOTES ON CHAP. I.

Verse 1. The proverbs of Solomon] For the meaning of the word Proverb, see the Introduction; and the dissertation upon parabolical writing at the end of the notes on Matt. xiii. Solomon is the first of the sacred writers whose name stands at the head of his works.

Verse 2. To know wisdom] That is, this is the design of parabolical writing in general; and the particular aim of the present work.

This and the two following verses contain the interpretation of the term parable, and the Author's design in the whole book. The first verse is the title, and the next three verses an explanation of the nature and design of this very important tract.

Wisdom] חכמה chokmah may mean here, and in every other part of this book, not only that Divine science by which we are enabled to discover the best end, and pursue it by the most proper means; but also the whole of that heavenly teaching that shows us both ourselves and God, directs us into all truth, and forms the whole of true religion.

And instruction] מוסר moser, the teaching that discovers all its parts; to understand, to comprehend the words or doctrines which should be comprehended, in order that we may become wise to salvation.

Verse 3. To receive the instruction] השכל ha-sekel, the deliberately weighing of the points contained in the teaching, so as to find out their importance.

Equity] משרים mesharim, rectitude. The pupil is to receive wisdom and instruction, the words of wisdom and understanding, justice and judgment, so perfectly as to excel in all. Wisdom itself personified is his teacher; and when God's wisdom teaches, there is no delay in learning.

Verse 4. To give subtilty to the simple] The word simple, from simplex, compounded of sine, without, and plica, a fold, signifies properly, plain and honest, one that has no bye ends in view; who is what he appears to be; and is opposed to complex, from complico, to fold together; to make one rope or cord out of many strains: but because honesty and plain dealing are so rare in the world, and none but the truly religious man will practise them, further than the fear of the law obliges him, hence simple has sunk into a state of progressive deterioration. First, it signified as above, without fold, unmixed, uncompounded: this was its radical meaning. 2dly, as applied to men, it signified innocent, harmless, without disguise. 3dly, as such persons were rather an unfashionable sort of people, it sunk in its meaning to homely, homespun, mean, ordinary. And, 4thly, as worldly men, who were seeking their portion in this life, and had little to do with religion, supposed that wisdom, wit, and understanding, were given to men that they might make the best of them in reference to the things of this life, the word sunk still lower in its meaning, and signified silly, foolish: and there, to be dishonour of our language and morals, it stands! I have taken these acceptations which I have marked in Italics out of the first dictionary that came to hand; Martin's: but if I went to Johnson, I might add to SILLY, not wise, not cunning: and simplicity, that meant at first, as MARTIN defines it, openness, plain dealing, downright honesty, is now degraded to weakness, silliness, foolishness. And they will continue thus degraded, till downright honesty and plain dealing get again into vogue. There are two Hebrew words generally supposed to come from the same root, which in our common Version are rendered the simple, פתאים petaim, and פתים petayim, or פתיים petiim: the former comes from פתא pata, to be rash, hasty; the latter from פתה patah, to draw aside, seduce, entice. It is the first of these words which is used here, and may be applied to youth; the inconsiderate, the unwary, who, for want of knowledge and experience, act precipitately. Hence the Vulgate renders it parvulis, little ones, young children, or little children, as my old MS.; or very babes, as Coverdale. The Septuagint renders it ακακοις, those that are without evil; and the Versions in general understand it of those who are young, giddy, or inexperienced.

To the young man] נער naâr is frequently used to signify such as are in the state of adolescence, grown up boys, very well translated in my old MS. punge fulmaren; what we would now call, the grown up lads. These, as being giddy and inexperienced, stand in especial need of lessons of wisdom and discretion. The Hebrew for discretion, מזמה mizmah, is taken both in a good and bad sense, as זם zam, its root, signifies to devise, or imagine; for the device may be either mischief, or the contrivance of some good purpose.

Verse 5. A wise man will hear] I shall not only give such instructions as may be suitable to the youthful and inexperienced, but also to those who have much knowledge and understanding. So said St. Paul:—We speak wisdom among those that are perfect. This and the following verse are connected in the Old MS. and in Coverdale. By hearynge the wyse man shall come by more wysdome; and by experience he shall be more apte to understonde a parable and the interpretation thereof; the wordes of the wyse and the darke speaches of the same.

Verse 6. Dark sayings.] חידת chidoth, enigmas or riddles, in which the Asiatics abounded. I believe parables, such as those delivered by our Lord, nearly express the meaning of the original.

Verse 7. The fear of the Lord] In the preceding verses, Solomon shows the advantage of acting according to the dictates of wisdom; in the following verses, he shows the danger of acting contrary to them. The fear of the Lord signifies that religious reverence which every intelligent being owes to his Creator: and is often used to express the whole of religion, as we have frequently had occasion to remark in different places. But what is religion? The love of God, and the love of man: the former producing all obedience to the Divine will; the latter, every act of benevolence to one's fellows. The love of God shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Spirit produces the deepest religious reverence, genuine piety, and cheerful obedience. To love one's neighbour as himself is the second great commandment; and as love worketh no ill to one's neighbour; therefore, it is said to be the fulfilling of the law. Without love, there is no obedience; without reverence, there is neither caution, consistent conduct, nor perseverance in righteousness.

This fear or religious reverence is said to be the beginning of knowledge; ראשית reshith, the principle, the first moving influence, begotten in a tender conscience by the Spirit of God. No man can ever become truly wise, who does not begin with God, the Fountain of knowledge: and he whose mind is influenced by the fear and love of God, will learn more in a month than others will in a year.

Fools despise] אוילים evilim, evil men.—Men of bad hearts, bad heads, and bad ways.

11 If they say, Come with us, let us [e] lay wait for blood, let us lurk privily for the innocent without cause:

Verse 8. My son, hear] Father was the title of preceptor, and son that of disciple or scholar, among the Jews. But here the reference appears to be to the children of a family; the father and mother having the principal charge, in the first instance, of their children's instruction. It is supposed that these parents have, themselves, the fear of the Lord, and that they are capable of giving the best advices to their children, and that they set before them a strict example of all godly living. In vain do parents give good advice, if their own conduct be not consistent. The father occasionally gives instruction; he is not always in the family; much of those occupations which are necessary for the family support, is carried on abroad. The mother—she is constantly within doors, and to her the regulation of the family belongs; therefore she has and gives law. The wise man says in effect, to every child, "Be obedient to thy mother within, and carefully attend to the instructions of thy father, that thou may the better see the reasons of obedience; and learn from him how thou art to get thy bread honestly in the world."

Verse 9. An ornament of grace unto thy head, and chains] That is, filial respect and obedience will be as ornamental to thee, as crowns, diadems, and golden chains and pearls, are to others.

Political dignity has been distinguished in many nations by a chain of gold about the neck. Solomon seems here to intimate, if we follow the metaphor, that the surest way of coming to distinguished eminence, in civil matters, is to act according to the principles of true wisdom, proceeding from the fear of God.

Verse 10. If sinners entice thee, consent thou not] אל־תבא al-tobê, WILL—not. They can do thee no harm unless thy will join in with them. God's eternal purpose with respect to man is, that his will shall be free: or rather, that the will which is essentially FREE, shall never be forced nor be forceable by any power. Not even the devil himself can lead a man into sin, till he consents. Were it not so, how could God judge the world!

Verse 11. If they say, Come with us] From all accounts, this is precisely the way in which the workers of iniquity form their partisans, and constitute their marauding societies to the present day.

Let us lay wait for blood] Let us rob and murder.

Let us lurk privily] Let us lie in ambush for our prey.

Verse 12. Let us swallow them up alive] Give them as hasty a death as if the earth were suddenly to swallow them up. This seems to refer to the destruction of a whole village. Let us destroy man, woman, and child; and then we may seize on and carry away the whole of their property; and the booty will be great.

Verse 14. Cast in thy lot] Be a frater conjuratus, a sworn brother; and thou shalt have an equal share of all the spoil.

Common sense must teach us, that the words here used are such as must be spoken when a gang of cut-throats, pickpockets, &c. associate together.

Verse 16. For their feet run to evil] The whole of this verse is wanting in the Septuagint, and in the Arabic.

Verse 17. Surely in vain the net is spread in the sight of any bird.] This is a proverb, of which the wise man here makes no particular use. But the meaning does not seem as difficult as some imagine. The wicked are represented as lurking privily for the innocent. It is in this way alone, that they can hope to destroy them, and take their substance; for if their designs were known, proper precautions would be taken against them, for it would be vain to spread the net in the sight of those birds which men wish to ensnare. Attend therefore to my counsels, and they shall never be able to ensnare thee.

Verse 18. They lay wait for their own blood] I believe it is the innocent who are spoken of here; for whose blood and lives these lay wait and lurk privily: certainly not their own, by any mode of construction.

21 She crieth in the chief place of concourse, in the openings of the gates: in the city she uttereth her words, saying,

22 How long, ye simple ones, will ye love simplicity? and the scorners delight in their scorning, and fools hate knowledge?

23 Turn you at my reproof: behold, [d] I will pour out my spirit unto you, I will make known my words unto you.

24 [e] Because I have called, and ye refused; I have stretched out my hand, and no man regarded;

Verse 19. Which taketh away the life] A covetous man is in effect, and in the sight of God, a murderer: he wishes to get all the gain that can accrue to any or all who are in the same business that he follows; no matter to him how many families starve in consequence. This is the very case with him who sets up shop after shop, in different parts of the same town or neighbourhood, in which he carries on the same business, and endeavours to undersel others in the same trade, that he may get all into his own hand.

Verse 20. Wisdom crieth] Here wisdom is again personified, as it is frequently, throughout this book: where nothing is meant but the teachings given to man either by Divine Revelation, or the voice of the Holy Spirit in the heart. And this voice of wisdom, is opposed to the seducing language of the wicked mentioned above. This voice is every where heard—in public, in private, in the streets, and in the house. Common sense, universal experience, and the law of justice written on the heart, as well as the law of God, testify against rapine and wrong of every kind.

Verse 22. Ye simple ones] פתים petim, ye who have been seduced and deceived. See on ver. 4.

Verse 23. Turn ye at my reproof] לתוכחתי le-chokachti, at my convincing mode of arguing;—attend to my demonstrations. This is properly the meaning of the original word.

I will pour out my spirit unto you] I wil expresse my mynde unto you. COVERDALE. Loo I shal brynge forth to you my Spirit. Old. MS. Bible. If you will hear, ye shall have ample instruction.

Verse 24. Because I have called] These and the following words appear to be spoken of the persons who are described ver. 11—19. who have refused to return from their evil ways till arrested by the hand of justice; and here the wise man points out their deplorable state.

They are now about to suffer, according to the demands of the law, for their depredations. They now wish they had been guided by wisdom, and had chosen the fear of the Lord: but it is too late;—die they must, for their crimes are proved against them; and justice knows nothing of mercy.

This, or something like this, must be the wise man's meaning; nor can any thing spoken here be considered as applying, or applicable, to the eternal state of the persons in question: much less to the case of any man convinced of sin, who is crying to God for mercy. Such persons as the above, condemned to die, may call upon justice for pardon; and they may do this early, earnestly: but they will call in vain. But no poor penitent sinner, on this side of eternity, can call upon God early, or seek Him through Christ Jesus earnestly for the pardon of his sins, without being heard. Life is the time of probation and while it lasts the vilest of the vile is within the reach of mercy. It is only in eternity, that the state is irreversibly fixed, and where that which was guilty must be guilty still. But let none harden his heart because of this long-suffering of God; for if he die in his sin, where God is, he shall never come. And when once shut up in the unquenchable fire, he will not pray for mercy, as he shall clearly see and feel that the hope of his redemption is eternally cut off.

Verse 27. Your destruction cometh as a whirlwind] כסופה ke-suphah, as the all-prostrating blast: sense and sound are here well expressed. Suph-ah here is the gust of wind.

Verse 29. They hated knowledge] This argues the deepest degree of intellectual and moral depravity.

Verse 32. For the turning away of the simple] This difficult place seems to refer to such a case as we term turning king's evidence; where an accomplice saves his own life by discovering on the rest of his gang. This is called his turning or repentance, משובת meshubath; and he was the most likely to turn, because he was one of the פתים petim, seduced or deceived persons. And this evidence was given against them when they were in their prosperity, שלות shalevath, their security, enjoying the fruits of their depredations: and, being thus in a state of fancied security, they were more easily taken and brought to justice.

Verse 33. But whoso hearkeneth unto me shall dwell safely] The man hears the voice of wisdom in preference to the enticements of the wicked. He shall dwell in safety, ישכן-בטח yishcan-betach, he shall inhabit safety itself; he shall be completely safe and secure; and shall be quiet from the fear of evil; having a full consciousness of his own innocence and God's protection. Coverdale translates, And have ynough without eney feare of evell. What the just man has, he got honestly; and he has the blessing of God upon it.

NOTES ON CHAP. II.

Verse 1. My son] Here the tutor still continues to instruct his disciple.

Hide my commandments with thee] Treasure them up in thy heart, and then act from them through the medium of thy affections. He who has the rule of his duty only in his Bible, and in his head, is not likely to be a steady consistent character: his heart is not engaged; and his obedience in any case can be only forced, or done from a sense of duty. It is not the obedience of a loving dutiful child to an affectionate father. But he who has the word of God in his heart, works from his heart: his heart goes with him in all things; and he delights to do the will of his heavenly Father, because his law is in his heart. See chap. iii. ver. 3.

Verse 4. If thou seekest her as silver] How do men seek money? What will they not do to get rich?—Reader, seek the salvation of thy soul as earnestly as the covetous man seeks wealth: and be ashamed of thyself, if thou be less in earnest after the true riches, than they are after perishing wealth.

Hid treasures] The original word signifies property of any kind concealed in the earth, in caves or such like; and may also mean treasures, such as the precious metals, or precious stones, which are presumptively known to exist in such and such mines. And how are these sought? Learn from the following circumstance:—In the Brazils, slaves are employed to scrape up the soil from the bed of the Rio Janeiro: and wash it carefully, in order to find particles of gold and dia- monds: and it is a law of the state, that he who finds a diamond of so many carats shall have his freedom. This causes the greatest ardour and diligence in searching, washing out the soil, picking, &c. in order to find such diamonds; and the greatest anxiety for success: so precious is liberty to the human heart. This species of searching for gold and precious stones is alluded to in chap. iii. ver. 13—15. In this way Solomon wishes men to seek for wisdom, knowledge, and understanding: and he who succeeds, finds the liberty of the children of God; and is saved from the slavery of sin, and the empire of death.

Verse 7. He layeth up sound wisdom] תושיה tushiyah. We have met with this word in Job; see chap. v. 12., vi. 13., xi. 6., xii. 16. See especially the note on Job xi. 6. where the different acceptations of the word are given. Coverdale translates, He preserveth the welfare of the righteous. It is difficult to find, in any language, a term proper to express the original meaning of the word; it seems to mean generally, the essence or substance of a thing—THE thing itself—that which is chief of its kind. He layeth up what is essential for the righteous.

Verse 9. Then shalt thou understand] He who is taught of God understands the whole law of justice, mercy, righteousness, and truth. God wrote this on his heart. He who understands these things by books only, is never likely to practise or profit by them.

Verse 11. Discretion shall preserve thee] מזמה mizmah. See on chap. i. 4. Here the word is taken in a good sense; a good device. The man invents purposes of good; and all his schemes, plans, and devices, have for their object God's glory and the good of man: he deviseth liberal things, and by liberal things he shall stand. Coverdale translates, Then shall COUNSEL preserve thee. A very good translation, much better than the present.

Verse 12. The man that speaketh froward things] תהפכות tahpucoth, things of subversion, from תפך taphac, to turn or change the course of a thing. Men who wish to subvert the state of things, whether civil or religious. Who are seditious themselves, and wish to make others so. These speak much of liberty and oppression; deal greatly in broad assertions; and endeavour especially to corrupt the minds of youth.

Verse 16. The stranger which flattereth with her words] החליקה he-chelikah, she that smooths with her words. The original intimates the glib oily speeches of a prostitute. The English lick is supposed to be derived from the original word.

Verse 17. Which forsaketh the guide of her youth] Leaves her father's house, and his instructions, and abandons herself to the public.

The covenant of her God.] Abandons the true religion, and mixes with idolaters; for among them prostitution was enormous. Or, by the covenant may be meant the matrimonial contract, which is a covenant made in the presence of God between the contracting parties, in which they bind themselves to be faithful to each other.

Verse 18. For her house inclineth unto death] It is generally in bye and secret places, where such women establish themselves. They go out of the high road to get a residence; and every step that is taken towards their house is a step towards death. The path of sin is the path of ruin: the path of duty is the way of safety. For her paths incline unto the dead, רפאים rephayim, the inhabitants of the invisible world. The woman who abandons herself to prostitution soon contracts, and generally communicates, that disease which, above all others, signs the speediest and most effectual passport to the invisible world. Therefore, it is said,

Verse 19. None that go unto her return again] There are very few instances of prostitutes ever returning to the paths of sobriety and truth; perhaps not one of such as become prostitutes through a natural propensity to debauchery. Among those who have been deceived, bebauched, and abandoned, many have been reclaimed; and, to such alone, penitentiaries may be useful: but to the others, they may be incentives to further sinning. Rakes and debauchees are sometimes converted: but most of THEM never lay hold on the path of life; they have their health destroyed, and never recover it. The original חיים chayim, means lives: not only the health of the body is destroyed, but the soul is ruined. Thus the unhappy man may be said to be doubly slain.

Verse 20. That thou mayest walk] "Therefore thou shalt walk."

Verse 22. Transgressors] בוגדים bogadim. The garment men, the hypocrites, those who act borrowed characters—who go under a cloak;—dissemblers. All such shall be rooted out of the land: they shall not be blest with posterity. In general it is so: and, were it not so, one evil offspring succeeding another, adding their own to their predecessors' vices, the earth would become so exceedingly corrupt, that a second flood, or a fire, would be necessary to purge it.

thee credit for sincerity and uprightness. Though religion is frequently persecuted, and religious people suffer at first, where they are not fully known; yet a truly religious and benevolent character will in general be prized wherever it is well known. The envy of men is a proof of the excellence of that which they envy.

Verse 5. Trust in the LORD with all thine heart] This is a most important precept: 1. God is the Fountain of all good. 2. He has made his intelligent creatures dependent upon Himself. 3. He requires them to be conscious of that dependence. 4. He has promised to communicate what they need. 5. He commands them to believe His promise, and look for its fulfilment. 6. And to do this without doubt, fear, or distrust, with their whole heart.

Lean not unto thine own understanding] אל־תשען al-tishaân, do not prop thyself. It is on GOD, not thyself, that thou art commanded to depend. He who trusts in his own heart is a fool.

Verse 6. In all thy ways acknowledge him] Begin, continue, and end every work, purpose, and device, with God. Earnestly pray for His direction on the commencement; look for His continued support in the progress; and so begin and continue, that all may terminate in His glory: and then it will certainly be to thy good; for we never honour God, without serving ourselves. This passage is well rendered in my old MS. Bible:—Have trost in the Lord of all thin herte and ne lene thou to thi prudence: in alle thi weyes; think hym, and he shal right rulen thi goynges; ne be thou wiis anentis thiself. Self-sufficiency and self-dependence have been the ruin of mankind ever since the fall of Adam. The grand sin of the human race is their continual endeavour to live independently of God: i. e. to be without God in the world. True religion consists in considering God the Fountain of all good; and expecting all good from Him.

Verse 8. It shall be health to thy navel] We need not puzzle ourselves to find out what we may suppose to be a more delicate meaning for the original word שר shar, than navel: but I am satisfied a more proper cannot be found. It is well known that it is by the umbilical cord that the fœtus receives its nourishment all the time that it is in the womb of its mother. It receives nothing by the mouth, nor by any other means: by this alone all nourishment is received, and the circulation of the blood kept up. When, therefore, the wise man says, that trusting in the Lord with the whole heart, and acknowledging him in all a man's ways, &c. shall be health to the navel, and marrow to the bones; he in effect says, that this is as essential to the life of God in the soul of man, and to the continual growth in grace, as the umbilical cord is to the life and growth of the fœtus in the womb. Without the latter, no human being could ever exist, or be born; without the former, no true religion can ever be found. Trust or faith in God is as necessary to derive grace from Him to nourish the soul, and cause it to grow up unto eternal life; as the navel string or umbilical cord is to the human being in the first stage of its existence. I need not push this illustration further: the good sense of the reader will supply what he knows. I might add much on the subject.

And marrow to thy bones.] This metaphor is not less proper than the preceding. All the larger bones of the body have either a large cavity, or they are spongious, and full of little cells: in both the one and the other the oleaginous substance called marrow, is contained in proper vesicles, like the fat. In the larger bones the fine oil, by the gentle heat of the body, is exhaled through the pores of its small vesicles, and enters some narrow passages which lead to certain fine canals excavated in the substance of the bone, that the marrow may supply the fibres of the bones, and render them less liable to break. Blood vessels also penetrate the bones to supply this marrow, and this blood; and consequently the marrow is supplied in the infant by means of the umbilical cord. From the marrow diffused, as mentioned above, through the bones, they derive their solidity and strength. A simple experiment will cast considerable light on the use of the marrow to the bones:—Calcine a bone, so as to destroy all the marrow from the cells: you will find it exceedingly brittle. Immerse the same bone in oil so that the cells may be all replenished, which will be done in a few minutes; and the bone reacquires a considerable measure of its solidity and strength; and would acquire the whole, if the marrow could be extracted without otherwise injuring the texture of the bone. After the calcination, the bone may be reduced to powder by the hand; after the impregnation with the oil, it becomes hard, compact, and strong. As the marrow is to the support and strength of the bones, and the bones to the support and strength of the body; so is faith in God to the support, strength, energy, and salvation, of the soul. Behold then the force and elegance of the wise man's metaphor. Some have rendered the last clause, a lotion for the bones! What is this? How are the bones washed? What a pitiful destruction of a most beautiful metaphor.

Verse 9. Honour the LORD with thy substance] The מנחה MINGHAH or gratitude offering to God, commanded under the law, is of endless obligation. It would be well to give a portion of the produce of every article by which we get our support, to God, or to the poor, the representatives of Christ. This might be done either in kind, or by the worth in money. Whatever God sends us, in the way of secular prosperity, there is a portion in it always for the poor, and for God's cause. When that portion is thus disposed of, the rest is sanctified: when it is withheld, God's curse is upon the whole. Give to the poor; and God will give to thee.

Verse 11. Despise not the chastening of the LORD] The word מוסר musar, signifies correction, discipline, and instruction. Teaching is essentially necessary to show the man the way in which he is to go: discipline is necessary to render a teaching effectual; and often correction is requisite, in order to bring the mind into submission, without which it cannot acquire knowledge. Do not therefore reject this procedure of God: humble thyself under His mighty hand, and open thy eyes to thy own interest; and then thou wilt learn speedily and effectually. It is of no use to rebel: if thou do, thou kickest against the pricks; and every act of rebellion against Him is a wound to thine own soul. God will either end thee, or mend thee:—wilt thou then kick on?

Verse 12. Whom the LORD loveth] To encourage thee to bear correction, know that it is a proof of God's love to thee; and that thereby He shows that He treats thee as a father doth his son; even that one to whom he bears the fondest affection.

The last clause the Septuagint translate, μαστιγοι δε παντα υιον ον παραδεχεται, and chasteneth every son whom he receiveth. And the apostle, Heb. xii. 6. quotes this literatim. Both clauses certainly amount to the same sense. Every son whom he receiveth, and the son in whom he delighteth, have very little difference of meaning.

Verse 13. Happy is the man that findeth wisdom] This refers to the advice given in chap. ii. 4. where see the note.

Verse 14. For the merchandise] מסחר misuchar, the traffic, the trade that is carried on by going through countries and provinces, with such articles as they could carry on the backs of camels, &c. from סחר sachar, to go about, traverse. Chaffarynge, Old MS. Bible.

And the gain thereof] תבואתה tebuatah, its produce; what is gained by the articles after all expenses are paid. The slaves, as we have already seen, got their liberty if they were so lucky as to find a diamond of so many carats' weight: he who finds wisdom, the knowledge and salvation of God, gets a greater prize; for he obtains the liberty of the Gospel, is adopted into the family of God, and made an heir according to the hope of an eternal life.

Verse 15. She is more precious than rubies] מפנינים mipeninim. The word principally means pearls; but may be taken for precious stones, in general. The root is פנה panah, he looked, beheld; and, as it gives the idea of the eye always being turned towards the observer, Mr. Parkhurst thinks, that it means the load stone: see the note on Job xxviii. 18. where the subject is considered at large. If the oriental ruby, or any other precious stone, be intended here, the word may refer to their being cut and polished, so that they present different faces, and reflect the light to you in whatever direction you may look at them.

All the things thou canst desire] Superior to every thing that can be an object of desire here below. But who believes this?

Verse 16. Length of days is in her right hand] A wicked man shortens his days by excesses; a righteous man prolongs his by temperance.

Her left hand riches and honour.] That is, her hands are full of the choicest benefits. There is nothing to be understood here by the right hand in preference to the left.

Verse 17. Her ways are ways of pleasantness] These blessings of true religion require little comment. They are well expressed by the poet in the following elegant verses:

Of wisdom's costly merchandise?

WESLEY.

Verse 18. She is a tree of life] עץ חיים ets chayim, "the tree of lives," alluding most manifestly to the tree so called, which God, in the beginning, planted in the garden of Paradise, by the eating of whose fruit all the wastes of nature might have been continually supplied, so as to have prevented death for ever. This is an opinion which appears probable enough. The blessings which wisdom, true religion, give to men, preserve them in life, comfort them through life, cause them to triumph in death, and insure them a glorious immortality.

Verse 19. The LORD by wisdom hath founded the earth] Here wisdom is taken in its proper acceptation, for that infinite knowledge and skill which God has manifested in the creation and composition of the earth, and in the structure and economy of the heavens. He has established the order, as well as the essence, of all things; so that though they vary in their position, &c. yet they never change either their places or their properties. Composition and analysis are not essential changes; the original particles, their forms and properties, remain the same.

Verse 20. By his knowledge the depths are broken up] He determined in His wisdom how to break up the fountains of the great deep, so as to bring a flood of waters upon the earth; and by His knowledge those fissures in the earth, through which springs of water arise, have been appointed and determined; and it is by His skill and influence that vapours are exhaled, suspended in the atmosphere, and afterward precipitated on the earth in rain, dews, &c. Thus the wisest of men attributes those effects which we suppose to spring from natural causes, to the Supreme Being Himself.

Verse 21. Let them not depart from thine eyes] Never forget that God, who is the Author of nature, directs and governs it in all things; for it is no self determining agent.

Keep sound wisdom and discretion] תושיה ומזמה tushiah umizmah. We have met with both these words before. Tushiah is the essence or substance of a thing; mizmah is the resolution or purpose formed in reference to something good or excellent. To acknowledge God as the Author of all good, this is the tushiah, this is the essence of a godly man's creed: to resolve to act according to the directions of His wisdom, is the mizmah, the religious purpose that will bring good to ourselves, and glory to our God. These bring life to the soul, and are ornamental to the man who acts in this way, ver. 22.

Verse 24. When thou liest down] In these verses (23—26) the wise man shows the confidence, security, and safety, which proceed from a consciousness of innocence. Most people are afraid to sleep, lest they should never awake, because they feel they are not prepared to appear before God. They are neither innocent, nor pardoned. True believers know that God is their Keeper night and day: they have strong confidence in Him that He will be their Director, and not suffer them to take any false step in life, verse 23. They go to rest in perfect confidence that God will watch over them: hence their sleep, being undisturbed with foreboding and evil dreams, is sweet and refreshing, ver. 24. They are not apprehensive of any sudden destruction, because they know that all things are under the control of God; and they are satisfied, that if sudden destruction should fall upon their wicked neighbour, yet God knows well how to preserve them, ver. 25. And all this naturally flows from the Lord being their confidence, ver. 26.

They are the right owners of every farthing thou hast to spare from thy own support, and that of thy family; and God has given the surplus for their sakes. Dost thou, by hoarding up this treasure, deprive the right owners of their property? If this were a civil case, the law would take thee by the throat, and lay thee up in prison: but it is a case in which God alone judges. And what will He do to thee? Hear! He shall have judgment without mercy, who hath showed no mercy. James ii. 13. Read, feel, tremble, and act justly.

Verse 28. Say not unto thy neighbour] Do not refuse a kindness when it is in thy power to perform it. If thou have the means by thee, and thy neighbour's necessities be pressing, do not put him off till the morrow: death may take either him or thee before that time.

Verse 30. Strive not with a man] Do not be of a litigious, quarrelsome spirit. Be not under the influence of too nice a sense of honour. If thou must appeal to judicial authority to bring him that wrongs thee to reason, avoid all enmity, and do nothing in a spirit of revenge. But, if he have done thee no harm, why contend with him? May not others in the same way, contend with and injure thee?

Verse 31. Envy thou not the oppressor] O how bewitching is power! Every man desires it; and yet all hate tyrants. But query;—if all had power, would not the major part be tyrants?

Verse 32. But his secret] סודו sodo, his secret assembly;—godly people meet there, and God dwells there.

Verse 33. The curse of the Lord] No godly people meet in such a house; nor is God ever an inmate there.

But he blesseth the habitation of the just.] He considers it as His own temple. There He is worshipped in spirit and in truth; and hence God makes it His dwelling place.

Verse 34. Surely he scorneth the scorners: but he giveth grace unto the lowly.] The Septuagint has Κυριος υπερφανοις αντιτασσεται, ταπεινοις δε διδωσει χαριν. The Lord resisteth the proud: but giveth grace to the humble. These words are quoted by St. Peter, chap. v. 5., and by St. James, chap. iv. 6. precisely as they are in the Septuagint, with the change of ὁ Θεος, God, for Κυριος, the Lord.

Verse 35. The wise] The person who follows the dictates of wisdom, as mentioned above, shall inherit glory; because being one of the heavenly family, a child of God, he has thereby heaven for his inheritance: but fools, such as those mentioned, chap. i. and ii. shall have ignominy for their exaltation. Many such fools as Solomon speaks of are exalted to the gibbet and gallows. The way to prevent this and the like evils, is to attend to the voice of wisdom.

NOTES ON CHAP. IV.

Verse 1. Hear, ye children] Come my pupils, and hear how a father instructed his child. Such as I received from my father I give to you: and they were the teachings of a wise and affectionate parent to his only son; a peculiar object of his regards, and also those of a fond mother.

He introduces the subject thus, to show that the teaching he received, and which he was about to give them, was the most excellent of its kind. By this he ensured their attention, and made his way to their heart. Teaching by precept is good; teaching by example is better: but teaching both by precept and example is best of all.

Verse 4. He taught me also, and said] Open thy heart to receive my instructions—receive them with affection. When heard, retain and practise them, and thou shalt live: the great purpose of thy being brought into the world shall be accomplished in thee.

Verse 5. Get wisdom] True religion is essential to thy happiness; never forget its teachings, nor go aside from the path it prescribes.

Verse 6. Forsake her not] Wisdom personified is here represented as a guardian and companion, who, if not forsaken, will continue faithful; if loved, will continue a protector.

Verse 7. Wisdom is the principal thing] ראשית חכמה reshith chocmah, wisdom is the principle. It is the punctum saliens in all religion to know the true God, and what He requires of man, and for what He has made man: and to this must be added, under the Christian dispensation, to know Jesus Christ whom he hath sent, and for what end HE was sent, the necessity of His being sent; and the nature of that salvation which He has bought by his own blood.

Get wisdom] Consider this as thy chief gain; that in reference to which all thy wisdom, knowledge, and endeavours, should be directed.

And with all thy getting] Let this be thy chief property; and while thou art passing through things temporal, do not lose those things which are eternal: and, while diligent in business, be fervent in spirit, serving the Lord.

Get understanding] Do not be contented with the lessons of wisdom merely; do not be satisfied with having a sound religious creed; devils believe and tremble: but see that thou properly comprehend all that thou hast learnt; and see that thou rightly apply all that thou hast been taught.

Wisdom prescribes the best end, and the means best calculated for its attainment. Understanding directs to the ways, times, places, and opportunities, of practising the lessons of wisdom. Wisdom points out the thing requisite; understanding sees to the accomplishment and attainment. Wisdom sees:—but understanding feels. One discovers, the other possesses.

Coverdale translates this whole verse in a very remarkable manner:—The chefe poynte of wyssdome is, that thou be wyllynge to opteyne wysdome; and before all thy goodes to get the understandynge.

The translation in my old MS. Bible is very simple:—Begynnynge of wisdam, welle thou wisdam: in al thi wisdam, and in al thi possioun, purchas prudence. He is already wise who seeks wisdom; and he is wise who knows its value, and seeks to possess it. The whole of this verse is wanting in the Arabic, and in the best copies of the Septuagint.

Instead of קנה חכמה keneh chocmah, "get wisdom," the Complutensian Polyglott has קנה בינה kenah binah, "get understanding:" so that in it the verse stands, Wisdom is the principle, get understanding: and in all thy getting, get understanding. This is not an error either of the scribe, or of the press, for it is supported by seven of the MSS. of Kennicott and De Rossi.

The Complutensian, Antwerp, and Paris Polyglotts have the seventh verse in the Greek text: but the two latter, in general, copy the former.

Verse 8. She shall bring thee to honour] There is nothing, a strict life of piety and benevolence excepted, that has such a direct tendency to reflect honour upon a man, as the careful cultivation of his mind. One of Bacon's aphorisms was, knowledge is power; and it is truly astonishing to see what influence true learning has. Nothing is so universally respected, provided the learned man be a consistent moral character.

Verse 9. A crown of glory] A tiara, diadem, or crown, shall not be more honourable to the princely wearer, than sound wisdom, true religion, coupled with deep learning, shall be to the Christian and the scholar.

Verse 10. The years of thy life shall be many.] Vice and intemperance impair the health, and shorten the days, of the wicked; while true religion, sobriety, and temperance, prolong them. The principal part of our diseases springs from "indolence, intemperance, and disorderly passions." Religion excites to industry, promotes sober habits, and destroys evil passions, and harmonizes the soul; and thus, by preventing many diseases, must necessarily protract life.

Verse 12. Thy steps shall not be straitened] True wisdom will teach thee to keep out of embarrassments. A man under the influence of true religion ponders his paths, and carefully poises occurring circumstances: and as the fear of God will ever lead him to act an upright and honest part, so his way in business and life is both clear and large; he has no bye ends to serve; he speculates not; and uses neither trick nor cunning to effect any purpose. Such a man can never be embarrassed. His steps are not straitened; he sees his way always plain; and when a favourable tide of providence shows him the necessity of increased exertion, he runs, and is in no danger of stumbling.

Verse 13. Take fast hold] החזק ha-chazek, seize it strongly, and keep the hold: and do this as for life. Learn all thou canst, retain what thou hast learnt; and keep the reason continually in view: it is for thy life.

Verse 14. Enter not into the path of the wicked] Never associate with those whose life is irregular and sinful; never accompany them in any of their acts of transgression.

Verse 15. Avoid it] Let it be the serious purpose of thy soul to shun every appearance of evil.

Pass not by it] Never for the sake of worldly gain, or through complaisance to others, approach the way that thou wouldst not wish to be found in when God calls thee into the eternal world.

Turn from it] If, through unwatchfulness or unfaithfulness, thou at any time get near, or into the way of sin, turn from it with the utmost speed, and humble thyself before thy Maker.

And pass away.] Speed from it, run for thy life; and get to such a distance, eternally diverging so as never to come near it whilst thou hast a being.

Verse 16. Except they have done mischief] The night is their time for spoil and depredation. And they must gain some booty before they go to rest. This I believe to be the meaning of the passage. I grant also that there may be some of so malevolent a disposition, that they cannot be easy unless they can injure others; and are put to excessive pain when they perceive any man in prosperity, or receiving a kindness. The address, in Virgil, to an ill-natured shepherd is well known.

Et cùm vidisti puero donata, dolebas:
Et si non aliqua nocuisses, mortuus esses.

"When thou sawest the gifts given to the lad, thou wast distressed; and hadst thou not found some means of doing him a mischief, thou hadst died."

Verse 17. For they eat the bread of wickedness] By privately stealing.

And drink the wine of violence.] By highway robbery.

Verse 18. But the path of the just] The path of the wicked is gloomy, dark, and dangerous; that of the righteous is open, luminous, and instructive. The verse contains a fine metaphor. It refers to the sun rising above the horizon, and the increasing twilight, till his beams shine full upon the earth. The original תולך ואור עד נכון היום tolec va-or âd nccon hai-yom, may be translated, "going and illuminating unto the prepared day." This seems plainly to refer to the progress of the sun towards the horizon; and the gradual increase of the light occasioned by the reflection of his rays by means of the atmosphere, till at last he is completely elevated above the horizon, and then the prepared day has fully taken place, the sun having risen at the determined time. So, the truly wise man is but in his twilight here below: but he is in a state of glorious preparation for the realms of everlasting light; till at last, emerging from darkness and the shadows of death, he is ushered into the full blaze of endless felicity. Yet, previously to his enjoyment of this glory, which is prepared for him, he is going, walking in the commandments of his God blameless; and illuminating, reflecting the light of the salvation which he has received on all those who form the circle of his acquaintance.

For out of it are the issues of life.] תוצאות חיים totsoth chayim, the goings out of lives. Is not this a plain allusion to the arteries, which carry the blood from the heart through the whole body, and to the utmost extremities. As long as the heart is capable of receiving and propelling the blood, so long life is continued. Now, as the heart is the fountain whence all the streams of life proceed, care must be taken that the fountain be not stopped up or injured. A double watch for its safety must be kept up. So in spiritual things: the heart is the seat of the Lord of life and glory; and the streams of spiritual life proceed from Him to all the powers and faculties of the soul. Watch with all diligence, that this fountain be not sealed up, nor these streams of life be cut off. Therefore, put away from thee a froward mouth, and perverse lips; and let thy eyes look straight on. Or, in other words, look inward—look onward—look upward.

I know that the twenty-third verse is understood as principally referring to the evils which proceed from the heart, and which must be guarded against; and the good purposes which must be formed in it, from which life takes its colouring. The former should be opposed, the latter should be carefully encouraged and strengthened. If the heart be pure and holy, all its purposes will be just and good. If it be impure and defiled, nothing will proceed from it but abomination. But though all this be true, I have preferred following what I believe to be the metaphor in the text.

Verse 24. A froward mouth] Beware of hastiness, anger, and rash speeches.

And perverse lips] Do not delight in, nor acquire the habit of contradicting and gainsaying; and beware of calumniating and backbiting your neighbour.

Verse 26. Ponder the path of thy feet] Weigh well the part thou shouldst act in life. See that thou contract no bad habits.

Verse 27. Turn not to the right hand, nor to the left] Avoid all crooked ways. Be an upright, downright, and straight forward man. Avoid tricks, wiles, and deceptions, of every kind.

To this the Septuagint and Vulgate add the following verse: —Αυτος δε ορθας ποιησει τας τροχιας σου, τας δε πορειας σου εν ειρηνη προαξει. Ipse autem rectos faciet cursus tuos; itinera autem tua in pace producet. "For Himself will make thy paths straight, and thy journeyings will he conduct in prosperity." The Arabic has also a clause to the same effect. But nothing like this is found in the Hebrew, Chaldee, or Syriac; nor in the Vulgate, as printed in the Complutensian Polyglott; nor in those of Antwerp and Paris: but they are in the Greek text of those editions, in the Editio Princeps of the Vulgate, in five of my own MSS., and in the Old MS. Bible. De Lyra rejects the clause as a gloss that stands on no authority. If an addition, it is certainly very ancient; and the promise it contains is true, whether the clause be authentic or not.

NOTES ON CHAP. V.

Verse 1. Attend unto my wisdom] Take the following lessons from my own experience.

Verse 3. The lips of a strange woman] One that is not thy own, whether Jewess or heathen.

Drop as a honeycomb] Uses the most deceitful, flattering, and alluring speeches:—as the droppings of the honey out of the comb are the sweetest of all.

Verse 4. Bitter as wormwood] לענה כ ke-laânah, like the detestable herb wormwood, or something analogous to it: something as excessive in its bitterness, as honey is in its sweetness.

Verse 5. Her feet go down to death] She first, like a serpent, infuses her poison, by which the whole constitution of her paramour is infected, which soon or late brings on death.

Her steps take hold on hell.] First, the death of the body; and then the damnation of the soul. These are the tendencies of connexions with such women.

Verse 6. Lest thou shouldest ponder] To prevent thee from reflecting on thy present conduct, and its consequences, her ways are moveable; she continually varies her allurements.

Thou canst not know them] It is impossible to conceive all her tricks and wiles: to learn these in all their varieties, is a part of the science first taught in that infernal trade.

Verse 7. Hear me—O ye children] בנים banim, sons, young men in general: for these are the most likely to be deceived and led astray.

Verse 8. Come not nigh the door of her house] Where there are generally such exhibitions as have a natural tendency to excite impure thoughts, and irregular passions.

Verse 9. Lest thou give thine honour] The character of a debauchee is universally detested: by this, even those of noble blood lose their honour and respect.

Thy years unto the cruel] Though all the blandishments of love dwell on the tongue, and the excess of fondness appear in the whole demeanour of the harlot and the prostitute; yet cruelty has its throne in their hearts; and they will rob and murder (when it appears to answer their ends) those who give their strength, their wealth, and their years, to them. The unfaithful wife has often murdered her own husband for the sake of her paramour, and has given him over to justice in order to save herself. Murders have often taken place in brothels, as well as robberies: for the vice of prostitution is one of the parents of cruelty.

Verse 11. When thy flesh and thy body are consumed] The word שאר shaer, which we render body, signifies properly the remains, residue, or remnant of a thing: and is applied here to denote the breathing carcass, putrid with the concomitant disease of debauchery:—a public reproach which the justice of God entails on this species of iniquity. The mourning here spoken of, is of the most excessive kind: the word נהם naham, is often applied to the growling of a lion, and the hoarse incessant murmuring of the sea. In the line of my duty, I have been often called to attend the death-bed of such persons, where groans and shrieks were incessant through the jaculating pains in their bones and flesh.

17 Let them be only thine own, and not strangers' with thee.

18 Let thy fountain be blessed: and rejoice with [c] the wife of thy youth.

19 [d] Let her be as the loving hind and pleasant roe; let her breasts [e] satisfy thee at all times; and [f] be thou ravished always with her love.

20 And why wilt thou, my son, be ravished with [g] a strange woman, and embrace the bosom of a stranger?

21 [h] For the ways of man are before the eyes of the LORD, and he pondereth all his goings.

Whoever has witnessed a closing scene like this will see at once with what force and propriety the wise man speaks. And, how have I hated instruction, and despised the voice of my teachers, in that terrific time is the unavailing cry. Reader, whosoever thou art, lay these things to heart. Do not enter into their sin: once entered, thy return is nearly hopeless.

Verse 14. I was almost in all evil] This vice, like a whirlpool, sweeps all others into its vortex.

In the midst of the congregation and assembly] In the midst of the Church and of the Synagoge. Old MS. Bible. Such persons, however sacred the place, carry about with them eyes full of adultery which cannot cease from sin.

Verse 15. Drink waters out of thine own cistern] Be satisfied with thy own wife; and let the wife see that she reverence her husband; and not tempt him by inattention or unkindness to seek elsewhere what he has a right to expect, but cannot find, at home.

Verse 16. Let thy fountains be dispersed abroad] Let thy children lawfully begotten be numerous.

Verse 17. Let them be thine own] The offspring of a legitimate connexion: a bastard brood, however numerous, is no credit to any man.

Verse 18. Let thy fountain be blessed] יהי מקורך ברוך yehi mekoreca baruc. Sit vena tua benedicta. Thy vein; that which carries off streams from the fountain of animal life, in order to disperse them abroad, and through the streets. How delicate and correct is the allusion here! But anatomical allusions must not be pressed into detail in a commentary on Scripture.

Verse 19. The loving hind and pleasant roe] By אילת ayeleth, the deer; by יאלת yaaleth, the ilex, or mountain goat, may be meant.

Let her breasts satisfy thee] As the infant is satisfied with the breasts of its mother; so shouldst thou be with the wife of thy youth.

Verse 21. For the ways of a man] Whether they be public or private, God sees every step thou takest in life.

Verse 22. He shall be holden with the cords of his sins] Most people who follow unlawful pleasures, think they can give them up whenever they please: but sin repeated becomes customary; custom soon engenders habit: and habit in the end assumes the form of necessity; the man becomes bound with his own cords, and so is led captive by the devil at his will.

Verse 23. He shall die without instruction] This is most likely, and it is a general case: but even these may repent and live.

NOTES ON CHAP. VI.

Verse 1. If thou be surety for thy friend] לרעך le reêca, for thy neighbour; i. e. any person. If thou pledge thyself in behalf of another, thou takest the burden off him, and placest it on thy own shoulders. And when he knows he has got one to stand betwixt him and the demands of law and justice, he will feel little responsibility; his spirit of exertion will become crippled, and listlessness as to the event will take place. His own character will suffer little; his property nothing, for his friend bears all the burthen: and perhaps the very person for whom he bore this burthen treats him with neglect; and, lest the restoration of the pledge should be required, will avoid both the sight and presence of his friend. Give what thou canst: but, except in extreme cases, be surety for no man. Striking or shaking hands when the mouth had once made the promise, was considered the ratification of the engagement: and thus the man became snared with the words of his mouth.

Verse 3. Do this—deliver thyself] Continue to press him for whom thou art become surety, to pay his creditor; give him no rest till he do it, else thou mayest fully expect to be left to pay the debt.

Verse 5. Deliver thyself as a roe] צבי tsebi, the antelope. If thou art got into the snare, get out if thou possibly canst; make every struggle and exertion (as the antelope taken in the net, and the bird taken in the snare would,) in order to get free from thy captivity.

Verse 6. Go to the ant thou sluggard] נמלה nemalah, the ant, is a most remarkable creature for foresight, industry, and economy. At the proper seasons they collect their food, not in the summer to lay up for the winter; for they sleep during the winter, and eat not; and therefore such hoards would be to them useless: but when the food proper for them is in most plenty, then they collect it for their consumption in the proper seasons. No insect is more laborious, not even the bee itself; and none is more fondly attached to, or more careful of their young than the ants. When the young are in their aurelia state, in which they appear like a small grain of rice, they will bring them out of their nests, and lay them near their holes, for the benefit of the sun: and on the approach of rain, carefully remove them, and deposit them in the nest; the hole or entrance to which, they will cover with a piece of thin stone or tile to prevent the wet from getting in. It is a fact that they do not lay up any meat for winter; nor does Solomon either here, or in chap. xxx. 25. assert it. He simply says that they provide their food in summer, and gather it in harvest: these are the most proper times for a stock to be laid in for their consumption; not in winter, for no such thing appears in any of their nests, nor do they need it, as they sleep during that season; but for autumn, during which they wake and work. Spring, summer, and autumn, they are incessant in their labour. And their conduct affords a bright example to men.

Verse 10. Yet a little sleep, a little slumber] This, if not the language, is the feeling, of the sluggard. The ant gathers its food in summer and in harvest, and sleeps in winter when it has no work to do. If the sluggard would work in the day, and sleep at night, it would be all proper. The ant yields him a lesson of reproach.

Verse 11. So shall thy poverty come as one that travelleth] i. e. With slow, but surely approaching steps.

Thy want as an armed man] i. e. With irresistible fury; and thou art not prepared to oppose it. The Vulgate, Septuagint and Arabic, add the following clause to this verse.

But if thou wilt be diligent, thy harvest shall be as a fountain; and poverty shall flee far away from thee.

It is also thus in the Old MS. Bible. If forsothe unslow thou shul ben; shul comen as a welle thi rip; and nede fer shal fleen fro thee.

Verse 12. A naughty person] אדם בליעל Adam Beliâl. "Adam good for nothing." When he lost his innocence. A man apostata, Old MS. Bible.

A wicked man] אִישׁ אָוֶן Ish aven, soon became a general transgressor after he had departed from his God. All his posterity, unless restored by Divine grace, are men of Belial, and sinners by trade; and most of them, in one form or other, answer the character here given. They yield their members instruments of unrighteousness unto sin.

Verse 13. He winketh with his eyes, he speaketh with his feet, he teacheth with his fingers] These things seem to be spoken of debauchees. And the following quotation from Ovid. Amor. lib. 1. El. iv. v. 15., shows the whole process of the villany spoken of by Solomon:—

Cum premit ille torum, vultu comes ipsa modesto
Ibis, ut accumbas: clam mihi tange pedem.
Me specta, nutusque meos, vultumque loquacem.
Excipe furtivas, et refer ipsa notas.
Verba superciliis sine voce, loquentia dicam:
Verba leges digitis, verba notata mero.
Cum tibi succurrit Veneris lascivia nostræ,
Purpureas tenero pollice tange genas, &c. &c.

The whole elegy is in the same strain: it is translated in Garth's Ovid. It cannot be introduced here.

Verse 14. He deviseth mischief] He plots schemes and plans to bring it to pass.

He soweth discord] Between men and their wives, by seducing the latter from their fidelity. See the preceding quotation.

Verse 15. Suddenly shall he be broken] Probably alluding to some punishment of the adulterer, such as being stoned to death. A multitude shall join together, and so overwhelm him with stones, that he shall have his flesh and bones broken to pieces; and there shall be no remedy, none to deliver or pity him.

Verse 16. These six—doth the LORD hate] 1. A proud look—exalted eyes; those who will not condescend to look on the rest of mankind. 2. A lying tongue. He who neither loves nor tells truth. 3. Hands that shed innocent blood, whether by murder or by battery. 4. A heart that deviseth wicked imaginations. The heart that fabricates such, lays the foundation, builds upon it, and completes the superstructure of iniquity. 5. Feet that be swift in running to mischief. He who works iniquity with greediness. 6. A false witness that speaketh lies. One who, even on his oath before a court of justice, tells any thing but the truth.

Seven are an abomination unto him] נַפְשׁוֹ naphsho, "to his soul." The seventh is, him that soweth discord among brethren. He who troubles the peace of a family, of a village, of the state: all who by lies and misrepresentations strive to make men's minds evil affected towards their brethren.

Verse 20. Keep thy father's commandment] See on chap. i. 8.

Verse 21. Bind them continually upon thine heart] See on chap. iii. 3. And see a similar command, to which this is an allusion, Deut. vi. 6—8.

Verse 22. When thou goest, it shall lead thee] Here the law is personified; and is represented as a nurse, teacher, and guardian, by night and day. An upright man never goes but as directed by God's word, and led by God's Spirit.

When thou sleepest] He commends his body and soul to the protection of his Maker when he lies down, and sleeps in peace. And when he awakes in the morning, the promises and mercies of God are the first things that present themselves to his recollection.

Verse 23. For the commandment is a lamp] It illuminates the path. It shows us how we should walk and praise God.

And the law is light] A general light, showing the nature and will of GOD, and the interest and duty of MAN.

And reproofs of instruction] Or, that instruction which reproves us for our sins and errors leads us into the way of life.

Verse 24. To keep thee from the evil woman] Solomon had suffered sorely from this quarter; and hence his repeated cautions and warnings to others. The strange woman, always means one that is not a man's own: and sometimes the flattery [a] of the tongue of a strange woman.

25 [b] Lust not after her beauty in thine heart; neither let her take thee with her eye-lids.

26 For [c] by means of a whorish woman a man is brought to a piece of bread: [d] and [e] the adulteress will [f] hunt for the precious life.

27 Can a man take fire in his bosom, and his clothes not be burned?

28 Can one go upon hot coals, and his feet not be burned?

29 So he that goeth in to his neighbour's wife; whosoever toucheth her shall not be innocent.

it may also imply a foreign harlot, one who is also a stranger to the God of Israel.

Verse 25. Neither let her take thee with her eye-lids] It is a very general custom in the East to paint the eye-lids. I have many Asiatic drawings in which this is expressed. They have a method of polishing the eyes with a preparation of antimony, so that they appear with an indescribable lustre; or, as one who mentions the fact from observation, "Their eyes appear to be swimming in bliss."

Verse 26. By means of a whorish woman] In following lewd women, a man is soon reduced to poverty and disease. The Septuagint gives this a strange turn:—Τιμη γαρ πορνης, ἑως ἑνος ἀρτου. For the price or hire of a whore is about one loaf. So many were they in the land, that they hired themselves out for a bare subsistence. The Vulgate, Syriac, and Arabic, give the same sense. The old MS. Bible has it thus:—The price forsothe of a strumpet is unneth oon luf: the woman forsothe taketh the precious liif of a man. The sense of which is, and probably the sense of the Hebrew too, While the man hires the whore for a single loaf of bread; the woman thus hired, taketh his precious life. She extracts his energy, and poisons his constitution. In the first clause אשה זונה ishah zonah, is plainly a prostitute:—but should we render אשת esheth, in the second clause, an adulteress? I think not. The Versions in general join אשת איש esheth ish, together, which, thus connected, signify no more than the wife of a man; and out of this we have made adulteress, and Coverdale a married woman. I do think that the old MS. Bible gives a good sense; and it requires a good deal of paraphrase to extract the common meaning from the text. Though the following verses seem to countenance the common interpretation; yet they may contain a complete sense of themselves: but, taken in either way, the sense is good, though the construction is a little violent.

Verse 27. Can a man take fire] These were proverbial expressions, the meaning of which was plain to every capacity.

Verse 29. So he that goeth in to his neighbour's wife] As sure as he who takes fire into his bosom, or who walks upon live coals, is burnt thereby; so sure, he that seduces his neighbour's wife shall be guilty. That is, he shall be punished.

Verse 30. Men do not despise a thief, if he steal] Every man pities the poor culprit who was perishing for lack of food, and stole to satisfy his hunger; yet no law clears him: he is bound to make restitution; in some cases double, in others quadruple and quintuple; and if he have not property enough to make restitution, to be sold for a bondman. Exod. xxii. 1—4. Lev. xxv. 39.

Verse 32. But whoso committeth adultery] The case understood is that of a married man: he has a wife; and therefore not in the circumstances of the poor thief, who stole to appease his hunger, having nothing to eat. In this alone the opposition between the two cases is found: the thief had no food, and he stole some; the married man had a wife, and yet went in to the wife of his neighbour.

Destroyeth his own soul] Sins against his life; for, under the law of Moses, adultery was punished with death. Lev. xx. 10. Deut. xxii. 22.

Verse 33. A wound and dishonour shall he get] Among the Romans, when a man was caught in the fact, the injured husband took the law into his own hand; and a large radish was thrust up into the anus of the transgressor, which not only overwhelmed him with infamy and disgrace, but generally occasioned his death.

Verse 34. Jealousy is the rage of a man: therefore he will not spare] He will not, when he has detected the adulterer in the fact, wait for the slow progress of the law: it is then to him the day of vengeance; and, in general he avenges himself on the spot, as we see above.

Verse 35. He will not regard any ransom] This is an injury that admits of no compensation. No gifts can satisfy a man for the injury his honour has sustained; and to take a bribe, or a ransom, would be setting up chastity at a price.

NOTES ON CHAP. VII.

Verse 1. My son, keep my words] See chap. ii. 1.

Verse 2. As the apple of thine eye] As the pupil of the eye, which is of such essential necessity to sight, and so easily injured.

Verse 3. Bind them upon thy fingers] See on chap. iii. 3.

Verse 4. Thou art my sister] Thou art my dearest friend, and I will treat thee as such.

Verse 5. The strange woman] The prostitute, the adulteress.

Verse 6. I looked through my casement] The casement is a small aperture in a large window, or a window opening on hinges. Here it means the lattice, for they had no glass windows in the East. And the latticed windows produced a double advantage: 1. making the apartments sufficiently private; and, 2. admitting fresh air to keep them cool.

Verse 7. Among the simple ones] The inexperienced, inconsiderate young men.

A young man void of understanding] חסר לב chaser lib, "destitute of a heart." He had not wisdom to discern the evil intended; nor courage to resist the flatteries of the seducer.

Verse 8. He went the way to her house] She appears to have had a corner house sufficiently remarkable; and a way from the main street to it.

Verse 9. In the twilight, in the evening] Some time after sun-setting; before it was quite dark.

In the black and dark night] When there were neither lamps nor moon-shine.

Verse 10. A woman with the attire of a harlot] It appears that sitting in some open place, and covering the face, or having a vail of a peculiar kind on, was the evidence of a harlot, Gen. xxxviii. 14, 15—19. No doubt in Solomon's time they had other distinctions. In all other countries, and in all times, the show of their countenance did testify against them; they declared their sin as Sodom: they hid it not. However, this does not seem to have been a mere prostitute; for she was, according to her own declaration, a married woman, and kept house, ver. 19. If her assertions relative to this, were not falsehoods, and calculated the better to render him secure, and prevent the suspicion of endangering himself by cohabiting with a common woman; which I am rather inclined to think was the case, for she was subtle of heart.

Verse 11. She is loud and stubborn] המיה homaiyaa, she is never at rest, always agitated; busily employed to gain her end, and this is to go into the path of error: סררת sorareth, "turning aside;" preferring any way to the right way. And, therefore, it is added, her feet abide not in her house; she gads abroad: and this disposition probably first led her to this vice.

Verse 12. Now is she without] She is continually exposing herself, and showing by her gait and gestures what she is, and what she wants. These two verses are a paren- thesis, intended to show the character of the woman in question.

Verse 13. So she caught him] Laid fast hold on him, and kissed him, to show that she was affectionately attached to him.

And with an impudent face] העזה פניה he-êzah paneiah, she strengthened her countenance, assumed the most confident look she could; endeavoured to appear friendly and sincere.

Verse 14. I have peace-offerings with me] More literally, "the sacrifices of the peace-offerings are with me." Peace-offerings שלמים shelamim, were offerings, the spiritual design of which was to make peace between God and man, to make up the breach between them, which sin had occasioned: see the Notes on Lev. vii. where every kind of sacrifice offered under the law is explained. When the blood of these was poured out at the altar, and the fat burnt there, the breast and right shoulder were the priest's portion; but the rest of the carcass belonged to the sacrificer, who might carry it home, and make a feast to his friends. See Lev. iii. 1—11.

Have I made my vows] She seems to insinuate that she had made a vow for the health and safety of this young man; and having done so, and prepared the sacrificial banquet, came actually out to seek him, that he might partake of it with her, ver. 15. But, as she intended to proceed further than mere friendship, she was obliged to avail herself of the night season, and the absence of her husband.

Verse 16. I have decked my bed] ערשי aresi, my couch, or sopha; distinguished from משכבי mishcabi, "my bed," ver. 17., the place to sleep on, as the other was the place to recline on at meals. The tapestry, רבדים rabedim, mentioned here, seems to refer to the covering of the sopha; exquisitely woven and figured cloth. חטבות אטון chatuboth etun, the Targum translates painted carpets, such as were manufactured in Egypt; some kind of embroidered or embossed stuff is apparently meant.

Verse 17. I have perfumed my bed with myrrh] מר mor; aloes, אהלים ahalim; and cinnamon, קנמון kinnamon. We have taken our names from the original words: but probably the ahalim may not mean aloes, which is no perfume; but sandal wood, which is very much used in the East. She had used every means to excite the passions she wished to bring into action.

Verse 18. Come, let us take our fill of love] נרוה דדים nirveh dudim, "Let us revel in the breasts:" and then it is added, let us solace ourselves with loves, נתעלסה באהבים nithalesah be-ahabim; let us gratify each other with loves, with the utmost delights. This does not half express the original: but I forbear. The speech shows the brazen face of this woman, well translated by the Vulgate, Veni, inebriemur uberibus; et fruamur cupidinis amplexibus. And the Septuagint has expressed the spirit of it:—Ελθε, και απολαυσωμεν φιλιας—δευρο, και εγκυλισθωμεν ερωτι. Veni, et fruamur amicitiâ—Veni, et colluctemur cupidine. Though varied in the words, all the Versions have expressed the same thing. In the Old MS. Bible, the speech of this woman is as follows:—I have arayed with cordis my littil bed, and spred with peyntid tapetis of Egipt: I have springid my liggynge place with mirre and aloes and canelrum, and be we inwardly drunken with Tetis, and use we the coveytied clippingis to the tyme that the dai wax ligt. The original itself is too gross to be literally translated; but quite in character as coming from the mouth of an abandoned woman.

Verse 19. For the good man] Literally, For the man is not in his house.

Verse 20. He hath taken] Literally, the money bag he hath taken in his hand. He is gone a journey of itinerant merchandising. This seems to be what is intended.

And will come home at the day appointed.] ליום הכסא leeyom hakkasé, the time fixed for a return from such a journey. The Vulgate says, at the full moon. The Targum, the day of the assembly. In other words, he will return by the approaching festival.

Verse 21. With her much fair speech] With her blandishments and lascivious talk, she overcame all his scruples, and constrained him to yield.

Verse 22. As an ox goeth to the slaughter] The original of this and the following verse has been variously translated.

goeth to the slaughter, or as a fool to the correction of the stocks;

[c] Ch. 2. 18. & 5. 5. & 9. 13.

Dr. Grey corrects and translates thus: He goeth after her straightway, as an OX goeth to the SLAUGHTER; as a DOG to the CHAIN; and as a DEER till the DART strike through his liver; as a BIRD hasteneth to the SNARE, and knoweth not that it is for its life. Very slight alterations in the Hebrew text produce these differences; but it is not necessary to pursue them; all serve to mark the stupidity and folly of the man who is led away by enticing women, or who lives a life of intemperance.

Verse 24. Hearken unto me now therefore, O ye children] Ye that are young and inexperienced, seriously consider the example set before your eyes; and take warning at another's expense.

Verse 26. For she hath cast down many wounded: yea, many strong men have been slain by her.] That is, such like women have been the ruin of many. חללים chalalim, which we render wounded, also signifies soldiers, or men of war; and עצמים âtsumim, which we render strong men, may be translated heroes. Many of those who have distinguished themselves in the field and in the cabinet have been overcome and destroyed by their mistresses. History is full of such examples.

Verse 27. Her house is the way to hell] שאול sheol, the pit, the grave, the place of the dead, the eternal and infernal world. And they who, through such, fall into the grave, descend lower, into the chambers of death; the place where pleasure is at an end, and illusion mocks no more.

NOTES ON CHAP. VIII.

Verse 1. Doth not wisdom cry] Here wisdom is again personified: but the prosopopœia is carried on to a greater length than before, and with much more variety. It is represented in this chapter in a two-fold point of view:—1. Wisdom, the power of judging rightly, implying the knowledge of divine and human things. 2. As an attribute of God, particularly displayed in the various and astonishing works of creation. Nor has it any other meaning in this whole chapter, whatever some of the Fathers may have dreamed, who find allegorical meanings every where. The wise man seems as if suddenly awakened from the distressful contemplation which he had before him, (of the ruin of young persons in both worlds by means of debauchery,) by the voice of wisdom as having lifted her voice in the most public places, where was the greatest concourse of the people to warn the yet unsnared; that they might avoid the way of seduction and sin; and cause those who love her, to inherit substance, and to have their treasuries filled with durable riches.

Verse 2. In the places of the paths.] בית נתיבת נצבה beith netiboth nitsabah, "The constituted house of the paths." Does not this mean the house of public worship? the tabernacle, or temple, which stands a centre to the surrounding villages, the paths from all the parts leading to, and terminating at it. In such a place, where the holy word of God is read or preached, there in a particular manner does wisdom cry, and understanding lift up her voice. There are the warnings, the precepts, and the promises, of eternal truth; there, the bread of God is broken to His children, and thither they that will may come and take the water of life freely.

Verse 3. She crieth at the gates] This might be well applied to the preaching of Jesus Christ and His apostles, and their faithful successors in the Christian ministry. He went to the Temple, and proclaimed the righteousness of the Most High:—He did the same in the synagogues—on the mountains—by the sea side—in the villages—in the streets of the cities, and in private houses. His disciples followed his track: in the same way, and in the same spirit, they proclaimed the unsearchable riches of Christ. God's wisdom in the hearts of his true ministers, directs them to go and to seek sinners. There are, it is true, temples, synagogues, churches, chapels, &c. but hundreds of thousands never frequent them; and, therefore, do not hear the voice of truth: wisdom, therefore, must go to them, if she wish them to receive her instructions. Hence the zealous ministers of Christ go still to the highways and hedges, to the mountains and plains, to the ships and the cottages, to persuade sinners to turn from the error of their ways, and accept that redemption which was procured by the sacrificial offering of Jesus Christ.

Verse 4. Unto you, O men] אישים ishim, men of wealth and power, will I call; and not to you alone, for my voice is אל בני אדם al beneg Adam, "to all the descendants of Adam;" to the whole human race. As Jesus Christ tasted death for every man, so the Gospel proclaims salvation to all:—to you—to every individual, my voice is addressed. Thou hast sinned; and thou must perish, if not saved by grace.

Verse 5. O ye simple] פתאים petaim, ye that are deceived, and, with flattering words and fair speeches, deluded and drawn away.

Ye fools] כסילים kesilim, ye stupid, stiff-necked, senseless people. That preaching is never likely to do much good, that is not pointed; specifying and describing vices, and charging them home on the consciences of transgressors. Where this is not done, the congregation is unconcerned: no man supposes he has any thing to do in the business, especially if the preacher takes care to tell them,—"These were the crimes of Jews, Romans, Greeks, of the people at Corinth, Philippi, Thessalonica, Laodicea, and of heathens in general: but I hope better things of you who have been born in a Christian land, and baptized in the Christian faith." Thus he arms their consciences in double brass against the good effects of his own teaching.

Verse 6. Hear; for I will speak of excellent things] נגדים negedim, things which are pre-eminent, and manifestly superior to all others. The teaching is not trifling, though addressed to triflers.

The opening of my lips shall be right things] מישרים meysharim, things which are calculated to correct your false notions, and set straight your crooked ways. Hence she declares, Verse 7. My mouth shall speak truth] Truth without falsity, or any mixture of error, shall be the whole matter of my discourse.

Verse 8. All the words—are in righteousness] בצדק betsedek, in justice and equity, testifying what man owes to his God, to his neighbour, and to himself; giving to each his due. This is the true import of צדק tsadak.

There is nothing froward] נפתל niphtal, tortuous, involved, or difficult.

Or perverse] עקש ékesh, distorted, leading to obstinacy. On the contrary, Verse 9. They are all plain] נכחים nechoim, straight forward, over against every man, level to every capacity. This is true of all that concerns the salvation of the soul.

To them that find knowledge.] When a man gets the knowledge of himself, then he sees all the threatenings of God to be right. When he obtains the knowledge of God in Christ, then he finds that all the promises of God are right, yea, and amen.

Verse 10. Receive my instruction, and not silver] A Hebrew idiom; receive my instruction in preference to silver.

defined, wisdom applied to practice: so wherever true wisdom is, it will lead to action, and its activity will be always in reference to the accomplishment of the best ends by the use of the most appropriate means. Hence comes what is here called knowledge of witty inventions, דעת מזמות אמצא daat mezimmoth emetsa, "I have found out knowledge and contrivance." The further wisdom proceeds in man, the more practical knowledge it gains; and finding out the nature and properties of things, and the general course of providence, it can contrive by new combinations to produce new results.

Verse 13. The fear of the LORD is to hate evil] As it is impossible to hate evil, without loving good; and as hatred to evil will lead a man to abandon the evil way;—and love to goodness will lead him to do what is right in the sight of God, under the influence of that Spirit which has given the hatred to evil, and inspired the love of goodness: hence this implies the sum and substance of true religion, which is here termed the fear of the LORD.

Verse 14. Counsel is mine] Direction how to act in all circumstances, and on all occasions, must come from wisdom: the foolish man can give no counsel, cannot show another how he is to act in the various changes and chances of life. The wise man alone can give this counsel; and he can give it only as continually receiving instruction from God: for this Divine wisdom can say, תושיה, TUSHIAH, substance, reality, essence, all belong to me: I am the Fountain whence all are derived. Man may be wise, and good, and prudent, and ingenious: but these he derives from me; and they are dependently in him. But in me all these are independently and essentially inherent.

And sound wisdom] See above. This is a totally false translation:—תושיה tushiah, means essence, substance, reality, the source and substance of good. How ridiculous the support derived by certain authors from this translation in behalf of their system. See the writers on and quoters of Prov. viii.

I have strength.] Speaking still of wisdom, as communicating rays of its light to man, it enables him to bring every thing to his aid; to construct machines by which one man can do the work of hundreds. From it comes all mathematical learning, all mechanical knowledge; from it originally came the inclined plane, the wedge, the screw, the pulley in all its multiplications; and the lever in all its combinations and varieties came from this wisdom. And as all these can produce prodigies of power, far surpassing all kinds of animal energy, and all the effects of the utmost efforts of muscular force; hence the maxim of Lord Bacon, knowledge is power, built on the maxim of the tushiah itself; לי גבורה li-geburah, MINE IS STRENGTH.

Verse 15. By me kings reign] Every wise and prudent king is such through the influence of Divine wisdom. And just laws and their righteous administration come from this source. In this and the following verse five degrees of civil power, and authority are mentioned. 1. מלכים melacim, KINGS. 2. רוזנים roznim, CONSULS. 3. שרים PRINCES, CHIEFS of the people. 4. נדיבים nedibim, the NOBLES. And, 5. שפטים shaphetim, JUDGES OR CIVIL MAGISTRATES. All orders of government are from God. Instead of שפטי ארץ shophetey arets, judges of the earth, שפטי צדק shophetey tsedek, righteous judges, or judges of righteousness, is the reading of one hundred and sixty-two of Kennicott and De Rossi's MSS. either in the text or in the margin, and of several ancient editions. And this is the reading of the Vulgate, the Chaldee, and the Syriac; and should undoubtedly supersede the other.

Verse 17. I love them that love me] Wisdom shows itself; teaches man the knowledge of himself; shows him also the will of God concerning him,—manifests the snares and dangers of life,—the allurements and unsatisfactory nature of all sensual and sinful pleasures,—the blessedness of true religion,—and the solid happiness which an upright soul derives from the peace and approbation of its Maker. If then the heart embraces this wisdom, follows this Divine teaching, and gives itself to God, His love will He shed abroad in it by the influence of the Holy Spirit. Thus, we love God because He hath first loved us; and the more we love Him, the more we shall feel of His love, which will enable us to love Him yet more and more: and thus we may go on increasing to eternity. Blessed be God!

And those that seek me early shall find me.] Not merely betimes in the morning, though he who does so shall find it greatly to his advantage, see on Psalm iv.: but early in life, in youth, and as near as possible to the first dawn of reason. To the young this gracious promise is particularly made: If they seek, they shall find. Others who are old may seek and find; but never to such advantage, as they would have had, had they sought early. Youth is the time of advantage, in every respect: it is the time of learning, the time of discipline, the time of improvement, the time of acquiring useful, solid and gracious habits. As the first-fruits always belong to God, it is God's time; the time in which He is peculiarly gracious; and in which, to sincere youthful seekers, He pours out His benefits with great profusion. They that seek me early shall find me.

Hear, ye young, and ye little ones! God offers Himself now to you, with all His treasures of grace and glory. Thank Him for His ineffable mercy, and embrace it without delay.

Verse 18. Riches and honour are with me] Often the wise, prudent, and discreet man arrives literally to riches and honour: but this is not always the case. But there are other riches of which he never fails; and these seem to be what Solomon has particularly in view, durable riches and righteousness; the treasure deposited by God in earthen vessels.

Verse 20. I lead in the way of righteousness] Nothing but the teaching that comes from God by His word and Spirit can do this.

Verse 22. The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his way] Wisdom is not acquired by the Divine nature; man, and even angels, learn it by slow and progressive degrees: but in God it is as eternally inherent as any other essential attribute of His nature. The Targum makes this wisdom a creature, by thus translating the passage:—אלהא בראני בריש בריתיה Elaha barani bereish biriteiah, "God created me in the beginning of his creatures." The Syriac is the same. This is as absurd and heretical as some modern glosses on the same passage.

Verse 23. I was set up from everlasting] נסכתי nissacti, I was diffused or poured out, from נסך nasac, to diffuse, pour abroad, as a spirit or disposition, Isa. xxix. 10. See Parkhurst. Or from כך sac, to cover, overspread, smear over, as with oil; to be anointed king. Hence some have translated it principatum habui, I had the principality, or was a ruler, governor, and director, from eternity. All the schemes, plans, and circumstances relative to creation, government, providence, and to all being, material, animal, and intellectual, were conceived in the Divine mind, by the Divine wisdom, from eternity, or ever the earth was. There was no fortuitous creation, no jumbling concourse of original atoms, that entered into the composition of created beings; all was the effect of the plans before conceived, laid down, and at last acted upon by God's eternal wisdom.

Verse 24. When there were no depths] תהמות tehomoth, before the original chaotic mass was formed. See Gen. i. 2.

I was brought forth] חוללתי cholalti, I was produced as by labouring throes. Mr. Parkhurst thinks, that the heathen poets derived their idea of Minerva (wisdom) being born of Jupiter's brain, from some such high poetic personification as that in the text.

Verse 26. The highest part of the dust of the world.] ראש עפרות חבל rosh âphroth tibel, the first particle of matter. The prima materia, the primitive atom. All these verses (3—29) are a periphrasis for I existed before creation; consequently before time was. I dwelt in God, as a principle which might be communicated in its influences to intellectual beings, when formed.

Verse 27. When he prepared the heavens, I was there] For there is no part of the creation of God in which wisdom, skill, contrivance, are more manifest than in the construction of the visible heavens.

When he set a compass upon the face of the depth] Does not this refer to the establishment of the law of gravitation? by which all the particles of matter, tending to a common centre, would produce in all bodies the orbicular form, which we see them have; so that even the waters are not only retained within their boundaries; but are subjected to the circular form, in their great aggregate of seas, as other parts of matter are. This is called here making a compass, בחקו חוג be-chukko chug, sweeping a circle; and even this on the face of the deep, to bring the chaotic mass into form, regularity, and order.

Verse 28. The clouds above] שחקים shechakim, the ethereal regions, taking in the whole of the atmosphere, with all its meteors, clouds, vapours, &c.

Verse 29. When he gave to the sea his decree] When He assigned its limits, adjusted its saltness, and proportioned the extent of its surface to the quantity of vapours to be raised from it, for the irrigation of the terrene surface.

The foundations of the earth] Those irreversible laws by which all its motions are governed: its annual and diurnal rotation, and particularly its centrifugal and centripetal force; by the former of which it has its annual motion round the sun like all other planets; and by the latter all its particles are prevented from flying off, notwithstanding the great velocity of its motion round its own axis, which causes one thousand and forty-two miles of its equator to pass under any given point in the heavens in the course of a single hour! These are, properly speaking, the foundations of the earth; the principles on which it is constructed, and the laws by which it is governed.

Verse 30. Then I was with him as one brought up] אמון amon, a nurseling, a darling child. Wisdom continues its parable, says Calmet; and represents itself as a new-born child which is ever near its parent, and takes pleasure to see him act, and to sport in his presence. This is poetical, and highly figurative: and they who think they find the Deity of Jesus Christ in these metaphors should be very cautious how they apply such terms as these; so that, while they are endeavouring to defend the truth, they may do nothing against the truth; in which most of them unhappily fail.

Rejoicing always before him] All the images in this verse are borrowed from the state and circumstances of a darling affectionate playful child; as any one will be convinced who examines the Hebrew text.

Verse 31. Rejoicing in the habitable part of his earth] There God displays especially His wisdom in ordering and directing human beings, and in providing for their wants. The wisdom of God is in an especial manner manifested in His providence.

My delights were with the sons of men.] This Divine wisdom, as it delighted in the creation of man, so it continues to delight in his instruction. Hence it is represented as offering its lessons of instruction continually; and using every means and opportunity to call men from folly and vice to sound knowledge, holiness, and happiness. It is to man that God especially gives wisdom: and he has it in the form of reason beyond all other creatures; therefore it is said, My delights are with the sons of men: to them I open my choicest treasures. They alone are capable of sapience, intelligence, and discursive reason.

Verse 32. Now therefore] Since I delight so much in conveying instruction; since I have the happiness of the children of Adam so much at heart; hearken unto me: and this is for your own interest; for blessed are they who keep my ways.

Verse 34. Watching daily at my gates] Wisdom is represented as having a school for the instruction of men: and seems to point out some of the most forward of her scholars, coming, through their intense desire to learn, even before the gates were opened; and waiting there for admission, that they might hear every word that was uttered, and not lose one accent of the heavenly teaching. Blessed are such.

Verse 35. Whoso findeth me] The teaching that comes from God; teaching to avoid evil, and cleave to that which is good: findeth life, gets that knowledge which qualifies him to answer the purposes for which he was made; for he is quickened with Christ, and made a partaker of the Divine life. Christ dwells in his heart by faith; he lives a new life, for Christ liveth in him; the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus making him free from the law of sin and death. And shall obtain favour of the LORD. The more he walks after the Divine counsel, the more he obtains of the Divine image; and the more he resembles his Maker, the more he partakes of the Divine favour.

Verse 36. Wrongeth his own soul] It is not Satan; it is not sin, properly speaking, that hurts him: it is himself. If he received the teaching of God, sin would have no dominion over him: if he resisted the devil, the devil would have fled from him.

Love death] They do it in effect, if not even in fact: for as they love sin that leads to death; so they may be justly said to love death, the wages of sin. He that works in this case, works for wages: and he must love the wages, seeing he labours so hard in the work.

I have gone through this fine chapter, and given the best exposition of it in my power. I have also, as well as others, weighed every word, and closely examined their radical import, their connexion among themselves, and the connexion of the subject of the chapter with what has gone before, and with what follows after; and I cannot come conscientiously to any other interpretation than that which I have given. I am thoroughly satisfied that it speaks not one word either about the Divine or human nature of Christ, much less of any eternal filiation of his Divinity. And I am fully persuaded, had there not been a preconceived creed, no soul of man, by fair criticism, would have ever found out that fond opinion of the eternal sonship of the Divine nature, which so many commentators persuade themselves they find here. That it has been thus applied in early ages, as well as in modern times, I am sufficiently aware; and that many other portions of the Divine records have been appealed to, in order to support a particular opinion, and many that were false in themselves, must be known to those who are acquainted with the Fathers. But many quote them, who know nothing of them. As to the Fathers in general, they were not all agreed on this subject, some supposing Christ, others the Holy Spirit, was meant in this chapter. But of these we may safely state, that there is not a truth in the most orthodox creed, that cannot be proved by their authority; nor a heresy that has disgraced the Romish Church, that may not challenge them as its abettors. In points of doctrine, their authority is, with me, nothing. The WORD of GOD alone contains my creed. On a number of points I can go to the Greek and Latin Fathers of the church, to know what they believed; and what the people of their respective communions believed: but, after all this, I must return to God's word, to know what He would have ME to believe. No part of a Protestant creed stands on the decision of Fathers and councils. By appealing to the Bible alone, as the only rule for the faith and practice of Christians, they confounded and defeated their Papistical adversaries, who could not prove their doctrines but by Fathers and councils. Hence their peculiar doctrines stand in their ultimate proof upon THESE: and those of Protestantism on the BIBLE. Some late writers upon this subject, whose names I spare, have presumed much on what they have said on this subject: but before any man, who seeks for sober truth, will receive any of their conclusions, he will naturally look whether their premises be sound; or whether, from sound principles, they have drawn legitimate conclusions. They say this chapter is a sufficient foundation to build their doctrine on. I say it is no foundation at all; that it never has been proved, and never can be proved, that it speaks at all of the doctrine in question. It has nothing to do with it. On this conviction of mine, their proofs drawn from this chapter must go with me for nothing. I have been even shocked with reading over some things that have been lately written on the subject. I have said in my heart, They have taken away my ETERNAL LORD, and I know not where they have laid Him. I cannot believe their doctrine: I never did, I hope I never shall. I believe in the Holy Trinity; in Three Persons in the Godhead, of which none is before or after another. I believe JEHOVAH, JESUS, the HOLY GHOST, to be one infinite, eternal GODHEAD, subsisting ineffably in Three Persons: I believe Jesus the Christ, to be, as to his Divine nature, as unoriginated and eternal as JEHOVAH Himself; and with the Holy Ghost to be one infinite Godhead, neither Person being created, begotten, nor proceeding, more than another. As to its essence, but one TRINITY, is an infinite, eternal, and inseparable UNITY; and this TRIUNE GOD is the Object of my faith, my adoration, and my confidence. But I believe not in an eternal sonship or generation of the Divine nature of Jesus Christ. Here, I have long stood; here, I now stand; and here I trust to stand in the hour of death, in the day of judgment, and to all eternity. Taking the Scriptures in general, I find a plurality in the Divine nature: taking the grand part mentioned, Matt. iii. 16, 17. I find that plurality restrained to a Trinity, in the most unequivocal and evident manner: Jesus, who was baptized in Jordan; the HOLY GHOST, who descended upon Him who was baptized; and the FATHER, manifested by the VOICE from heaven that said, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased. And how that Person called JESUS the CHRIST, in whom dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, could be called the son of God, I have shown in my note on Luke i. 35.

Some writers in their defence of the doctrine above, which I venture to say, I do not believe, have made reflections, in real or pretended pity, on the belief of their Trinitarian brethren, which have very little to do with candour: viz. "How the supporters of this hypothesis can avoid either the error of Tritheism on the one hand, or Sabellianism on the other, is difficult to conceive." Now, the supporters of the doctrine of the underived and unbegotten eternity of Christ's divine nature, might as well say of them: How the supporters of the eternal sonship of Christ, can avoid the error of Arianism on the one hand, and Arianism on the other, it is difficult to conceive. But I would not say so: for though I know Arians who hold that doctrine, and express their belief nearly in the same words; yet I know many most conscientious Trinitarians, who hold the doctrine of the eternal sonship, and yet believe in the proper Deity, or eternal Godhead of Jesus Christ. After all, as a very wise and excellent man lately said: "While we have every reason to be satisfied of the soundness of each other's faith; we must allow each to explain his own sentiments in his own words: here, in the words used in explanation, a little latitude may be safely allowed." To this correct sentiment I only add:—

Scimus; et hanc veniam petimusque damusque vicissim. HOR.

"I grant it; and the licence give and take."

I have passed the waters of strife, and do not wish to recross them.

And, while I am on this subject, let me add one thing which I am sure will not please all the generation of His people; and it is this:—that Jesus Christ having taken upon Him human nature, which was afterward crucified, and expired upon the cross, did by those acts make a full, perfect, and sufficient offering, sacrifice, and atonement, for the sin of the whole world. That He died, paid down the redemption price, for every soul of man, that was ever born into the world, and shall ever be born into it. And that all who lay hold on the hope set before them shall be saved: and all may lay this hold; and none shall perish but those who would not come to Christ that they might have life. And that they perish, not because they were not redeemed, but because they would not accept of the redemption.

To conclude on this subject, it will be necessary to refer the Reader to the remarkable apposition that subsists between this and the preceding chapter. There, the prostitute is represented as going out into the streets to seek her prey; and the alluring words of carnal wisdom to excite the animal appetite to sinful gratification, which she uses: here, heavenly wisdom is represented as going out into the streets, to the high places, the gates of the city, to counteract her designs, and lead back the simple to God and truth.

These personifications were frequent among the Jews. In the book of Ecclesiasticus we find a similar personification, and expressed in almost similar terms; and surely none will suppose that the writer of that apocryphal book had either the Christian doctrine of the Trinity, or the sonship of Christ, in view. I will give a few passages:—

"Wisdom shall glory in the midst of her people; in the congregation of the Most High shall she open her mouth, and triumph before his power. I came out of the mouth of the Most High, and covered the earth as a cloud. I dwelt in the high places; I alone compassed the circuit of the heaven, and walked in the bottom of the deep, in the waves of the sea, and in all the earth. He created me from the beginning, before the world; and I shall never fail; I am the mother of fair love, and fear, and knowledge, and holy hope: I therefore, being eternal, am given to all my children which are named of Him. Come unto me, and fill yourselves with my fruits. I also came out as a brook from a river, and a conduit into a garden," &c. &c. Ecclus. xxiv. 1, &c. This kind of personification of wisdom we have had in the preceding chapters; and in the following chapter we shall find the figure still kept up.

NOTES ON CHAP. IX.

The same wisdom speaks here, who spoke in the preceding chapter. There she represented herself as manifest in all the works of God in the natural world; all being constructed according to counsels proceeding from an infinite understanding. Here, she represents herself as the great potentate, who was to rule all that she had constructed; and having an immense family to provide for, had made an abundant provision, and calls all to partake of it. This, says Calmet, is the continuation of the parable begun in the preceding chapter, where wisdom is represented as a venerable lady, whose real beauties and solid promises are opposed to the false allurements of Pleasure, who was represented in the seventh chapter under the idea of a debauched and impudent woman. This one, to draw young people into her snares, describes the perfumes, the bed, and the festival, which she has prepared. Wisdom acts in the same way: but instead of the debauchery, the false pleasures, and criminal connexions, which pleasure had promised, offers her guests a strong, well-built, magnificent palace, chaste and solid pleasures, salutary instructions, and a life crowned with blessedness. This is the sum and the substance of the parable: but as in the preceding part, so in this, men have produced strange creatures of their own brain, by way of explanation, one specimen of this mode of interpretation may suffice.

The house built by wisdom is the holy humanity of Jesus Christ; the seven pillars are the seven sacraments, or the seven gifts of the Holy Ghost, or the whole of the apostles, preachers and ministers of the church; the slain beasts are the sacrifice of Christ's body upon the cross; and the bread and mingled wine are the bread and wine in the sacrament of the Lord's supper!—Fathers and Doctors.

If we have recourse to any other particulars than those given above in the summary of the chapter, let us follow the first part of the parable, where wisdom is represented as laying the plan of the creation; and then perhaps we may say with safety, that wisdom having produced the grand ichnograph or ground plot of the whole, with all the requisite elevations and specifications of materials, comes to show us in this part, that the whole has been constructed on this plan; and specifies the end for which this august building has been raised.

She hath hewn out her seven pillars] Every thing has been so constructed, as to exhibit a scene of grandeur, stability, and durableness.

Verse 2. She hath killed her beasts] God has made the most ample provision for the innumerable tribes of animal and intellectual beings, which people the whole vortex of created nature.

Verse 3. She hath sent forth her maidens] The wisdom of God has made use of the most proper means to communicate Divine knowledge to the inhabitants of the earth; as a good and gracious Creator wills to teach them whence they came, how they are supported, whither they are going, and for what end they were formed. It is a custom to the present day in Asiatic countries to send their invitations to guests, by a company of females, preceded by eunuchs: they go to the doors of the invited, and deliver their message.

Verse 4. Whoso is simple] Let the young, heedless, and giddy, attend to my teaching.

Him that wanteth understanding] Literally, he that wanteth a heart, who is without courage, is feeble and fickle, and easily drawn aside from the holy commandment.

Verse 5. Come, eat of my bread] Not only receive my instructions, but act according to my directions.

Drink of the wine I have mingled] Enter into my counsels; be not contented with superficial knowledge in any subject, where any thing deeper may be attained. Go by the streams to the fountain head. Look into the principles on which they were formed,—investigate their nature,—examine their properties,—acquaint thyself with their relations, connexions, influences, and various uses. See the skill, power, and goodness, of God in their creation. And when thou hast learnt all within thy reach, know that thou knowest but little of the manifold wisdom of God. Let what thou hast learnt humble thee, by showing thee how very little thou dost know. Thou hast drunk of the provided wine: but that wine was mingled with water, for God will hide pride from man. He dwells only on the surface of religious and philosophical learning, who does not perceive and feel that he is yet but a child in knowledge; that he sees through a glass darkly; that he perceives men like trees walking; and that there are lengths, breadths, depths, and heights, in the works and ways of God, which will require an eternity to fathom. Here below the pure wine is mingled with water: but this is God's work. Yet there is enough; do not therefore be contented with a little. To this subject the words of the poet may be well applied:—

> A little learning is a dangerous thing;
> Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring:
> For scanty draughts intoxicate the brain,
> But drinking largely sobers us again. POPE.

Among the ancient Jews, Greeks, and Romans, wine was rarely drank without being mingled with water; and among ancient writers we find several ordinances for this. Some direct three parts of water to one of wine, some five parts, and Pliny mentions some wines that required twenty waters: but the most common proportions appear to have been three parts of water to two of wine. But probably the יין מסך yaiyin masac, mingled wine, was wine mingled not with water, to make it weaker: but with spices and other ingredients, to make it stronger. The ingredients were honey, myrrh, mandragora, opium, and such like; which gave it not only an intoxicating but stupifying quality also. Perhaps the mixed wine here may mean, wine of the strongest and best quality, that which was good to cheer and refresh the heart of man.

If we consider the mixed wine as meaning this strong wine, then the import of the metaphor will be,—a thorough investigation of the works of God will invigorate the soul, strengthen all the mental powers, enlarge their capacity, and enable the mind to take the most exalted views of the wonders of God's skill manifested in the operations of his hand.

Verse 6. Forsake the foolish] For the companion of fools must be a fool.

And live] Answer the end for which thou wert born.

Verse 7. He that reproveth a scorner] לץ lets, the person that mocks at sacred things,—the libertine—infidel, who turns the most serious things into ridicule; and by his wit often succeeds in rendering the person who reproves him ridiculous. Wisdom seems here to intimate, that it is vain to attempt by reproof to amend such: and yet we must not suffer sin upon our neighbour; at all hazards, we must deliver our own soul. But no reproof should be given to any, but in the spirit of love and deep concern; and when they contradict and blaspheme, leave them to God.

Verse 9. Give instruction to a wise man] Literally, give to the wise, and he will be wise. Whatever you give to such, they reap profit from it. They are like the bee; they extract honey from every flower.

Verse 10. The fear of the Lord] See on chap. i. 7. The knowledge of the holy; קדשים Kadoshim, of the Holy One; Sanctorum, of the saints.—Vulgate. Βουλη αγιων, the counsel of the holy persons.

Verse 11. For by me thy days shall be multiplied] Vice shortens human life, by a necessity of consequence: and, by the same, righteousness lengthens it. There is a long addition here in the Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgate. "He who trusts in falsity feeds on the winds; and is like him who chases the fowls of heaven. He forsakes the way of his own vineyard, and errs from the paths of his own inheritance. He enters also into lonely and desert places, and into a land abandoned to thirst; and his hands collect that which yieldeth no fruit."

Verse 12. If thou be wise] It is thy own interest to be religious. Though thy example may be very useful to thy neighbours and friends, yet the chief benefit is to thyself. But if thou scorn, refuse to receive the doctrines of wisdom, and die in thy sins, thou alone shalt suffer the vengeance of an offended God.

Verse 13. A foolish woman is clamorous] Vain empty women are those that make most noise. And she that is full of clamour, has generally little or no sense. We have had this character already, see chap. vii. 11. The translation of the Septuagint is very remarkable:—Γυνη αφρων και θρασεια, ενδεης ψωμου γινεται, "A lewd and foolish woman shall be in need of a morsel of bread."

Verse 14. For she sitteth at the door of her house] Her conduct here marks at once her folly, impudence, and poverty. See above on chap. vii. 6., &c. where the Reader will find a similar character.

Verse 16. Whoso is simple let him turn in hither] FOLLY or PLEASURE, here personified, uses the very same expressions, employed by Wisdom, ver. 4. Wisdom says, Let the simple turn in to me.—No, says Folly, Let the simple turn in to me. If he turn in to Wisdom, his folly shall be taken away, and he shall become wise: if he turn in to Folly, his darkness will be thickened, and his folly will remain.

Wisdom sets up her school to instruct the ignorant: Folly sets her school up next door, to defeat the designs of Wisdom.

Thus the saying of the satirist appears to be verified:—

"Wherever God erects a house of prayer,
The devil surely builds a chapel there.
And it is found, upon examination,
The latter has the larger congregation."

DE FOE.

Verse 17. Stolen waters are sweet] I suppose this to be a proverbial mode of expression, importing that illicit pleasures are sweeter than those which are legal. The meaning is easy to be discerned; and the conduct of multitudes shows that they are ruled by this adage. On it are built all the adulterous intercourses in the land.

Verse 18. But he knoweth not that the dead are there] See on chap. ii. ver. 18. He does not know that it was in this way the first apostates from God and truth walked. רפים rephaim; γιγαντες, the GIANTS.—Septuagint. The sons of men—the earth-born, to distinguish them from the sons of God, them who were born from above. See the notes on Gen. vi. 1, &c.

Her guests are in the depths of hell.] Those who have been drawn out of the way of understanding by profligacy have lost their lives in general, if not their souls, by their folly. The Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic, make a long addition to this verse:—"But draw thou back, that thou may not die in this place; neither fix thy eyes upon her, so shalt thou pass by those strange waters. But abstain thou from strange waters, and drink not of another's fountain, that thou mayest live a long time, and that years may be added to thy life." Of this addition there is nothing in the Hebrew, the Chaldee, nor the Vulgate, as now printed: but in the editio princeps are the following words:—Qui enim applicabitur illi descendet ad inferos; nam qui abscesserit ab ea salvabitur. These words were in the copy from which my Old MS. Bible has been made, as the following Version proves. Who forsoth schal ben joyned to hir, schal falle doun in to hell: for whi he that goth awai fro hir, schal be saved. Three of my own MSS. have the same reading.

NOTES ON CHAP. X.

Verse 1. The proverbs of Solomon] Some ancient MSS. of the Vulgate have Proverbiorum liber secundus. "The second book of the Proverbs." The preceding nine chapters can only be considered as an introduction, if indeed they may be said to make even a part, of the proverbs of Solomon, which appear to commence only at the tenth chapter.

A wise son maketh a glad father] The parallels in this and several of the succeeding chapters are those which Bishop Lowth calls the antithetic; when two lines correspond with each other by an opposition of terms and sentiments; when the second is contrasted with the first; sometimes in expressions, sometimes in sense only. Accordingly the degrees of antithesis are various; from an exact contraposition of word to word, through a whole sentence, down to a general disparity with something of a contrariety in the two propositions, as

A wise son rejoiceth his father:
But a foolish son is the grief of his mother.

Where every word has its opposite; for the terms father and mother are, as the logicians say, relatively opposite.

Verse 2. Treasures of wickedness] Property gained by wicked means.

Delivereth from death] Treasures gained by robbery often bring their possessors to an untimely death: but those gained by righteous dealing bring with them no such consequences.

Verse 3. But he casteth away the substance of the wicked.] But instead of רשעים rashaim, the wicked, בוגדים bogodim, hypocrites, or perfidious persons, is the reading of twelve or fourteen of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., and some editions: but it is not acknowledged by any of the ancient Versions.

The righteous have God for their Feeder: and because of His infinite bounty, they can never famish for want of the bread of life. On the contrary, the wicked are often, in the course of His providence, deprived of the property of which they make a bad use.

Verse 4. He becometh poor] God has ordered in the course of His providence, that he who will not work shall not eat. And He always blesses the work of the industrious man.

Verse 5. He that gathereth in summer] All the work of the field should be done in the season suitable to it. If summer and harvest be neglected, in vain does a man expect the fruits of autumn.

Verse 6. Violence covereth the mouth of the wicked.] As blessings shall be on the head of the just, so the violence of the wicked shall cover their face with shame and confusion. Their own violent dealings shall be visited upon them. The mouth forsoth of unpitous men wickidnesse coverith.—Old MS. Bible. The forehead of the ungodly is past shame, and presumptuous.—Coverdale.

Verse 7. The memory of the just is blessed] Or, is a blessing.

antithesis: but there are only two antithetic terms; for memory and name are synonymous.—Lowth. The very name of the wicked man is as offensive as putrid carrion.

Verse 8. A prating fool shall fall] This clause is repeated in the tenth verse. The wise man will receive the commandment: but the shallow blabbing fool shall be cast down. See verse 10.

Verse 9. He that walketh uprightly] The upright man is always safe; he has not two characters to support; he goes straight forward, and is never afraid of detection, because he has never been influenced by hypocrisy or deceit.

Verse 10. He that winketh with the eye] Instead of the latter clause, which see ver. 8. the Septuagint has, ὁ δὲ ελεγχων μετα παρρησιας ειρηνοποιει, but he that reproveth with freedom, maketh peace. This is also the reading of the Syriac and Arabic. A faithful open reproving of sin is more likely to promote the peace of society, than the passing it by slightly, or taking no notice of it: for, if the wicked turn to God at the reproof, the law of peace will soon be established in his heart; and the law of kindness will flow from his tongue.

Verse 11. The mouth of a righteous man is a well of life] מקור חיים mekor chaiyim, is the vein of lives; an allusion to the great aorta, which conveys the blood from the heart to every part of the body. The latter clause of this verse is the same with that of verse 6.

Verse 12. Hatred stirreth up strifes] It seeks for occasions to provoke enmity. It delights in broils. On the contrary love conciliates, removes aggravations, puts the best construction on every thing; and pours water, not oil, upon the flame.

Verse 13. A rod is for the back of him] He that can learn, and will not learn, should be made to learn. The rod is a most powerful instrument of knowledge. Judiciously applied, there is a lesson of profound wisdom in every twig.

Verse 14. Wise men lay up knowledge] They keep secret every thing that has a tendency to disturb domestic or public peace: but the foolish man blabs all out, and produces much mischief. Think much; speak little; and always think before you speak! This will promote your own peace and that of your neighbour.

Verse 15. The rich man's wealth is his strong city] Behold a mystery in providence: there is not a rich man on earth but becomes such by means of the poor! Property comes from the labour of the poor; and the king himself is served of the field. How unjust, diabolically so, is it to despise or oppress those by whose labour all property is acquired.

The destruction of the poor is their poverty.] A man in abject poverty never arises out of this pit. They have no nucleus about which property may aggregate. The poet spoke well:—

Haud facile emergunt, quorum virtutibus obstat
Res angusta domi.

"They rarely emerge from poverty, whose exertions are cramped by want at home."

Verse 16. The labour of the righteous] The good man labours that he may be able to support life; this is his first object: and then to have something to divide with the poor; this is his next object.

The fruit of the wicked to sin.] This man lives to eat and drink, and his property he spends in riot and excess. God's blessings are cursed to him.

Verse 17. He is in the way of life] The truly religious man accumulates knowledge, that he may the better know how to live to God, and do most good among men.

Verse 18. He that hideth] This is a common case. How many, when full of resentment and deadly hatred, meditating revenge and cruelty, and sometimes even murder, have pretended that they thought nothing of the injury they had sustained; had passed by the insult, &c. Thus, lying lips covered the malevolence of a wicked heart.

Verse 19. In the multitude of words] It is impossible to speak much, and yet speak nothing but truth; and injure no man's character in the mean while.

Verse 20. The heart of the wicked is little worth.] כמעט ke-meât, is like little, or nothing; or, is like dross, while the tongue of the just is like silver. A sinner's heart is worth nothing, and is good for nothing: and yet because it is his most hidden part, he vaunts of its honesty, goodness, &c. Yes, yes; it is very honest and good, only the devil is in it. That is all.

Verse 22. The blessing of the LORD, it maketh rich] Whatever we receive in the way of Providence has God's blessing in it, and will do us good. Cares, troubles, and difficulties, come with all property not acquired in this way: but God's blessing gives simple enjoyment, and levies no tax upon the comfort.

Verse 23. It is as sport to a fool to do mischief] What a millstone weight of iniquity hangs about the necks of most of the jesters, facetious, and witty people! "How many lies do they tell in jest, to go to the devil in earnest!"

Verse 24. The fear of the wicked] The wicked is full of fears and alarms; and all that he has dreaded, and more than he has dreaded, shall come upon him. The righteous is always desiring more of the salvation of God, and God will exceed even his utmost desires.

Verse 25. As the whirlwind passeth] As tornadoes that sweep every thing away before them; so shall the wrath of God sweep away the wicked: it shall leave him neither branch nor root. But the righteous, being built on the eternal foundation, יסוד עולם yesod ôlam, shall never be shaken.

Verse 26. As vinegar to the teeth] The acid softening and dissolving the alkali of the bone, so as to impair their texture, and render them incapable of masticating. And as smoke affects the eyes, irritating their tender vessels, so as to give pain and prevent distinct vision; so the sluggard, the lounging thriftless messenger, who never returns in time with the desired answer.

Verse 28. The expectation of the wicked shall perish.] A wicked man is always imposing on himself, by the hope of God's mercy, and final happiness; and he continues hoping, till he dies without receiving that mercy which alone would entitle him to that glory.

Verse 29. The way of the LORD is strength] In the path of obedience, the upright man ever finds his strength renewed; the more he labours, the stronger he grows. The same sentiment as that in Isa. xl. 31.

Verse 30. The righteous shall never be removed] Because he is built on the eternal foundation. See on ver. 25.

Verse 31. The froward tongue shall be cut out.] This probably alludes to the punishment of cutting out the tongue for blasphemy, treasonable speeches, profane swearing, or such like. The tunge of schrewis schal perishen.—Old MS. Bible. Were the tongue of every shrew or scold to be extracted, we should soon have less noise in the world.

Verse 32. The lips of the righteous know what is acceptable] And what they believe to be most pleasing and most profitable, that they speak: but the wicked man knows as well what is perverse, and that he speaketh forth. As the love of God is not in his heart; so the law of kindness is not on his lips.

NOTES ON CHAP. XI.

Verse 1. A false balance is abomination] This refers to the balance itself deceitfully constructed, so that it is sooner turned at one end, than at the other. This is occasioned by one end of the beam being longer than the other.

But a just weight] אבן שלמה eben shelemah, the perfect stone, probably because weights were first made of stone; see the law, Deut. xxv. 13, 35.

Verse 2. When pride cometh] The proud man thinks so much more of himself than any other can do; and expecting to be treated according to his own supposed worth, which treatment he seldom meets with, he is repeatedly mortified, ashamed, confounded, and rendered indignant.

With the lowly] צנועים tsenûim, ταπεινων, the humble, the modest, as opposed to the proud, referred to in the first clause. The humble man looks for nothing but justice; has the meanest opinion of himself; expects nothing in the way of commendation or praise; and can never be disappointed but in receiving praise, which he neither expects nor desires.

Verse 4. Riches profit not in the day of wrath] Among men they can do all things: but they cannot purchase the remission of sins, nor turn aside the wrath of God when that is poured out upon the opulent transgressor.

Verse 7. When a wicked man dieth] HOPE is a great blessing to man in his present state of trial and suffering; because it leads him to expect a favourable termination of his ills. But hope was not made for the wicked; and yet they are the very persons that most abound in it! They hope to be saved, and get at last to the kingdom of God; though they have their face towards perdition, and refuse to turn. But their hope goes no further than the grave. There the wicked man's expectation is cut off, and his hope perisheth. But to the saint, the penitent, and the cross-bearers in general, what a treasure is hope! What a balm through life!

Verse 8. The wicked cometh in his stead] Often God makes this distinction: in public calamities and in sudden accidents He rescues the righteous, and leaves the wicked, who has filled up the measure of his iniquities, to be seized by the hand of death. Justice then does its own work; for mercy has been rejected.

Verse 9. A hypocrite with his mouth] חנף chanaph, might be better translated infidel, than hypocrite. The latter is one that pretends to religion; that uses it for secular purposes: the former is one who disbelieves Divine revelation, and accordingly is polluted, and lives in pollution. This is properly the force of the original word. Such persons deal in calumny and lies, and often thus destroy the character of their neighbour. Besides, they are very zealous in propagating their own infidel notions; and thus, by this means, destroy their neighbour: but the experimental knowledge which the just have of God and His salvation prevents them from being ensnared.

Verse 10. When it goeth well] An upright pious sensible man is a great blessing to the neighbourhood where he resides, by his example, his advice, and his prayers. The considerate prize him on these accounts, and rejoice in his prosperity. But when the wicked perish, who has been a general curse by the contagion of his example and conversation, there is not only no regret expressed for his decease; but a general joy because God has removed him.

Verse 12. He that is void of wisdom] A foolish man is generally abundant in his censures; he dwells on the defects of his neighbour, and is sure to bring them into the most prominent view. But a man of understanding, a prudent sensible man, hides those defects wherever he can, and puts the most charitable construction on those which he cannot conceal.

Verse 13. A talebearer] הולך רכיל holec racil, the walking busy body, the trader in scandal

Revealeth secrets] Whatever was confided to him, he is sure to publish abroad. The word means a hawker, or travelling chapman, who are always great newsmongers; and will tell even their own secrets, rather than have nothing to say.

Verse 15. He that is surety for a stranger shall smart for it] He shall find evil upon evil in it. See on chap. vi. 1.

Verse 16. A gracious woman retaineth honour] Instead of this clause, the Septuagint have Γυνη ευχαριτος εγειρει ανδρι δοξαν, A gracious woman raiseth up honour to the man; Θρονος δε ατιμιας γυνη μισουντα δικαια. But she that hateth righteous things, is a throne of dishonour. A good wife is an honour to her husband; and a bad wife is her husband's reproach: and if this be so, how careful should a man be whom he marries?

Verse 17. The merciful man doeth good to his own soul] Every gracious disposition is increased while a man is exercised in showing mercy. No man can show an act of disinterested mercy without benefitting his own soul, by improving his moral feeling.

But he that is cruel troubleth his own flesh.] We seldom see a peevish, fretful, vindictive man, either in good health or good plight of body. I have often heard it observed of such, He frets his flesh off his bones.

Verse 18. Worketh a deceitful work] An unstable work; nothing is durable that he does except his crimes.

Verse 19. Righteousness tendeth to life] True godliness promotes health, and is the best means of lengthening out life: but wicked men live not out half their days.

Verse 21. Though hand join in hand] Let them confederate as they please to support each other, justice will take care that they escape not punishment.

Verse 22. A jewel of gold in a swine's snout] That is, beauty in a woman destitute of good breeding and modest carriage, is as becoming as a gold ring on the snout of a swine. Coverdale translates thus:—A fayre woman without discrete maners, is like a ringe of golde in a swyne's snoute.

Verse 24. There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth] The bountiful man who gives to the poor, never turning away his face from any one in distress, the Lord blesses his property, and the bread is multiplied in his hand. To the same purpose the following verse.

He that watereth] A man who distributes in the right spirit, gets more good himself, than the poor man does who receives the bounty. Thus, it is more blessed to give than to receive.

Verse 26. He that withholdeth corn] Who refuses to sell because he hopes for a dearth, and then he can make his own price.

The people shall curse him] Yes, and God shall curse him also; and if he do not turn and repent, he will get God's curse, and the curse of the poor, which will be a canker in his money during time, and a canker in his soul throughout eternity.

Verse 29. Shall inherit the wind] He who dissipates his property by riotous living, shall be as unsatisfied, as he who attempts to feed upon air.

Verse 30. The fruit of the righteous is a tree of life] עץ חיים ets chayim, the tree of lives. It is like that tree which grew in the paradise of God; increasing the bodily and mental vigour of those who eat of it.

He that winneth souls is wise.] Wisdom seeks to reclaim the wanderers: and he who is influenced by wisdom, will do the same.

Verse 31. Behold the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth, &c.] The Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic, read this verse as follows:—And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear? And this St. Peter quotes literatim, 1 Pet. iv. 18. where see the note.

Verse 1. Whoso loveth instruction] מוסר musar, discipline or correction, loves knowledge, for correction is the way to knowledge.

But he that hateth reproof is brutish.] בער baar, he is a bear; and expects no more benefit from correction than the ox does from the goad.

Verse 2. A good man obtaineth favour] First, it is God who makes him good; for every child of Adam is bad till the grace of God changes his heart. Secondly, while he walks in the path of obedience, he increases in goodness, and consequently in the favour of the Lord.

Verse 3. A man shall not be established by wickedness] Evil is always variable: it has no fixed principle except the root that is in the human heart; and even that is ever assuming new forms. Nothing is permanent but goodness; and that is unchangeable because it comes from God. The produce of goodness is permanent, because it has God's blessing in it: the fruit of wickedness, or the property procured by wickedness, is transitory; because it has God's curse in it. The righteous has his root in God; and therefore, he shall not be moved.

Verse 4. A virtuous woman is a crown to her husband] אשת חיל eshet chayil, a strong woman. Our word virtue (virtus) is derived from vir, a man; and as man is the noblest of God's creatures, virtue expresses what is becoming to man; what is noble, courageous, and dignified. And as vir, a man, comes from vis, power or strength; so it implies what is strong and vigorous in principle: and as in uncivilized life strength and courage were considered the very highest, because apparently the most necessary of all virtues; hence the term itself might have become the denomination of all excellent moral qualities; and is now applied to whatever consitutes the system of morality and moral duties. In some parts, however, of the world, where arts and sciences have made little progress, strength is one of the first qualifications of a wife, where the labours of the field are appointed to them. It is not an uncommon sight in different parts of Africa, to see the wives (queens) of the kings and chiefs going out in the morning to the plantations, with their mattock in their hand, and their youngest child on their back; and when arrived at the ground, lay the young prince or princess upon the earth, which, when weary of lying on one side, will roll itself on the other, and thus continue during the course of the day, except at the intervals in which its mother gives it suck, without uttering a single whimper; the parent employed all the while in labour, which we in Europe generally assign to our horses. In such cases the strong wife is the highest acquisition; and is a crown to her husband, though he be a king of Bonny or Calabar. It is certain that in ancient times the women in Judea did some of the severest work in the fields, such as drawing water from the wells, and watering the flocks, &c. On this account, I think, the words may be taken literally; and especially when we add another consideration, that a woman, healthy, and of good muscular powers, is the most likely to produce, and properly rear up, a healthy offspring; and children of this kind are a crown to their parents.

Is as rottenness in his bones.] Does not this refer to a woman irregular in her manners, who by her incontinence not only maketh her husband ashamed, but contracts and communicates such diseases as bring rottenness into the bones? I think so. And I think, this was the view taken of the text by Coverdale, who translates thus:—"A stedfast woman is a crowne unto her hussbonde: but she that behaveth herself unhonestly is a corruption in his bones."

Verse 7. The wicked are overthrown] Seldom does God give such a long life, or numerous offspring.

But the house of the righteous shall stand.] God blesses their progeny; and their families continue long in the earth: whereas the wicked seldom have many generations in a direct line. This is God's mercy, that the entail of iniquity may be in some sort cut off, so that the same vices may not be strengthened by successive generations. For generally the bad root produces not only a bad plant, but one worse than itself.

Verse 9. He that is despised, and hath a servant] I believe the Vulgate gives the true sense of this verse:—Melior est pauper, et sufficiens sibi; quam gloriosus, et indigens pane. "Better is the poor man who provides for himself; than the proud, who is destitute of bread." The Versions in general agree in this sense. This needs no comment. There are some who through pride of birth, &c. would rather starve, than put their hands to menial labour. Though they may be lords, how much to be preferred is the simple peasant, who supports himself and family by the drudgery of life!

Verse 10. A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast] One principal characteristic of a holy man is mercy: cruelty is unknown to him; and his benevolence extends to the meanest of the brute creation. Pity rules the heart of a pious man, and he can do nothing that is cruel. He considers what is best for the comfort, ease, health, and life, of the beast that serves him; and he knows that God Himself careth for oxen: and one of the ten commandments provides a seventh part of the time to be allotted for the rest of labouring beasts as well as for man.

I once in my travels met with the Hebrew of this clause on the sign board of a public inn: יודע צדיק נפש בהמתו yodeâ tsadik nephesh behameto. "A righteous man considereth the life of his beast;" which being very appropriate, reminded me that I should feed my horse.

The tender mercies of the wicked are cruel] אכזרי acazeri, are violent, without mercy, ruthless. The wicked, influenced by Satan, can show no other disposition than what is in their master. If they appear at any time merciful, it is a cloak which they use to cover purposes of cruelty. To accomplish its end, iniquity will assume any garb, speak mercifully, extol benevolence, sometimes even give to the poor! But, timeo Danaos, et dona ferentes. The cry of fire at midnight, provided it be in another's dwelling, is more congenial to their souls than the cry of mercy. Look at the human fiends, "out-heroding Herod," in horse races, bruising matches, and cock-fights. The hell is yet undescribed, that is suited to monsters in cruelty.

Verse 11. He that tilleth his land] God's blessing will be in the labour of the agriculturalist.

But he that followeth vain persons] He who, while he should be cultivating his ground, preparing for a future crop, or reaping his harvest, associates with fowlers, coursers of hares, hunters of foxes, or those engaged in any campaign amusements, is void of understanding; and I have known several such come to beggary.

To this verse the Septuagint add the following clause:—Ος εστιν ηδυς εν οινων διατριβαις, εν τοις ἑαυτου ὀχυρωμασι κατα λειψει ατιμιαν. He who is a boon companion in banquets, shall leave dishonour in his own fortresses. This has been copied by the Vulgate and the Arabic. That is, the man who frequents the ale-house enriches that, while he impoverishes his own habitation.

Verse 12. The wicked desireth the net of evil men] They applaud their ways, and are careful to imitate them in their wiles.

Verse 13. The wicked is snared by the transgression of his lips] A man who deals in lies and false oaths will sooner or later be found out to his own ruin. There is another proverb as true as this: A liar had need of a good memory. For as the truth is not in him, he says and unsays, and often contradicts himself.

Verse 16. A fool's wrath is presently known] We have a proverb very like this, and it will serve for illustration:—

A fool's bolt is soon shot.

A weak minded man has no self-government;—he is easily angered and generally speaks whatever comes first to his mind.

Verse 18. There is that speaketh] Instead of בוטה boteh, blabbing out, blustering; several MSS. have בוטח boteach, TRUSTING: and instead of כמדקרות ke-madkerioth, AS the piercings, seven MSS., with the Complutensian Polyglott, have במדקרות be-madkeroth, IN the piercings. "There is that trusteth in the piercings of a sword: but the tongue of the wise is health." But I suppose the former to be the true reading.

Verse 19. A lying tongue is but for a moment.] Truth stands for ever; because its foundation is indestructible: but falsehood may soon be detected; and, though it gain credit for a while, it had that credit because it was supposed to be truth.

Verse 21. There shall no evil happen to the just] No, for all things work together for good to them that love God. Whatever occurs to a righteous man God turns to his advantage. But, on the other hand, the wicked are filled with mischief: they are hurt, grieved, and wounded, by every occurrence; and nothing turns to their profit.

Verse 23. A prudent man concealeth knowledge] "If a fool hold his peace, he may pass for a wise man." I have known men of some learning, so intent on immediately informing a company how well cultivated their minds were, that they have passed either for insignificant pedants or stupid asses.

Verse 24. The hand of the diligent shall bear rule] And why? because by his own industry he is independent; and every such person is respected wherever found.

Verse 25. Heaviness in the heart of man maketh it stoop] Sorrow of heart, hopeless love, or a sense of God's displeasure, these prostrate the man, and he becomes a child before them.

But a good word maketh it glad.] A single good or favourable word will remove despondency: and that word, Son, be of good cheer, thy sins are forgiven thee, will instantly remove despair.

Verse 26. The righteous is more excellent than his neighbour] That is, if the neighbour be a wicked man. The spirit of the proverb lies here:—The POOR righteous man is more excellent than his sinful neighbour, though affluent and noble. The Syriac has it, The righteous deviseth good to his neighbour. A late commentator has translated it, The righteous explore their pastures. How מרעהו can be translated THEIR pastures I know not: but none of the Versions understood it in this way. The Vulgate is rather singular:—Qui negligit damnum propter amicum, justus est. "He who neglects or sustains a loss for the sake of his friend, is a just man." The Septuagint is insufferable:—The well-instructed righteous man shall be his own friend. One would hope these translators meant not exclusively:—he should love his neighbour as himself.

Verse 27. The slothful man roasteth not that which he took in hunting] Because he is a slothful man, he does not hunt for prey; therefore, gets none, and cannot roast that he may eat. There is some obscurity in the original, on which the Versions cast little light. Coverdale translates the whole verse thus:—A discreatfull man schal fynde no vauntage: but he that is content with what he hath, is more worth than golde. My old MS. Bible:—The gylful man schal not fynd wynnynge: and the substance of a man schal ben the prys of gold.

By translating רמוה rimiyah, the deceitful, instead of the slothful man, which appears to be the genuine meaning of the word, we may obtain a good sense as the Vulgate has done: "The deceitful man shall not find gain: but the substance of a (just) man shall be the price of gold." But our common Version allowing רמיה rimiyah, to be translated fraudulent, which is its proper meaning, gives the best sense. The fraudulent man roasteth not that which he took in hunting, the justice of God snatching from his mouth what he had acquired unrighteously.

But the substance of a diligent man] One who by honest industry acquires all his property,—is precious, because it has the blessing of God in it.

Verse 28. In the way of righteousness is life] חיים chayim, lives; life temporal, and life eternal.

And in the pathway thereof there is no death.] Not only do the general precepts and promises of God lead to life eternal, and promote life temporal; but every duty, every act of faith, patience of hope, and labour of love, though requiring much self-abasement, self-denial, and often an extension of corporal strength, all lead to life. For in every case, in every particular, "the path of duty is the way of safety." The latter clause is only a repetition of the sense of the former.

NOTES ON CHAP. XIII.

Verse 1. A wise son heareth his father's instruction] The child that has had a proper nurturing, will profit by his father's counsels: but the child that is permitted to fulfil its own will, and have its own way, will jest at the reproofs of its parents.

Verse 3. He that keepeth his mouth keepeth his life] How often have the foolish, headstrong, and wicked, forfeited their lives by the treasonable or blasphemous words they have spoken. The government of the tongue is a rare but useful talent.

But he that openeth wide his lips] He that puts no bounds to his loquacity, speaks on every subject, and gives his judgment and opinion on every matter. It has often been remarked that God has given us two EYES that we may SEE much; two EARS that we may HEAR much: but has given us but ONE tongue; to indicate that though we hear and see much, we should speak but little.

Verse 4. The soul of the sluggard desireth, and hath nothing] We often hear many religious people expressing a desire to have more of the Divine life, and yet never get forward in it. How is this? The reason is,—they desire, but do not stir themselves up to lay hold upon the Lord. They are always learning, but never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. They seek to enter in at the straight gate, but are not able, because they do not strive.

Verse 7. There is that maketh himself rich] That labours hard to acquire money, yet hath nothing: his excessive covetousness not being satisfied with what he possesses; nor permitting him to enjoy with comfort what he has acquired. The fable of the dog in the manger will illustrate this.

There is that maketh himself poor, yet hath great riches.] As poor, said St. Paul, yet making many rich; as having nothing, yet possessing all things. The former is the rich poor man; the latter is the poor rich man.

As the words are here in the hithpahel conjugation, which implies reflex action, or the action performed on one's self, and often signifies feigning or pretending to be what one is not, or not to be what one is; the words may be understood of persons who feign or pretend to be either richer or poorer than they really are, to accomplish some particular purpose. "There is that feigneth himself to be rich, yet hath nothing; there is that feigneth himself to be poor, yet hath great riches." Both these characters frequently occur in life.

Verse 8. The ransom of a man's life] Those who have riches have often much trouble with them: as they had much trouble to get them, so they have much trouble to keep them. In despotic countries, a rich man is often accused of some capital crime; and to save his life, though he may be quite innocent, is obliged to give up his riches: but the poor, in such countries, are put to no trouble.

Verse 9. The light of the righteous rejoiceth] They shall have that measure of prosperity which shall be best for them: but the wicked, howsoever prosperous for a time, shall be brought into desolation. Light and lamp in both cases may signify posterity. The righteous shall have a joyous posterity: but that of the wicked shall be cut off. So 1 Kings xi. 36. "And unto his son will I give one tribe, that David my servant may have a light, (נר ner, a lamp) always before me." xv. 4. "Nevertheless for David's sake did the Lord give them a lamp, to set up his son after him." See also Psa. cxxxii. 17. and several other places.

Verse 10. By pride cometh contention] Perhaps there is not a quarrel among individuals in private life, nor a war among nations, that does not proceed from pride and ambition. Neither man nor nation will be content to be less than another; and to acquire the wished for superiority all is thrown into general confusion, both in public and private life. It was to destroy this spirit of pride, that Jesus was manifested in the extreme of humility and humiliation among men. The salvation of Christ is a deliverance from pride, and a being clothed with humility. As far as we are humble, so far we are saved.

Verse 11. Wealth gotten by vanity] Wealth, that is not the result of honest industry and hard labour, is seldom permanent. All fortunes acquired by speculation, lucky hits, and ministering to the pride or luxury of others, &c. soon become dissipated. They are not gotten in the way of Providence, and have not God's blessing; and, therefore, are not permanent.

Verse 12. Hope deferred maketh the heart sick] When once a good is discovered, want of it felt, strong desire for the possession excited, and the promise of attainment made on grounds unsuspected, so that the reality of the thing and the certainty of the promise are manifest; hope posts forward to realize the blessing. Delay in the gratification pains the mind; the increase of the delay prostrates and sickens the heart: and if delay sickens the heart, ultimate disappointment kills it. But when the thing desired, hoped for, and expected comes, it is a tree of life, עץ חיים éts chayim, the tree of lives: it comforts and invigorates both body and soul. To the tree of lives, in the midst of the garden of Paradise, how frequent are the allusions in the writings of Solomon, and in other parts of the Holy Scriptures! What deep and perhaps yet unknown mysteries were in this tree!

Verse 13. Whoso despiseth the word] The revelation which God has in His mercy given to man,—shall be destroyed: for there is no other way of salvation but that which it points out.

But he that feareth the commandment] That respects it so as to obey it, walking as this revelation directs,—shall be rewarded; shall find it to be his highest interest; and shall be in peace or safety, as the Hebrew word (שלם) may be translated.

Verse 14. The law of the wise is a fountain of life] Perhaps it would be better to translate, The law is to the wise man a fountain of life. It is the same to him, as the vein of lives, מקור חיים mekor chayim, the great aorta, which transmits the blood from the heart to every part of the body. There seems to be here an allusion to the garden of Paradise,—to the tree of lives,—to the tempter,—to the baleful issue of that temptation,—and to the death entailed on man by his unwisely breaking the law of his God.

Verse 15. The way of transgressors is hard.] Never was a truer saying: most sinners have more pain and difficulty to get their souls damned, than the righteous have, with all their cross-bearing, to get to the kingdom of heaven.

Verse 17. A wicked messenger] The Septuagint:—βασιλευς θρασυς, a bold king: instead of מאלך malac, a messenger, they had read מלך melec, a king: but they are singular in this rendering; none of the other Versions have it so. He that betrays the counsels of his government, or the interests of his country, will sooner or later fall into mischief: but he that faithfully and loyally fulfils his mission, shall produce honour and safety to the commonwealth.

Verse 19. The desire accomplished] See on ver. 12.

Verse 20. He that walketh with wise men shall be wise] To walk with a person implies love and attachment; and it is impossible not to imitate those we love. So we say, "Show me his company, and I'll tell you the man." Let me know the company he keeps, and I shall easily guess his moral character.

Verse 22. A good man leaveth an inheritance] He files many a prayer in heaven in their behalf; and his good example and advices are remembered and quoted from generation to generation. Besides, whatever property he left was honestly acquired; and well gotten goods are permanent. The general experience of men shows this to be a general case; and that property ill-gotten seldom reaches to the third generation. This even the heathens observed. Hence:—

De male quæsitis non gaudet tertius hæres.

"The third generation shall not possess the goods that have been unjustly acquired."

Verse 23. That is destroyed for want of judgment.] O! how much of the poverty of the poor arises from their own want of management! They have little or no economy, and no foresight. When they get any thing, they speedily spend it; and a feast and a famine make the chief varieties of their life.

Verse 24. He that spareth his rod hateth his son] That is, if he hated him, he could not do him a greater disservice than not to correct him, when his obstinacy or disobedience requires it. We have met with this subject already, and it is a favourite with Solomon. See the places referred to in the margin.

The Rev. Mr. Holden makes some sensible observations on this passage. "By the neglect of early correction, the desires (passions) obtain ascendency; the temper becomes irascible, peevish, querulous. Pride is nourished; humility destroyed; and by the habit of indulgence the mind is incapacitated to bear with firmness and equanimity the cares and sorrows, the checks and disappointments, which flesh is heir to."

Verse 25. To the satisfying of his soul] His desires are all moderate; he is contented with his circumstances, and is pleased with the lot which God is pleased to send. The wicked, though he use all shifts and expedients to acquire earthly good, not sticking even at rapine and wrong, is frequently in real want; and always dissatisfied with his portion. A contented mind is a continual feast.

NOTES ON CHAP. XIV.

Verse 1. Every wise woman buildeth her house] By her prudent and industrious management she increases property in the family, furniture in the house, and food and raiment for her household. This is the true building of a house. The thriftless wife acts differently, and the opposite is the result. Household furniture, far from being increased, is dilapidated; and her household are ill-fed, ill-clothed, and worse educated.

Verse 3. The mouth of the foolish is a rod of pride] The reproofs of such a person are ill-judged and ill-timed; and generally are conveyed in such language as renders them not only ineffectual, but displeasing, and even irritating.

Verse 4. But much increase is by the strength of the ox.] The ox is the most profitable of all the beasts used in husbandry. Except merely for speed, he is almost in every respect superior to the horse. 1. He is longer lived. 2. Scarcely liable to any diseases. 3. He is steady, and always pulls fair in his gears. 4. He lives, fattens, and maintains his strength on what a horse will not eat; and, therefore, is supported on one third of the cost. 5. His manure is more profitable. And, 6. When he is worn out in his labour, his flesh is good for the nourishment of man, his horns of great utility, and his hide almost invaluable. It might be added, he is almost no expense in shoeing; and his gears are much more simple and much less expensive, than those of the horse. In all large farms, oxen are greatly to be preferred to horses. Have but patience with this most patient animal, and you will soon find that there is much increase in the strength and labour of the ox.

Verse 6. A scorner seeketh wisdom] I believe the scorner means in this book the man that despises the counsel of God; the infidel. Such may seek wisdom: but he never can find it, because he does not seek it where it is to be found; neither in the teaching of God's Spirit, nor in the revelation of His will.

Verse 7. When thou perceivest not—the lips of knowledge] Instead of דעת daat, knowledge, several MSS. have שקר sheker, a lie. How this reading came I cannot conjecture. The meaning of the adage is plain. Never associate with a vain empty fellow, when thou perceivest he can neither convey nor receive instruction.

Verse 8. Is to understand his way] Instead of הבין habin, to understand, הכין hakin, to DIRECT his way, is found in one MS. It makes a very good sense.

Verse 9. Fools make a mock at sin] And only fools would do so. But he that makes a sport at sinning, will find it no sport to suffer the vengeance of an eternal fire. Some learned men by their criticisms have brought this verse into embarrassments, out of which they were not able to extricate it. I believe we shall not come much nearer the sense than our present version does.

Verse 10. The heart knoweth his own bitterness] מרת נפשו marat naphsho, "the bitterness of its soul." Under spiritual sorrow, the heart feels; the soul feels; all the animal nature feels, and suffers. But when the peace of God is spoken to the troubled soul, the joy is indescribable; the whole man partakes of it. And a stranger to these religious feelings, to the travail of the soul, and to the witness of the Spirit, does not intermeddle with them; he does not understand them: indeed, they may be even foolishness to him, because they are spiritually discerned.

Verse 12. There is a way which seemeth right to a man] This may be his easily besetting sin,—the sin of his constitution,—the sin of his trade. Or it may be his own false views of religion: he may have an imperfect repentance, a false faith, a very false creed; and he may persuade himself that he is in the direct way to heaven. Many of the Papists, when they were burning the saints of God in the flames at Smithfield, thought they were doing God service! And in the late Irish massacre, the more of the Protestants they piked to death, shot, or burnt, the more they believed they deserved of God's favour and their church's gratitude! But cruelty and murder are the short road, the near way, to eternal perdition.

Verse 13. Even in laughter the heart is sorrowful] Many a time is a smile forced upon the face, when the heart is in deep distress. And it is a hard task to put on the face of mirth when a man has a heavy heart.

Verse 14. The backslider in heart shall be filled with his own ways] 1. Who is the backslider? סוג sug. 1. The man who once walked in the ways of religion, but has withdrawn from them. 2. The man who once fought manfully against the world, the devil, and the flesh; but has retreated from the battle. 3. The man who once belonged to the congregation of the saints; but is now removed from them, and is set down in the synagogue of Satan.

2. But who is the backslider in HEART? 1. Not him who was surprised and overcome by the power of temptation, and the weakness of his own heart. 2. But he who drinks down iniquity with greediness. 3. Who gives cheerful way to the bent of his own nature, and now delights in fulfilling the lusts of the flesh and of the mind. 4. Who loves sin, as before he loved godliness.

3. What are his own ways? Folly, sin, disappointment, and death; with the apprehension of the wrath of God, and the sharp twinges of a guilty conscience.

4. What is implied in being filled with his own ways? Having his soul saturated with folly, sin, and disappointment. At last ending here below in death; and then commencing an eternal existence where the fire is not quenched, and under the influence of that worm that never dieth. Alas! alas! who may abide when God doeth this!

And a good man shall be satisfied from himself.] 1. Who is the good man? (איש טוב ish tob.) 1. The man whose heart is right with God, whose tongue corresponds to his heart, and whose actions correspond to both. 2. The man who is every thing that the sinner and backslider are not.

2. He shall be satisfied from himself.—He shall have the testimony of his own concience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, he has his conversation among men.

3. He shall have God's Spirit to testify with his spirit, that he is a child of God. He hath the witness in himself, that he is born from above. The Spirit of God in his conscience, and the testimony of God in his Bible, show him that he belongs to the heavenly family. It is not from creeds or confessions of faith that he derives his satisfaction: he gets it from heaven, and it is sealed upon his heart.

Verse 16. A wise man feareth] He can never trust in himself, though he be satisfied from himself. He knows that his sufficiency is of GOD; and he has that fear that causes him to depart from evil, which is a guardian to the love he feels. Love renders him cautious; the other makes him confident. His caution leads him from sin; his confidence leads him to God.

Verse 17. He that is soon angry] קצר אפים katser aphim, "short of nostrils:" because, when a man is angry, his nose is contracted, and drawn up towards his eyes.

Dealeth foolishly] He has no time for reflection; he is hurried on by his passions, speaks like a fool, and acts like a madman.

Verse 19. The evil bow before the good] They are almost constrained to show them respect; and the wicked, who have wasted their substance with riotous living, bow before the gates of the righteous—of benevolent men, begging a morsel of bread.

Verse 20. But the rich hath many friends.] Many who speak to him the language of friendship: but if they profess friendship because he is rich, there is not one real friend among them. There is a fine saying of Cicero on this subject:—Ut hirundines festivo tempore præsto sunt, frigore pulsæ recedunt: ita falsi amici sereno tempore præsto sunt: simul atque fortunæ hiemem viderint, evolant omnes! Lib. iv. ad Herenn. "They are like swallows who fly off during the winter, and quit our cold climates; and do not return till the warm season: but as soon as the winter sets in, they are all off again." So Horace:—

Donec eris fœlix, multos numerabis amicos:
Nullus ad amissas ibit amicus opes.

"As long as thou art prosperous, thou shalt have many friends: but who of them will regard thee, when thou hast lost thy wealth!"

Verse 21. He that despiseth his neighbour, sinneth] To despise a man because he has some natural blemish is unjust, cruel, and wicked. He is not the author of his own imperfections; they did not occur through his fault or folly; and if he could, he would not retain them. It is, therefore, unjust and wicked to despise him for what is not his fault, but his misfortune.

But he that hath mercy on the poor] Who reproaches no man for his poverty or scanty intellect, but divides his bread with the hungry, happy is he. The blessing of God and of them that were ready to perish, shall come upon him.

Verse 23. In all labour there is profit] If a man work at his trade, he gains by it; if he cultivate the earth, it will yield an increase; and in proportion as he labours, so will be his profit: but he who talks much labours little. And a man of words is seldom a man of deeds. Less talk and more work, is one of our own ancient advices.

Verse 24. But the foolishness of fools is folly] The Targum reads, The honour of fools is folly. The fool, from his foolishness, produces acts of folly. This appears to be the meaning.

that the fear of God is highly consistent with the strongest confidence in His mercy and goodness.

Verse 27. The fear of the LORD is a fountain of life] מקור חיים mekor chayim, the vein of lives. Another allusion to the great aorta which carries the blood from the heart to all the extremities of the body. Of this phrase, and the tree of lives, Solomon is peculiarly fond. See on chap. iv. 23.; x. 12.

Verse 28. In the multitude of people] It is the interest of every state to promote marriage by every means that is just and prudent; and to discourage, disgrace, and debase celibacy; to render bachelors incapable, after a given age, of all public employments: and to banish nunneries and monasteries from all parts of their dominions;—they have ever, from their invention, contributed more to vice than virtue; and are positively point blank against the law of God.

Verse 29. That is hasty of spirit] קצר רוח ketsar ruach, the short of spirit; one that is easily irritated; and, being in a passion, he is agitated so as to be literally short of breath. Here put in opposition to ארך אפים erec aphim, long of nostrils; see on ver 17., and of the same import with St. Paul's μακροθυμια, long-suffering, long-mindedness. See on Eph. iv. 2.

Verse 30. A sound heart is the life of the flesh] A healthy state of the blood, and a proper circulation of that stream of life, is the grand cause in the hand of God, of health and longevity. If the heart be diseased, life cannot be long continued.

Verse 31. He that oppresseth the poor reproacheth his Maker] Because the poor, or comparatively poor, are, in the order of God, a part of the inhabitants of the earth; and every man who loves God will show mercy to the poor, for with this God is peculiarly delighted. The poor have we ever with us, for the excitement and exercise of those benevolent, compassionate, and merciful feelings, without which men had been brutes.

Verse 32. The wicked is driven away in his wickedness] He does not leave life cheerfully. Poor soul! Thou hast no hope in the other world, and thou leavest the present with the utmost regret! Thou wilt not go off:—but God will drive thee.

But the righteous hath hope in his death.] He rejoices to depart and be with Christ: to him death is gain; he is not reluctant to go—he flies at the call of God.

Verse 34. But sin is a reproach to any people.] I am satified this is not the sense of the original, וחסר לאמים חטאת ve-chesed le ummim chatath; which would be better rendered, And mercy is a sin-offering for the people. The Vulgate has, Miseros autem facit populos peccatum, sin makes the people wretched. Ελασσονουσι δε φυλας αμαρτιαι:—Septuagint. But sins lessen the tribes. So also the Syriac and Arabic. The plain meaning of the original seems to be, a national disposition to mercy appears in the sight of God as a continual sin-offering. Not that it atones for the sin of the people: but, as a sin-offering is pleasing in the sight of the God of mercy, so is a merciful disposition in a nation. This view of the verse is consistent with the purest doctrines of free grace. And what is the true sense of the words, we should take at all hazards and consequences: we shall never trench upon a sound creed by a literal interpretation of God's words. No nation has more of this spirit than the British nation. It is true, we have too many sanguinary laws: but the spirit of the people is widely different.

If any one will contend for the Common Version, he has my consent; and I readily agree in the saying, Sin is the reproach of any people. It is the curse and scandal of man.

Verse 35. The king's favour is toward a wise servant] The king should have an intelligent man for his minister; a man of deep sense, sound judgment, and of a feeling, merciful, disposition. He who has not the former will plunge the nation into difficulties; and he who has not the latter will embark her in disastrous wars. Most wars are occasioned by bad ministers,—men of blood, who cannot be happy but in endeavouring to unchain the spirit of discord. Let every humane heart pray, Lord, scatter thou the people who delight in war! Amen—so be it. Selah!

NOTES ON CHAP. XV.

Verse 1. A soft answer] Gentleness will often disarm the most furious, where positive derangement has not taken place; one angry word will always beget another, for the disposition of one spirit always begets its own likeness in another: thus kindness produces kindness, and rage produces rage. Universal experience confirms this proverb.

Verse 2. Useth knowledge aright] This is very difficult to know:—when to speak, and when to be silent; what to speak, and what to leave unspoken; the manner that is best, and most suitable to the occasion, the subject, the circumstances, and the person. All these are difficulties, often even to the wisest men. Even wise counsel may be foolishly given.

Verse 3. The eyes of the LORD are in every place] Not only He sees all things, by His omnipresence, but His providence is every where. And if the consideration that his eye is in every place, have a tendency to appal those whose hearts are not right before him, and who seek for privacy that they may commit iniquity; yet the other consideration, that His providence is every where, has a great tendency to encourage the upright, and all who may be in perilous or distressing circumstances.

Verse 4. A wholesome tongue is a tree of life] Here again is an allusion to the paradisaical tree, עץ חיים ets chayim, "The tree of lives."

Verse 8. The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination] Even the most sedulous attendance on the ordinances of God, and performance of the ceremonies of religion, is an abomination to the Lord, if the heart be not right with Him, and the observance do not flow from a principle of pure devotion. No religious acts will do in place of holiness to the Lord.

The prayer of the upright is his delight.] What a motive to be upright; and what a motive to the upright to pray. But who is the upright? The man who is weary of sin, and sincerely desires the salvation of God; as well as he who has already received a measure of that salvation. Hence it is said in the next verse, He loveth him that followeth after righteousness.

Verse 11. Hell and destruction] שאול ואבדון Sheol veabaddon. Hades, the invisible world, the place of separate spirits till the resurrection; and, Abaddon, the place of torment; are ever under the eye and control of the Lord.

Verse 19. The way of the slothful man is as a hedge of thorns] Because he is slothful, he imagines ten thousand difficulties in the way which cannot be surmounted: but they are all the creatures of his own imagination; that imagination being formed by his sloth.

Verse 25. The house of the proud] Families of this description are seldom continued long. The Lord hates pride; and those that will not be humble He will destroy.

Verse 27. He that is greedy of gain] He who will be rich troubleth his own house. He is a torment to himself and his family, by his avariciousness and penury; and a curse to those with whom he deals.

But he that hateth gifts] Whatever is given to pervert judgment.

Verse 28. The heart of the righteous studieth to answer] His tongue never runs before his wit: he never speaks rashly, and never unadvisedly; because he studies, ponders his thoughts and his words.

Verse 29. The LORD is far from the wicked] He is neither near to hear, nor near to help.

Verse 30. The light of the eyes rejoiceth the heart] Nature and art are continually placing before our view a multitude of the most resplendent images; each of which is calculated to give pleasure. The man who has a correct judgment, and an accurate eye, may not only amuse, but instruct himself endlessly, by the beauties of nature and art.

Verse 33. The fear of the LORD] See note on chap. i. 7. Much is spoken concerning this fear;—1. It is the beginning of wisdom. 2. It is also the beginning of knowledge. And, 3. It is the instruction of wisdom. Wisdom derives its most important lessons from the fear of God. He who fears God much, is well taught.

And before honour is humility.] That is, few persons ever arrive at honour who are not humble; and those who from low life have arisen to places of trust and confidence, have been remarkable for humility. We may rest assured that the providence of God will never elevate a proud man: such God beholds afar off.

NOTES ON CHAP. XVI.

Verse 1. The preparations of the heart in man] The Hebrew is, לאדם מערכי לב le-adam maêrcey leb, which is literally, "To man are the dispositions of the heart: but from the Lord is the answer of the tongue." Man proposes his wishes: but God answers as He thinks proper. The former is the free offspring of the heart of man, the latter the free volition of God. Man may think as he pleases, and ask as he lists: but God will give, or not give, as He thinks proper. This I believe to be the meaning of this shamefully tortured passage, so often vexed by critics, their doubts, and indecisions. God help them! for they seldom have the faculty of making any subject plainer! The text does not say that the preparations, rather dispositions or arrangements, מערכי maêrcey, of the heart, as well as the answer of the tongue, is from the Lord; though it is generally understood so: but it states that the dispositions or schemes of the heart (are) man's: but the answer of the tongue (is) the Lord's. And so the principal Versions have understood it.

Hominis est animam præparare; et Domini gubernare linguam.—VULGATE. "It is the part of man to prepare his soul: it is the prerogative of the Lord to govern the tongue." מן בר נש תריעתא דלבא ומן ממללא דלישנא min bar nash tarai-toh de libba; u-min yeya, mamalela de-lishana.—CHALDEE. "From the son of man is the counsel of the heart; and from the Lord is the word of the tongue." The SYRIAC is the same. Καρδια ανδρος λογιζεσθω δικαια, ινα υπο του Θεου διορθωθη τα διαβηματα αυτη.—SEPTUAGINT. "The heart of man deviseth righteous things, that its goings may be directed by God."

The ARABIC takes great latitude. "All the works of a humble man are clean before the Lord: and the wicked shall perish in an evil day." Of a man is to maken redy the inwitt: and of the Lord to governe the tunge.—Old MS. Bible.

A man maye well purpose a thinge in his harte: but the answere of the tonge cometh of the Lorde.—COVERDALE.

date, and CARDMARDEN's of 1566, follow Coverdale. The Bible printed by Rob. Barker, at Cambridge, 4to., 1615, commonly called the Breeches Bible, reads the text thus:—"The preparations of the hart are in man: but the answere of the tongue is of the Lord." So that it appears that our first, and all our ancient Versions, understood the text in the same way; and which, independently of critical torture, is the genuine meaning of the Hebrew text. That very valuable Version published in Italian, at Geneva, fol. 1562, translates thus:—Le dispositioni del cuore sono de l'huomo: ma la risposta del la lingua è dal Signore. "The dispositions of the heart are of man: but the answer of the tongue is from the Lord."

The modern European Versions, as far as I have seen, are the same. And when the word dispositions, arrangements, schemes, is understood to be the proper meaning of the Hebrew term, as shown above, the sense is perfectly sound; for there may be a thousand schemes and arrangements made in the heart of man, which he may earnestly wish God to bring to full effect, that are neither for his good, nor God's glory; and therefore it is his interest that God has the answer in His own power. At the same time, there is no intimation here that man can prepare his own heart to wait upon, or pray, unto the Lord; or that from the human heart any thing good can come, without Divine influence: but, simply, that it may have many schemes and projects which it may beg God to accomplish, that are not of God, but from itself. Hence our own proverb,—Man proposes, but God disposes. I have entered the more particularly into the consideration of this text, because some are very strenuous in the support of our vicious reading, from a supposition that the other supports the heterodox opinion of man's sufficiency, to think any thing as of himself. But while they deserve due credit for their orthodox caution, they will see that no such imputation can fairly lie against the plain grammatical translation of the Hebrew text.

Verse 3. Commit thy works unto the LORD] See that what thou doest is commanded; and then begin, continue, and end, all in His name; and thy thoughts shall be established. These schemes or arrangements, though formed in the heart, are agreeable to the Divine will; and, therefore, shall be established. His thoughts, his meditations, are right; and he begins and ends his work in the Lord; and, therefore, all issues well.

Verse 4. The LORD hath made all things for himself] He has so framed and executed every part of His creation, that it manifests His wisdom, power, goodness, and truth.

Even the wicked for the day of evil] גם רשע ליום רעה vigom rashâ leyom raâh. The whole verse is translated by the Chaldee thus:—All the works of the LORD are for those who obey him; and the wicked is reserved for the evil day.[y]

As רעה raâh, literally signifies to feed, it has been conjectured that the clause might be read, yea, even the wicked he feeds by the day, or daily.

If we take the words as they stand in our present Version, they mean no more than what is expressed by the Chaldee and Syriac; and, as far as we can learn from their present confused state, by the Septuagint and Arabic, that the wicked are reserved for the day of punishment. Coverdale has given, as he generally does, a good sense:—The Lorde doth all thinges for his owne sake; yea, and when he kepeth the ungodly for the daye of wrath. He does not make the wicked or ungodly man: but when man has made himself such, even then, God bears with him. But if he repent not, when the measure of his iniquity is filled up, he shall fall under the wrath of God his Maker.

Verse 5. Though hand join in hand, he shall not be unpunished.] The day of wrath shall come on the wicked, whatever means he may take to avoid it. See chap. xi. 21.

Verse 6. By mercy and truth iniquity is purged] This may be misunderstood, as if a man, by showing mercy and acting according to truth, could atone for his own iniquity. The Hebrew text is not ambiguous, בחסד ואמת יכפר עון be-chesed ve-emith yecapher âvon; By mercy and truth he shall atone for iniquity. He, God, by His mercy, in sending His Son Jesus into the world, shall make an atonement for iniquity, according to His truth, the word which He declared by His holy prophets since the world began. Or, if we retain the present Version, and follow the points in יכבר yecupher, reading "iniquity is purged," or "atoned for," the sense is unexceptionable, when we refer the mercy and the truth to GOD. But what an awful comment is that of Dom Calmet, in which he expresses not only his own opinion, but the staple doctrine of his own church, the Romish. The reader shall have his own words. "L'iniquité le rachete par la misericorde et la verité. On expie ses pechéz par des œuvres de misericorde envers le prochein, par la clemence, par la douceur, par compassion, par les aumônes; et par la verité, par la fidelité, la bonne foi, la droiture, l'equité dans le commerce. Voyez Prov. iii. 3.; xiv. 22.; xx. 28." "Ini- quity is redeemed by mercy and truth. We expiate our sins by works of mercy towards our neighbour; by clemency, by kindness, by compassion, and by alms: and by truth, by fidelity, by trust-worthiness, by uprightness, and by equity in commerce." If this be so, why was Jesus incarnated?—why His agony and bloody sweat—His cross and passion—His death and burial—His resurrection and ascension?—Was it only to supply a sufficient portion of merit for those who had neglected to make a fund for themselves? Is the guilt of sin so small in the sight of Divine justice, that a man can atone for it by manifesting good dispositions towards his neighbours, by giving some alms, and not doing those things for which he might be hanged?—Why then did God make such a mighty matter of the redemption of the world? Why send His Son at all? An angel would have been more than sufficient; yea, even a sinner who had been converted by his own compassion, alms-deeds, &c. would have been sufficient. And is not this the very doctrine of this most awfully fallen and corrupt church? Has she not provided a fund of merit in her saints, of what was more than requisite for themselves, that it might be given, or sold out, to those who had not enough of their own? Now this is the doctrine of the Romish Church—grossly absurd, and destructively iniquitous! And because men cannot believe this, cannot believe these monstrosities, that church will burn them to ashes. Ruthless church; degenerated, fallen, corrupt, and corrupting! once a praise, now a curse, in the earth. Thank the blessed God, whose blood alone can expiate sin, that he has a church upon the earth; and that the Romish is not the Catholic church, and that it has not that political power by which it would subdue all things to itself.

Verse 7. When a man's ways please the LORD] God is the Guardian and defence of all that fear and love Him. And it is truly astonishing to see how wondrously God works in their behalf; raising them up friends, and turning their enemies into friends.

Verse 9. A man's heart deviseth his way] This is precisely the same sentiment as that contained in the first verse, on the true meaning of which so much has been already said.

Verse 10. A divine sentence] קסם kesem, "divination," as the margin has it. Is the meaning as follows?—Though divination were applied to a righteous king's lips, to induce him to punish the innocent and spare the guilty, yet would not his lips transgress in judgment; so firmly attached is he to God, and so much is he under the Divine care and influence. Whatever judgment such an one pronounces, it may be considered as a decision from God.

Verse 11. All the weights of the bag are his] Alluding, probably, to the standard weights laid up in a bag in the sanctuary, and to which all weights in common use in the land were to be referred, in order to ascertain whether they were just: but some think the allusion is to the weights carried about by merchants in their girdles, by which they weigh the money, silver and gold, which they take in exchange for their merchandise. As the Chinese take no coin but gold and silver by weight, they carry about with them a sort of small steel-yard, by which they weigh those metals taken in exchange.

Verse 12. It is an abomination to kings, &c.] In all these verses the wise man refers to monarchical government rightly administered. And the proverbs on this subject are all plain.

Verse 16. How much better—to get wisdom than gold?] Who believes this, though spoken by the wisest of men, under Divine inspiration?

Verse 17. The highway of the upright] The upright man is ever departing from evil; this is his common road: and by keeping on in this way, his soul is preserved.

Verse 18. Pride goeth before destruction] Here pride is personified: it walks along, and has destruction in its train.

And a haughty spirit before a fall.] Another personification. A haughty spirit marches on, and ruin comes after.

In this verse we find the following Masoritic note in most Hebrew Bibles, חצי הספר chatsi ha-sepher: "the middle of the book." This verse is the middle verse; and the first clause makes the middle of the words of the book of Proverbs.

Verse 22. Understanding is a well-spring of life] מקור חיים mekor chayim; another allusion to the artery that carries the blood from the heart to distribute it to all the extremities of the body.

Verse 23. The heart of the wise teacheth his mouth] He has a wise heart: he speaks as it dictates, and therefore his speeches are all speeches of wisdom.

Verse 24. Pleasant words are as a honeycomb] The honey of which is sweeter than that which has been expressed from it, and has a much finer flavour before it has come in contact with the atmospheric air.

Verse 25. There is a way that seemeth right] This whole verse is precisely the same as that chap. xiv. 12.

Verse 26. He that laboureth] No thanks to a man for his labour and industry: if he do not work, he must starve.

Verse 27. An ungodly man diggeth up evil] How will the following suit:—

Effodiuntur opes irritamenta malorum.

"Wealth, the incitement to all evil, is digged up out of the earth."

A wicked man labours as much to bring about an evil purpose, as the quarry-man does to dig up stones.

In his lips—a burning fire.] His words are as inflammable in producing strife and contention among his neighbours, as fire is in igniting dry stubble.

Verse 30. He shutteth his eyes to devise, &c.] He meditates deeply upon ways and means to commit sin. He shuts his eyes that he may shut out all other ideas, that his whole soul may be in this.

Verse 31. The hoary head is a crown of glory] The latter part of the verse is very well added; for many a sinner has a hoary head!

Verse 32. He that ruleth his spirit, than he that taketh a city] It is much easier to subdue an enemy without, than one within. There have been many kings who have conquered many nations, and were slaves to their own passions. Alexander, who conquered the world, was a slave to intemperate anger; and in a fit of it slew Clitus, the best and most intimate of all his friends, and one whom he loved beyond all others.

The spirit of this maxim is so self-evident, that most nations have formed similar proverbs. The classical reader will remember the following in HOR. Odar. lib. ii. Od. 2.

Latiùs regnes avidum domando
Spiritum, quàm si Libyam remotis
Gadibus jungas, et uterque Pœnus Serviat uni.

"By virtue's precepts to control
The furious passions of the soul
Is over wider realms to reign,
Unenvied monarch, than if Spain
You could to distant Libya join,
And both the Carthages were thine." FRANCIS.

And the following from OVID is not less striking.

——Fortior est qui se, quam qui fortissima vincit
Mœnia, nec virtus altius iræ potest.

"He is more of a hero who has conquered himself, than he who has taken the best fortified city."

Beyond this self-conquest, the highest courage cannot extend; nor did their philosophy teach any thing more sublime.

Verse 33. The lot is cast into the lap] On the lot, see the note on Numb. xxvi. 55. How far it may be proper now to put difficult matters to the lot, after earnest prayer and supplication, I cannot say. Formerly it was both lawful and efficient: for, after it was solemnly cast, the decision was taken as coming immediately from the Lord. It is still practised, and its use allowed even by writers on civil law. But those who need most to have recourse to the lot are those who have not piety to pray, nor faith to trust to God, for a positive decision. The lot should never be resorted to in indifferent matters: they should be those of the greatest importance, in which it appears impossible for human prudence or foresight to determine. In such cases, the lot is an appeal to God; and He disposes of it according to His goodness, mercy, and truth. The result, therefore, cannot be fortuitous.

NOTES ON CHAP. XVII.

Verse 1. Better is a dry morsel] Peace and contentment, and especially domestic peace, are beyond all other blessings.

Verse 3. The fining pot is for silver] When silver is mixed, or suspected to be mixed with base metal, it must be subjected to such a test as the cupel to purify it. And gold also must be purified by the action of the fire. So God tries hearts. He sends afflictions which penetrate the soul, and give a man to see his state, so that he may apply to the spirit of judgment, and the spirit of burning, to destroy what cannot stand the fire, to separate and burn up all dross.

Verse 4. A wicked doer giveth heed] An evil heart is disposed, and ever ready to receive evil, and liars delight in lies.

Verse 5. He that is glad at calamities] He who is pleased to hear of the misfortunes of another will, in the course of God's just government, have his own multiplied.

Verse 7. Excellent speeech becometh not a fool] This proverb is suitable to those who affect in public speaking fine language, which neither comports with their ordinary conversation, nor with their education. Often fine words are injudiciously brought in; and are as unbecoming and irrelevant as a cart-wheel among clock-work.

Verse 8. A gift is as a precious stone] It both enriches and ornaments. In the latter clause, there is an evident allusion to cut stones. Whithersoever you turn them, they reflect the light, are brilliant, and beautiful.

Verse 10. A reproof entereth more] Though the rod judiciously applied, is a great instrument of knowledge; yet it is of no use where incurable dulness, or want of intellect, prevails. Besides, there are generous dispositions on which counsel will work more than stripes.

Verse 12. Let a bear robbed of her whelps] At which times such animals are peculiarly fierce. See the note on 2 Sam. xvii. 8.

Verse 13. Whoso rewardeth evil for good] Here is a most awful warning. As many persons are guilty of the sin of ingratitude, and of paying kindness with unkindness, and good with evil; it is no wonder we find so much wretchedness among men; for God's word cannot fail: evil shall not depart from the houses and families of such persons.

Verse 14. The beginning of strife is as when one letteth out water] As soon as the smallest breach is made in the dike or dam, the water begins to press from all parts towards the breach; the resistance becomes too great to be successfully opposed, so that dikes and all are speedily swept away. Such is the beginning of contention, quarrels, lawsuits, &c.

Leave off contention before it be meddled with.] As you see what an altercation must lead to; therefore, do not begin it. Before it be mingled together, התגלע hithgalâ, before the spirits of the contending parties come into conflict, are joined together in battle, and begin to deal out mutual reflections and reproaches. When you see that the dispute is likely to take this turn, leave it off immediately.

Verse 17. A friend loveth at all times] Equally in adversity as in prosperity. And a brother, according to the ties and interests of consanguinity, is born to support and comfort a brother in distress.

Verse 18. Striketh hands] Striking each other's hands, or shaking hands, was anciently, the form in concluding a contract. See notes on chap. vi. 1.

Verse 19. He that exalteth his gate] In different parts of Palestine they are obliged to have the doors of their courts and houses very low, not more than three feet high, to prevent the Arabs, who scarcely ever leave the backs of their horses, from riding into the courts and houses, and spoiling their goods. He then who, through pride and ostentation, made a high gate, exposed himself to destruction; and is said here to seek it, because he must know that this must be a necessary consequence of exalting his gate. But, although the above is fact, yet possibly gate is here taken for the mouth: and the exalting of the gate may mean proud boasting, and arrogant speaking; such as has a tendency to kindle and maintain strife. And this interpretation seems to agree better with the scope of the context than the above.

Verse 22. A merry heart doeth good like a medicine] Instead of גהה gehah, a medicine, it appears that the Chaldee and Syriac had read in their copies, גוה gevah, the body, as they translate in this way. This makes the apposition here more complete. "A merry heart doth good to the body: but a broken spirit drieth the bones." Nothing has such a direct tendency to ruin health and waste out life as grief, anxiety, fretfulness, bad tempers, &c. All these work death.

Verse 23. A gift out of the bosom] Out of his purse; as in their bosoms, above their girdles, the Asiatics carry their purses. I have often observed this.

Verse 24. Are in the ends of the earth.] Wisdom is within the sight and reach of every man: but he whose desires are scattered abroad, who is always aiming at impossible things, or is of an unsteady disposition, is not likely to find it.

Verse 26. Nor to strike princes for equity.] To fall out with the ruler of the people; and, under pretence of his not being a just or equitable governor, to take off his head; is

NOTES ON CHAP. XVIII.

Verse 1. Through desire a man, having separated himself] The original is difficult and obscure. The Vulgate, Septuagint, and Arabic, read as follows:—"He who wishes to break with his friend, and seeks occasions or pretences, shall at all times be worthy of blame."

My old MS. Bible translates, Occasioun seeketh that wil go awei fro a freend: at al tyme he schal ben variable.

Coverdale thus:—Who so hath pleasure to sowe discorde, piketh a quarrel in every thinge.

Bible by Barker, 1615. "Fro the desire thereof he will separate himself to seeke it, and occupie himself in all wisdome." Which has in the margin the following note,—"He that loveth wisdom will separate himself from all impediments, and give himself wholly to seek it."

The Hebrew לתאוה יבקש נפרד בכל תושיה יתגלע le-taavah yebbakesh niphrad, be-col tushiyah yithgalâ. The nearest translation to the words is perhaps the following:—"He who is separated shall seek the desired thing, (i. e. the object of his desire) and shall intermeddle (mingle himself) with all realities, or all essential knowledge." He finds that he can make little progress in the investigation of Divine and natural things, if he have much to do with secular or trifling matters: he therefore separates himself as well from unprofitable pursuits, as from frivolous company; and then enters into the spirit of his pursuit, is not satisfied with superficial observances; but examines the substance and essence, as far as possible, of those things which have been the objects of his desire. This appears to me the best meaning; the Reader may judge for himself.

Verse 2. But that his heart may discover itself.] It is a fact that most vain and foolish people are never satisfied in company, but in showing their own nonsense and emptiness. But this verse may be understood as confirming the view already given of the preceding; and may be translated thus:—"But a fool doth not delight in understanding, though it should even manifest itself:—so I understand כי אם בהתגלות ki im be-hith-galoth. The separated person seeks understanding in every hidden thing; and feels his toil well repaid when he finds it, even after the most painful and expensive search: the other regards it not, though its secret springs should be laid open to him without toil or expense.

Verse 3. When the wicked cometh, &c.] Would it not be better to read this verse thus? When the wicked cometh, contempt cometh; and with ignominy cometh reproach. A wicked cometh also contempt, and with ignominy reproach.

4 [a] The words of a man's mouth are as deep waters, and [b] the well-spring of wisdom as a flowing brook.

5 [c] It is not good to accept the person of the wicked, to overthrow the righteous in judgment.

6 A fool's lips enter into contention, and his mouth calleth for strokes.

7 [d] A fool's mouth is his destruction, and his lips are the snare of his soul.

8 [e] The words of a [f] talebearer are [g] as wounds, and they go down into the [h] innermost parts of the belly.

9 He also that is slothful in his work is [i] brother to him that is a great waster.

man is despised even by the wicked. He who falls under ignominy, falls under reproach.

Verse 4. The words of a man's mouth] That is, the wise sayings of a wise man, are like deep waters;—howsoever much you pump or draw off, you do not appear to lessen them.

The well-spring of wisdom] Where there is a sound understanding, and a deep well-informed mind, its wisdom and its counsels are an incessant stream, נקיר חכמה nekor chocmah, "the vein of wisdom," ever throwing out its healthy streams; but מקור חיים mekor chayim, "the vein of LIVES," is the reading of eight of Kennicott and De Rossi's MSS. and is countenanced by the Septuagint,—πηγη ζωης, the fountain of life. And so the Arabic, عين حياة This is the more likely to be the true reading, because the figure of the heart propelling the blood through the great aorta, to send it to all parts of the animal system, is a favourite with Solomon, as it was with his father David. See the note on Psa. xxxvi. 9. Prov. x. 11, &c. &c.

Verse 5. To accept the person of the wicked] We must not, in judicial cases, pay any attention to a man's riches, influence, friends, offices, &c.: but judge the case according to its own merits. But when the wicked rich man opposes and oppresses the poor righteous, then all those things should be utterly forgotten.

Verse 8. The words of a talebearer] דברי נרגן dibrey nirgan; "the words of the whisperer," the busy-body, the busy meddling croaker. Verba bilinguis, "the words of the double-tongued."—Vulgate. The wordes of the twisel tunge.—Old MS. Bible. The words of a slaunderer.—Coverdale.

The words of the deceiver, the fair spoken, deeply malicious man, though they appear soft and gracious, are wounds deeply injurious.

The original word כמתלהמים ke-mith-lahamim; they are as soft or simple, or undesigning. But Schultens gives another meaning. He observes that لهم lahamah, in Arabic, signifies to "swallow down quickly or greedily." Such words are like dainties, eagerly swallowed, because inviting to the taste; like gingerbread, apparently gilded over, though with Dutch leaf, which is a preparation of copper—or sweetmeats powdered over with red candied seeds, which are thus formed by red lead—both deeply ruinous to the tender bowels of the poor little innocents; but because of their sweetness, and inviting colour, greedily swallowed down. This makes a good reading; and agrees with the latter clause of the verse, they go down into the innermost parts of the belly.

Verse 9. He also that is slothful] A slothful man neglects his work, and the materials go to ruin: the waster,—he destroys the materials. They are both destroyers.

Verse 10. The name of the LORD is a strong tower] The name of the Lord may be taken for the Lord himself; He is a strong tower, a refuge, and place of complete safety, to all that trust in Him. What a strong fortress is to the besieged, the like is God to His persecuted, tempted, afflicted followers.

Verse 11. The rich man's wealth] See chap. x. 15.

Verse 12. Before destruction] See on chap. xi. 2. and xvi. 18.

Verse 13. He that answereth a matter] This is a common case: before a man can tell out his story, another will begin his. Before a man has made his response, the other wishes to confute piece-meal, though he has had his own speech already. This is foolishness to them. They are ill-bred. There are many also that give judgment before they hear the whole of the cause; and express an opinion before they hear the state of the case. How absurd, stupid, and foolish!

Verse 14. The spirit of a man will sustain] A man sustains the ills of his body, and the trials of life, by the strength and energy of his mind. But if the mind be wounded,—if this be cast down,—if slow-consuming care and grief have shot the dagger into the soul, what can then sustain the man! Nothing but the unseen God. Therefore, let the afflicted pray. A man's own spirit has, in general, sufficient fortitude to bear up under the unavoidable trials of life: but when the conscience is wounded by sin, and the soul is dying by iniquity—who can lift him up? God alone! for salvation is of the Lord.

Verse 16. A man's gift maketh room for him] It is, and ever has been, a base and degrading practice in Asiatic countries, to bring a gift or present to the great man into whose presence you come. Without this, there is no audience—no favour—no justice. This arose from the circumstance that men must not approach the altar of God without an offering. Potentates wishing to be considered as petty gods, demanded a similar homage:—

Munera crede mihi, capiunt hominesque Deosque; Placatur donis Jupiter ipse suis. OVID.

"Believe me, gifts prevail much with both gods and men: even Jupiter himself is pleased with his own offerings."

Verse 17. He that is first in his own cause] Any man may, in the first instance, make out a fair tale; because he has the choice of circumstances and arguments. But when the neighbour cometh and searcheth him, he examines all, dissects all, swears and cross-questions every witness; and brings out truth and fact.

Verse 18. The lot causeth contentions to cease] See note on chap. xvi. 33.

Verse 19. A brother offended is harder to be won than a strong city] Almost all the Versions agree in the following reading:—"A brother assisted by a brother, is like a fortified city; and their decisions are like the bars of a city." Coverdale is both plain and terse:—"The unitie of brethren is stronger then a castell, and they that holde together are like the barre of a palace." The fable of the dying father, his sons, and the bundle of faggots, illustrates this proverb. Unity among brethren makes them invincible; small things grow great by concord. If we take the words according to the common Version, we see them express, what, alas! we know to be too generally true:—that when brothers fall out, it is with extreme difficulty that they can be reconciled. And fraternal enmities are generally strong and inveterate.

Verse 20. With the fruit of his mouth] Our own words frequently shape our good or evil fortune in life.

Verse 21. Death and life are in the power of the tongue] This may apply to all men. Many have lost their lives by their tongue; and some have saved their lives by it: but it applies most forcibly to public pleaders; on many of their tongues, hangs life or death.

Verse 22. Whoso findeth a wife findeth a good thing] Marriage, with all its troubles and embarrassments, is a blessing from God; and there are few cases where a wife of any sort, is not better than none; because celibacy is an evil: for God Himself hath said, It is not good for man to be alone. None of the Versions except the Chaldee is pleased with the naked simplicity of the Hebrew text, hence they all add, good,—He that findeth a good wife findeth a good thing; and most people who have not deeply considered the subject think the assertion, without this qualification, is absurd. Some copies of the Targum, and apparently one of Kennicott's MSS., have the addition טובה tobah, good: but these would be an authority too slender to justify the changing the Hebrew text; yet Houbigant, Kennicott, and other able critics, argue for it. The Septuagint is not satisfied without an addition:—"But he who puts away a good wife, puts away a good thing: and he that retains an adulteress, is a fool and wicked." In this addition, the Vulgate, Syriac, and Arabic, agree with the Septuagint. The Hebrew text, as it stands, teaches a general doctrine by a simple but general proposition. "He that findeth a wife findeth a good thing."—So St. Paul, Marriage is honourable in all. Had the world been left, in this respect, to the unbridled propensities of man, in what a horrible state would society have been! If indeed society could have existed, or civilization have taken place, if marriage had not obtained among men. As to good wives and bad wives, they are relatively so, in general: and most of them that have been bad afterward, have been good at first; and we well know the best things may deteriorate; and the world generally allows that where there are matrimonial contentions, there are faults on both sides.

Verse 24. A man that hath friends must show himself friendly] Love begets love; and love requires love as its recompense. If a man do not maintain a friendly carriage, he cannot expect to retain his friends. Friendship is a good plant: but it requires cultivation to make it grow.

There is a kind of factitious friendship in the world that, to show oneself friendly in it, is very expensive, and in every way utterly unprofitable: it is maintained by expensive parties, feasts, &c. where the table groans with dainties, and where the conversation is either jejune and insipid, or calumnious;—backbiting, talebearing, and scandal, being the general topics of the different squads in company.

There is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother.] In many cases the genuine friend has shown more attachment, and rendered greater benefits, than thenatural brother. Some apply this to God, others to Christ: but the text has no such meaning.

But critics and commentators are not agreed on the translation of this verse. The original is condensed and obscure. איש רעים להת רועע ish reîm le-hith roêâ, or roeâng, as some would read, who translate:—A man of friends may ring again; i. e. he may boast and mightily exult. But there is a friend, אהב oheb, a lover; that sticketh closer, דבק dabak, is glued or cemented; מאח me-ach, beyond or more than a brother. The former will continue during prosperity: but the latter continues closely united to his friend, even in the most disastrous circumstances.

Hence that maxim of Cicero so often repeated, and so well known:—

Amicus certus in re incertâ cernitur.

"In doubtful times, the genuine friend is known."

A late commentator has translated the verse thus:

"The man that hath many friends, is ready to be ruined:
But there is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother."
HOLDEN.

"A frende that delyteth in love, doth a man more frendship, and sticketh faster unto him, than a brother."—Coverdale.

"A man ampable to felowschip, more a freend schal ben thanne a brother."—Old MS. Bible. The two last verses in this chapter, and the two first of the next, are wanting in the Septuagint and Arabic.

These are the principal varieties; out of them the Reader may choose. I have already given my opinion.

And he that hasteth with his feet sinneth.] And this will be the case with him who is not divinely instructed. A child does nothing cautiously, because it is uninstructed;—a savage is also rash and precipitate, till experience instruct him. A man who has not the knowledge of God is incautious, rash, headstrong, and precipitate: and hence he sinneth; he is continually missing the mark, and wounding his own soul.

Verse 3. The foolishness of man] Most men complain of cross providences, because they get into straits and difficulties through the perverseness of their ways: and thus they fret against God; whereas, in every instance, they are the causes of their own calamities. O how inconsistent is man!

Verse 4. The poor is separated from his neighbour] Because he has the "disease of all shunned poverty."

Verse 7. Do hate him] They shun him as they do the person that they hate. They neither hate him positively, nor love him: they disregard him; they will have nothing to do with him. שנא sana, signifies not only to hate, but to show a less degree of love to one than another. So Jacob loved Rachel, but hated Leah; showed her less affection than he did to Rachel.

Verse 10. Delight is not seemly for a fool] תענוג taânug, splendid or luxurious living, rank, equipage, &c. These sit ill on a fool, though he be by birth a lord.

For a servant to have rule over princes] I pity the king who delivers himself into the hands of his own ministers. Such a one loses his character; and cannot be respected by his subjects, or rather their subjects. But it is still worse when a person of mean extraction is raised to the throne, or to any place of power; he is generally cruel and tyrannical.

Verse 11. It is his glory to pass over a transgression.] No, say what are termed the laws of honour. "He must meet me as a gentleman: I must have his blood, let God say what He will." O poor dastardly coward! thou canst not bear the reproach of poor flimsy paltry fellows who ridicule thee, because thou hast refused to commit murder! Such laws should be put down by law; and the man that gives a challenge should be hanged, because he intends to commit murder.

Verse 12. The king's wrath is as the roaring of a lion] There is nothing more dreadful than the roaring of this tyrant of the forest. At the sound of it all other animals tremble, flee away, hide themselves. The king who is above law, and rules without law, and whose will is his own law, is like the lion. This is strongly descriptive of Asiatic sovereigns.

Verse 13. The contentions of a wife are a continual dropping.] A man who has got such a wife is like a tenant who has got a cottage with a bad roof, through every part of which the rain either drops or pours. He can neither sit, stand, work, or sleep, without being exposed to these droppings! God help the man who is in such a case, with house or wife!

Verse 14. A prudent wife is from the LORD.] One who has a good understanding, אשה משכלת ishah maskeleth; who avoids complaining, though she may often have cause for it.

regardless that his continual slothfulness must necessarily plunge him into more sufferings!

Verse 17. Lendeth unto the LORD] O what a word is this! God makes Himself debtor for every thing that is given to the poor! Who would not advance much upon such credit? God will pay it again. And in no case has He ever forfeited His word.

Verse 18. Let not thy soul spare for his crying.] This is a hard precept for a parent. Nothing affects the heart of a parent so much as a child's cries and tears. But it is better that the child may be caused to cry, when the correction may be healthful to his soul, than that the parent should cry afterward, when the child is grown to man's estate, and his evil habits sealed for life.

Verse 19. A man of great wrath] He who is of an irritable fiery disposition will necessarily get himself into many broils; and he that is surety for him once is likely to be called on again and again for the same friendly office.

Verse 21. There are many devices, &c.] The same sentiment as in chap. xvi. 1. where see the note.

Verse 24. A slothful man hideth his hand in his bosom] Is too lazy to feed himself. If he dip his hand once in the dish, he is too lazy to put it in a second time. It is a strange case that a man, through his excessive slothfulness, would rather starve than put himself to the trouble to eat.

Verse 26. He that wasteth his father] Destroys his substance by riotous or extravagant living, so as to embitter his latter end by poverty and affliction;—and adds to this wickedness the expulsion of his aged widowed mother from the paternal house;—is a son of shame, a most shameful man; and a son of reproach, one whose conduct cannot be sufficiently execrated. Who tormentith the faver, and fleeth the modir, schenful schal ben, and unblisful.—Old MS. Bible. The common reading of the Vulgate is, et fugat matrem, and expels his mother: but the Old Bible was taken from a copy that had fugit matrem, shuns his mother, flees away from her,—leaves her to affliction and penury. It is prostitution of the term to call such, man.

Verse 27. Cease, my son] Hear nothing that would lead thee away from God and His truth.

Verse 29. Stripes for the back of fools.] Profane and wicked men expose themselves to the punishments denounced against such by just laws. Avoid, therefore, both their company and their end.

CHAPTER XX.

Against wine and strong drink. We should avoid contentions. The sluggard. The righteous man. Weights and measures. Talebearers. The wicked son. The wise king. The glory of young men. The beauty of old men. The benefit of correction.

NOTES ON CHAP. XX.

Verse 1. Wine is a mocker] It deceives by its fragrance, intoxicates by its strength, and renders the intoxicated ridiculous.

Strong drink] שכר shekar, any strong fermented liquor, whether of the vine, date, or palm species.

Verse 2. The fear of a king] Almost the same with chap. xix. 12. which see.

Verse 3. It is an honour for a man] The same sentiment as chap. xix. 11.

Verse 4. The sluggard will not plough] For other parts of this character see the preceding chapter. It is seldom that there is a season of very cold weather in Palestine: very cold days do occur, with wind, rain and sleet. They begin their ploughing in the latter end of September, and sow their early wheat by the middle of October. And this is often the case in England itself. The meaning of the proverb is,—the slothful man, under the pretence of unfavourable weather, neglects cultivating his land till the proper time is elapsed.

Verse 5. Counsel in the heart of man] Men of the deepest and most comprehensive minds are rarely apt unsolicited to join in any discourse, in which they might appear even to the greatest advantage: but a man of understanding will elicit this, by questions framed for the purpose, and thus pump up the salubrious waters from the deep and capacious well. The metaphor is fine and expressive.

Verse 6. Most men will proclaim] Many men merciful ben clepid: a feithful man forsoth, who schal finde? —Old MS. Bible.

Verse 8. A king that sitteth in the throne of judgment] Kings should see to the administration of the laws, as well as of the state transactions of their kingdom. In the British constitution there is a court for the King, called the King's Bench, where he should sit; and where he is always supposed to be sitting. The eyes, the presence of a monarch in such a place, scatter evil. He sees into the case himself; gives right judgment, for he can have no self-interest. Corrupt judges, and falsifying counsellors, cannot stand before him; and the villain is too deeply struck with the majesty and state of the monarch, to face out iniquity before him.

Verse 9. Who can say, I have made my heart clean] No man. But thousands can testify that the blood of Jesus Christ has cleansed them from all unrighteousness. And he is pure from his sin, who is justified freely through the redemption that is in Jesus.

Verse 10. Divers weights, and divers measures] A peise and a peise;—Old MS. Bible; from the French pois, weight. Heb. A stone and a stone; an ephah and an ephah. One the standard, the other below it: one to buy with, the other to sell by.

Verse 11. Even a child is known by his doings] That is, in general terms, the effect shows the nature of the cause. A childe is known by his conversation, says Coverdale. A child is easily detected when he has done evil: he immediately begins to excuse and vindicate himself, and profess his innocence, almost before accusation takes place. Some think the words should be understood, every child will dissemble; this amounts nearly to the meaning given above. But probably the principal thing intended by the wise man is, that we may easily learn from the child what the man will be. In general, they give indications of those trades and callings for which they are adapted by nature. And, on the whole, we cannot go by a surer guide in preparing our children for future life, than by observing their early propensities. The future engineer is seen in the little handicrafts man of two years old. Many children are crossed in these early propensities to a particular calling, to their great prejudice, and the loss of their parents, as they seldom settle at, or make much out, at the business to which they are tied, and to which nature has given them no tendency. These infantine predilections to particular callings, we should consider as indications of Divine Providence, and its calling of them to that work for which they are peculiarly fitted.

Verse 12. The hearing ear, and the seeing eye] Every good we possess comes from God; and we should neither use our eyes, nor our ears, nor any thing we possess, but in strict subserviency to His will.

Verse 13. Love not sleep, lest thou come to poverty] Sleep, indescribable in its nature, is an indescribable blessing;—but how often is it turned into a curse! It is like food: a certain measure of it restores and invigorates exhausted nature; more than that, oppresses and destroys life. A lover of sleep is a paltry insignificant character.

Verse 14. It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer] How apt are men to decry the goods they wish to purchase, in order that they may get them at a cheaper rate; and when they have made their bargain, and carried it off, boast to others at how much less than its value they have obtained it. Are such honest men? Is such knavery actionable?—Can such be punished only in another world? St. Augustin tells us a pleasant story on this subject:—A certain mountebank published in the full theatre, that at the next entertainment he would show to every man present what was in his heart. The time came, and the concourse was immense: all waited, with death-like silence, to hear what he would say to each. He stood up, and in a single sentence redeemed his pledge:—

VILI vultis EMERE, et CARO VENDERE.

"You all wish to BUY CHEAP, and SELL DEAR."

He was applauded: for every one felt it to be a description of his own heart, and was satisfied that all others were similar. In quo dicto levissimi scenici, omnes tamen conscientias invenerunt suas.—DE TRINITATE, lib. xiii. c. 3. OPER. Vol. vii. col. 930.

Verse 15. There is gold] Gold is valuable, silver is valuable, and so are jewels: but the teachings of sound knowledge are more valuable than all.

Verse 16. Take his garment that is surety for a stranger] I suppose the meaning to be: if a stranger or unknown person become surety in a case, greater caution should be used, and such security taken from this stranger as would prevent him from running away from his engagements.

Verse 17. Bread of deceit is sweet] Property acquired by falsehood, speculation, &c. without labour, is pleasant to the unprincipled slothful man: but there is a curse in it; and the issue will prove it.

Verse 18. With good advice make war.] Perhaps there is not a precept in this whole book so little regarded as this. Most of the wars that are undertaken are wars of injustice, ambition, aggrandisement, and caprice, which can have had no previous good counsel. A minister, who is perhaps neither a good nor a great man, counsels his king to make war: the cabinet must be brought into it, and a sufficient number out of the states of the kingdom gained over to support it. By and by, what was begun through caprice, must be maintained through necessity. Places must be created; and offices must be filled with needy dependents, whose interest it may be to protract the war, till they get enough to pay their debts, and secure independence for life. And for these most important ends the blood of the country is spilt, and the treasures of the people exhausted! I have met with a fact precisely of this kind under the reign of Louis XIV.

Verse 20. Whoso curseth his father] Such persons were put to death under the law. See Exod. xxi. 17. Lev. xx. 9.; and here it is said, Their lamp shall be put out. They shall have no posterity; God shall cut them off, both root and branch.

Verse 21. An inheritance—gotten hastily] Gotten by speculation; by lucky hits; not in the fair progressive way of traffic, in which money has its natural increase. All such inheritances are short-lived; God's blessing is not in them, because they are not the produce of industry; and they lead to idleness, pride, defraud, and knavery. A speculation in trade is a public nuisance and curse. How many honest men have been ruined by such!

Verse 22. I will recompense evil] Wait on the Lord: judgment is His, and His judgments are sure. In the mean time pray for the conversion of your enemy.

Verse 24. Man's goings are of the LORD] He, by His providence, governs all the great concerns of the world. Man often traverses these operations: but he does it to his own damage. An old writer quaintly says,—"They who will carve for themselves, shall cut their fingers."

Verse 25. Who devoureth that which is holy] It is a sin to take that which belongs to God, His worship, or His work; and devote it to one's own use.

And after vows to make inquiry.] That is, if a man be inwardly making a rash vow,—the fitness or unfitness, the necessity, expediency, and propriety of the thing, should be first carefully considered. But how foolish to make the vow first, and afterward to inquire whether it was right in the sight of God to do it! This equally condemns all rash and inconsiderate conduct. My old MS. Bible translates, falling ig of men often to vowen to geyntis, and after, the vouw ig agen drawen. Is it possible that Wicklif could have translated this verse thus? as it strongly countenances vows to and invocations of saints.

Verse 26. Bringeth the wheel over them.] He thrashes them in His anger, as the wheel does the grain on the thrashing-floor. Every body knows that grain was separated from its husks, in Palestine, by the feet of the oxen trampling among the sheaves: or bringing a rough-shod wheel over them. Asiatic kings often thrashed their people, to bring out their property: but this is not what is intended here.

Verse 27. The spirit of man is the candle of the LORD] God has given to every man a mind, which he so enlightens by his own Spirit, that the man knows how to distinguish good from evil; and conscience, which springs from this, searches the inmost recesses of the soul.

Verse 28. Mercy and truth preserve the king] These are the brightest jewels in the royal crown; and the kings who are most governed by them have the stablest government.

Verse 29. The glory of young men is their strength] Scarcely any young man affects to be wise, learned, &c.: but all delight to show their strength, and to be reputed strong. Agility, one evidence of strength, they particularly affect; and hence their various trials of strength and fleetness in public exercises.

And the beauty of old men is the gray head.] They no longer affect strength and agility: but they affect wisdom, experience, prudent counsels, &c.; and are fond of being reputed wise, and of having respect paid to their understanding and experience.

Verse 30. The blueness of a wound] חבורות chaburoth, from חבר chabar, to unite, to join together. Does it not refer to the cicatrice of a wound, when, in its healing, the two lips are brought together? By this union, the wound is healed; and by the previous discharge the lacerated ends of fibres and blood-vessels are purged away. So stripes, though they hurt for the time, become the means of correcting and discharging the moral evil of the inmost soul, the vice of the heart, the easily-besetting sin.

In this chapter, from the fourteenth to the nineteenth verse inclusive, are wanting in the Septuagint and Arabic; and the tenth, eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth, come in after the twenty-second. It is difficult to account for these variations: occasioned probably by the change of leaves in the MSS.

CHAPTER XXI.

The king's heart is in the hand of God. We should practise mercy and justice. The lying tongue. The quarrelsome woman. The punishment of the wicked. The uncharitable. The private gift. NOTES ON CHAP. XXI.

Verse 1. The king's heart is in the hand of the LORD] the Lord is the only Ruler of princes. He alone can govern and direct their counsels. But there is an allusion here to the eastern method of watering their lands. Several canals are dug from one stream; and, by opening a particular sluice, the husbandman can direct a stream to whatever part he please: so the king's heart, wherever it turns; i. e. to whomsoever he is disposed to show favour. As the land is enriched with the streams employed in irrigation; so is the favourite of the king, by the royal bounty; and God can induce the king to give that bounty to whomsoever he will.—See Harmer.

Verse 2. The LORD pondereth the hearts.] Every man feels strongly attached to his own opinions, modes of acting, &c.; and though he will not easily give up any thing to the judgment of a neighbour, whom he will naturally consider at least as fallible as himself, yet he should consider that the unerring eye of God is upon him; and he should endeavour to see that what he does is acceptable in the eye of his Maker and Judge.

Verse 3. To do justice and judgment] The words of Samuel to Saul.—See note on 1 Sam. xv. 23.

Verse 4. A high look] The evidence of pride, self-conceit, and vanity; a proud heart, from which the high look, &c. come.

And the ploughing] נר ner, lucerna, the lamp, the prosperity and posterity of the wicked, is sin: it is evil in the seed, evil in the root, evil in the branch, and evil in the fruit. They are full of sin themselves, and what they do is sinful.

Verse 6. Of them that seek death.] Instead of מבקשי mebakashey, "them that seek," several MSS., some ancient editions, with Symmachus, the Septuagint, Vulgate, and Arabic, have מקשי makashey, the snares. He who gets treasures by a lying tongue, pursues vanity into the snares of death. Our common translation may be as good. But he who, by the snares of his tongue, endeavours to buy and sell to the best advantage, is pursuing what is empty in itself; and he is ensnared by death, while he is attempting to ensnare others.

Verse 7. The robbery of the wicked] The wicked shall be terrified and ruined by the means they use to aggrandize themselves. And as they refuse to do judgment, they shall have judgment without mercy.

Verse 9. In a corner of the housetop] A shed raised on the flat roof:—a wide house; בית חבר beith chaber, "a house of fellowship;" what we would call a lodging-house, or a house occupied by several families. This was no unusual thing in the East, no more than in the West. Some think a house of festivity is meant: hence my old MS. Bible has, the hous and feste.

Verse 11. When the scorner is punished] When those who mock at religion, blaspheme against its Author, and endeavour to poison society, and disturb the peace of the community by their false doctrine, meet with that degree of punishment which their crimes, as far as they affect the public peace, deserve: then the simple, who were either led away, or in danger of being led away, by their pernicious doctrines, are made wise. And when those thus made wise, are instructed in the important truths which have been decried by those unprincipled men, then they receive knowledge; and one such public example is made a blessing to thousands. But only blasphemy against God and the Bible should be thus punished. Private opinion, the state should not meddle with.

verse is understood as implying the pious concern of a righteous man, for a wicked family, whom he endeavours by his instructions to bring into the way of knowledge and peace.

Verse 13. Whoso stoppeth his ears] See the conduct of the priest and Levite to the man who fell among thieves; and let every man learn from this, that he who shuts his ear against the cry of the poor, shall have the ear of God shut against his cry. The words are quite plain; there is no difficulty here.

Verse 16. The man (once enlightened,) that wandereth out of the way of understanding (in which he had walked,) shall remain (have a permanent residence) in the congregation of the dead] רפאים rephaim, the lost: either separate spirits in general, or rather the assembly of separate spirits, which had fallen from primitive rectitude; and shall not be restored to the Divine favour; particularly those sinners who were destroyed by the deluge. This passage intimates, that those called rephaim are in a state of conscious existence. It is difficult to assign the true meaning of the word in several places where it occurs: but it seems to mean the state of separate spirits, i. e. of those separated from their bodies, and awaiting the judgment of the great day: but the congregation may also include the fallen angels. My old MS. Bible translates, The man that errith fro the wei of doctrine, in the felowschip of geantis schal wonnen.

Verse 17. He that loveth pleasure] That follows gaming, fowling, hunting, coursing, &c. when he should be attending to the culture of his fields, shall be a poor man. And I may safely add, that he shall be so deservedly poor, as to have none to pity him.

Verse 18. The wicked shall be a ransom for the righteous] God often in His judgments cuts off the wicked, in order to prevent them from destroying the righteous. And, in general, we find that the wicked fall into the traps and pits they have digged for the righteous.

Verse 22. A wise man scaleth the city of the mighty] Wisdom is in many respects preferable to strength, even in the case of defence. See what skill does in the fortification and reduction of strong places.

Verse 25. The desire of the slothful killeth him] He desires to eat, drink, and be clothed: but as he does not labour, hence he dies with this desire in his heart, envying those who possess plenty through their labour and industry. Hence he is said to covet greedily all the day long, ver. 26. while the righteous, who has been laborious and diligent, has enough to eat, and some to spare.

Verse 27. When he bringeth it with a wicked mind] If such a person even bring the sacrifices and offerings which God requires, they are an abomination to Him, because the man is wicked; and if such offerings be imperfect in themselves, or of goods ill-gotten, or offered by constraint of custom, &c. they are doubly abominable.

Verse 31. The horse is prepared against the day of battle] Horses were not used among the Jews before the time of Solomon. There was a divine command against them, Deut. xvii. 16.: but Solomon transgressed it, see 1 Kings x. 29. But he here allows that a horse is a vain thing for safety; and that, however strong and well appointed cavalry may be, still safety, escape, and victory, are of the Lord. Among the ancient Asiatics, the horse was used only for war: oxen laboured at the plough and cart; the ass and the camel carried backloads; and mules and asses served for riding. We often give the credit of a victory to man, when they who consider the circumstances see that it came from God.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXII.

Verse 1. A good name] שם shem, a name, put for reputation, credit, fame. Used nearly in the same way that we use it:—"He has got a name:" "his name stands high;" for he is a man of credit and reputation. טבא toba, καλον, حمود hamood, and bonum, are added by the Chaldee, Septuagint, Arabic, and Vulgate, all signifying good or excellent.

Is rather to be chosen than great riches] Because character will support a man in many circumstances; and there are many rich men that have no name: but the word of the man of character will go further than all their riches.

Verse 2. The rich and the poor meet together] עשיר âshir, the opulent, whether in money, land, or property; רש rash, the man that is destitute of these, and lives by his labour, whether a handicraftsman, or one that tills the ground. In the order of God, the rich and the poor live together, and are mutually helpful to each other. Without the poor, the rich could not be supplied with the articles which they consume; for the poor include all the labouring classes of society:—and without the rich the poor could get no vent for the produce of their labour; nor, in many cases, labour itself. The poor have more time to labour than the mere necessaries of life require; their extra time is employed in providing a multitude of things which are called the superfluities of life, and which the rich especially consume. All the poor man's time is thus employed; and he is paid for his extra labour by the rich. The rich should not despise the poor, without whom he can neither have his comforts, nor maintain his state. The poor should not envy the rich, without whom he could neither get employment; nor the necessaries of life.

The LORD is the Maker of them all] Both the states are in the order of God's providence; and both are equally important in His sight. Merely considered as men, God loves the simple artificer, or labourer, as much as He does the king; though the office of the latter, because of its entering evil, and hideth himself: but the simple pass on, and are punished.

4 [a] By [b] humility and the fear of the LORD are riches, honour, and life.

5 [c] Thorns and snares are in the way of the froward: [d] he that doth keep his soul shall be far from them.

6 [e] Train [f] up a child [g] in the way he should go; and when he is old, he will not depart from it.

into the plan of His government of the world, is of infinitely greater consequence than the trade of the poor artificer. Neither should despise the other; neither should envy the other. Both are useful, both important; both absolutely necessary to each other's welfare and support; and both are accountable to God for the manner in which they acquit themselves in those duties of life which God has respectively assigned them. The abject poor, those who are destitute of health and the means of life, God in effect lays at the rich man's door, that by his superfluities they may be supported. How wise is that ordinance which has made the rich and the poor! Pity it were not better understood!

Verse 3. A prudent man foreseeth the evil] God, in mercy, has denied man the knowledge of futurity: but in its place He has given him hope and prudence. By hope he is continually expecting and anticipating good;—by prudence he derives and employs means to secure it. His experience shows him that there are many natural evils in a current state, the course of which he can neither stem nor divert; prudence shows him beforehand the means he may use to step out of their way, and hide himself. The simple, the inexperienced, headstrong, giddy, and foolish, rush on in the career of hope, without prudence to regulate, chastise, and guide it; thus they commit many faults, make many miscarriages, suffer often in consequence; and the commission of crimes leads to punishment.

Verse 5. Thorns and snares] Various difficulties, trials, and sufferings.

Verse 6. Train up a child in the way he should go] The Hebrew of this clause is curious:—חנך לנער על־פי דרכו chanak la-naâr âl pi dareco, "Initiate the child at the opening (the mouth) of his path." When he comes to the opening of the way of life, being able to walk alone, and to choose; stop at this entrance, and begin a series of instructions, how he is to conduct himself in every step he takes. Show him the duties, the dangers, and the blessings of the path; give him directions how to perform the duties, how to escape the dangers, and how to secure the blessings, which all lie before him. Fix these on his mind by daily inculcation, till their impression is become indelible: then lead him to practise by slow and almost imperceptible degrees, till each indelible impression becomes a strongly radicated habit. Beg incessantly the blessing of God on all this teaching and discipline; and then you have obeyed the injunction of the wisest of men. Nor is there any likelihood that such impressions shall ever be effaced, and that such habits shall ever be destroyed.

חנך chanak, which we translate train up or initiate, signifies also dedicate; and is often used for the consecrating any thing, house, or person, to the service of God. Dedicate, therefore, in the first instance, your child to God; and nurse, teach, and discipline him as God's child, whom He has entrusted to your care. These things observed, and illustrated by your own conduct, the child (you have God's word for it) will never depart from the path of life. Coverdale translates the passage thus;—"Yf thou teachest a childe what waye he shoulde go, he shall not leave it when he is olde." Coverdale's Bible, for generally giving the true sense of a passage, and in elegant language for the time, has no equal in any of the translations which have followed since. HORACE's maxim is nearly like that of Solomon:—

Fingit equum tenerâ docilem cervice magister
Ire viam, quâ monstrat eques; venaticus, ex quo
Tempore cervinam pellem latravit in aulâ
Militat in sylvis catulus. Nunc adbibe puro Pectore verba, puer; nunc te melioribus offer.

"The docile colt is formed with gentle skill
To move obedient to his rider's will.
In the loud hall the hound is taught to bay
The buck skin trail'd, then challenges his prey
Through the wild woods. Thus, in your hour of youth
From pure instruction quaff the words of truth:
The odours of the wine that first shall stain
The virgin vessel, it shall long retain." FRANCIS.

Verse 7. The rich ruleth over the poor] So it is in the order of God; and may be a blessing to both.

Verse 8. He that soweth iniquity] The crop must be according to the seed. If a man sow thistle seed,—is it likely he shall reap wheat? If he sow to the flesh,—shall he not of the flesh reap destruction?

Verse 11. He that loveth pureness of heart] Who aims to be what God would have him to be; the King of kings shall be his Friend. There is no class of men that value uprightness more than kings; as none stand so much in need of it in their servants.

Verse 12. The eyes of the LORD—(the Divine Providence)—preserve knowledge.] This Providence has been wonderfully manifested in preserving the Sacred Oracles; and in preserving many ancient authors, which have been of great use to the civil interests of man.

Verse 13. The slothful man saith, There is a lion without] But why does he say so? Because he is a slothful man. Remove his slothfulness, and these imaginary difficulties and dangers will be no more. He will not go abroad to work in the fields, because he thinks there is a lion in the way; he will not go out into the town for employment, as he fears to be assassinated in the streets! From both these circumstances he seeks total cessation from activity.

Verse 14. The mouth of strange women is a DEEP PIT] In chap. xxiii. 27. he says, A whore is a DEEP DITCH, and a strange woman is a NARROW PIT. The allusions in these three places are too plain to be misunderstood. Virgil's hell has been adduced in illustration:—

——— Sate sanguine Divûm,
Tros Anchisiade: facilis decensus Averni;
Noctes atque dies patet atri janua Ditis:
Sed revocare gradum, superasque evadere ad auras,
Hoc OPUS; hic LABOR est. Pauci quos æquus amavit
Jupiter, aut ardens evexit ad æthera virtus, Dîs geniti potuere. VIRG. Æn. vi. ver. 125.

"O glorious prince of brave Anchises' line!
Great godlike hero! sprung from seed divine,
Smooth lies the road to Pluto's gloomy shade;
And Hell's black gates for ever stand display'd:
But 'tis a long unconquerable pain,
To climb to these ethereal realms again.
The choice-selected few, whom favouring Jove,
Or their own virtue, raised to heaven above,
From these dark realms emerged again to day;
The mighty sons of gods, and only they. PITT.

Verse 16. He that oppresseth the poor] He who, in order to obtain the favour of the rich and great, either robs or cheats the poor, to make those men presents; or gives in presents to them, for the sake of honour and reputation, what he should have given to the poor, shall surely come to want.

Verse 17. Bow down thine ear] From this to the end of ver. 21. are contained not proverbs, but directions how to profit by that which wisdom has already delivered; the nature of the instruction; and the end for which it was given.

I shall give a paraphrase of this very important passage:—

I. Solomon addresses his pupils on the use of his past teachings.

1. The wise man speaks; and all his words, not merely his sentiments, are to be carefully heard.

2. He speaks knowledge; gives doctrines true in themselves, and confirmed by observation and experience.

3. These are to be heard with humility and deep attention. Bow down thine ear.

4. They must not only be heard, but meditated and pondered. Apply thine heart to my knowledge.

Verse 18. For it is a pleasant thing if thou keep them within thee]

II. The pleasure and profit which may be derived from an attentive hearing.

1. They should be laid up in the heart; stored, treasured up, within thee.

2. This will yield high satisfaction and happiness to the soul. For it is a PLEASANT THING if thou keep them within thee.

3. The man who thus attends to the teachings of wisdom, shall gain an experimental knowledge of them, so as to be able to speak of them suitably, pertinently, and persuasively. They shall withal be fitted in thy lips.

Verse 19. That thy trust may be in the LORD, I have made known, &c.

III. The END for which the wise man gives these instructions:—

1. That thy trust may be in the Lord. That thou mayest acknowledge HIM as the Fountain of all good; and refer every thing to Him.

2. That this end may be accomplished, the instructions are specific and particular. I have made known to THEE, even to THEE.

3. And this has not only been done in times past, I have made known: but even in the present, I have made known THIS DAY!

IV. An appeal is made to the person himself relative to the matter and importance of the teaching.

1. Have I not written to thee excellent things; שלשים shalashim, literally threefold, thrice, in three different ways; which some think refers to his three books. 1. Canticles. 2. Koheleth, or Ecclesiastes. And, 3. Proverbs.

Others, understanding it of the voice of Divine wisdom, suppose the three grand divisions of the Sacred Oracles are intended; viz. 1. The Law. 2. The Prophets. And, 3. the Hagiographa. And others interpret it of the three grand intellectual sciences. 1. Morality, or Ethics. 2. Natural Philosophy, or Physics. 3. Theology, or the science of Divine things, as reported in the Scriptures. But Solomon's books of Natural Philosophy are lost.

And, lastly, some of the Rabbins and some Christians find in these shalashim, the three senses of Scripture;—1. Literal. 2. Figurative. And, 3. Allegorical.

After all, as we know the term thrice, was used as the term seven, a certain number for an uncertain; See Amos i. 11.; 2 Cor. xii. 8., it may mean no more here than I have written to thee often. But perhaps it is safer to apply it to the Scriptures, and the excellent doctrines they contain: for שלשים shalashim, signifies also excellent princely things; things which become a king to speak. Indeed, it would not be difficult to prove that there is not one important art or science, which is not alluded to in the Holy Scriptures, and used to illustrate and inculcate heavenly truths.

2. These excellent, princely, or threefold teachings, consist of two grand parts:—1. COUNSELS, מעצות moetsoth, from יעץ ydâts, to give advice, counsel, or information. 1. These show thee what thou shouldst know; and, 2. advise thee what thou shouldst do. 2. KNOWLEDGE, דעת daath, from ידע yadâ, to perceive or feel, by means of the senses and internal perception; viz. what should be felt, experienced, known to be true by mental perception, and by their influence on the heart and affections.

V. All this is done to give the pupil the fullest satisfaction, and most plenary evidence, concerning the truths of God.

Verse 21. That I might make thee know the certainty of the words of truth] 1. These are words or doctrines of truth:—1. They are true in themselves. 2. Come from the God of truth. And, 3. Are truly fulfilled to all that believe.

2. These words of truth are certain, קשט koshet, they are not of dubious or difficult interpretation: they point directly to the great end which God gave them; they promise, and they are fulfilled. He that pleads them by faith, receives their accomplishment in the spirit and power of Divine love. The Scriptures, as far as they concern the salvation of the soul, are to be experimentally understood; and by this experimental knowledge, every believer has the witness in himself, and knows the certainty of the words of truth.

VI. What we know ourselves to be true, and of infinite importance to the welfare of men in general, we should carefully proclaim, and witness, that they also may believe.

That thou mightest answer the words of truth] 1. When the doctrine of salvation is preached, there will be many inquirers. What is this doctrine? Have any persons received these blessings? the remission of sins, witness of the Holy Spirit, purification of the heart, &c. &c. Who are they? What are the collateral arguments that prove these things; and show us that you have not misapprehended the meaning of these Scriptures? 2. Inquiries of this kind should meet with the speediest and most distinct answers; and the doctrines of truth should be supported and illustrated with the words of truth. That thou mightest answer the words of truth to them that send unto thee.

Verse 23. For the LORD will plead their cause] Wo, therefore, to them that oppress them; for they will have God, not the poor, to deal with.

Verse 24. Make no friendship with an angry man] Spirit has a wonderful and unaccountable influence upon spirit. From those with whom we associate we acquire habits; and learn their ways, imbibe their spirit, show their tempers, and walk in their steps. We cannot be too choice of our company; for we may soon learn ways that would be a snare to our soul.

Verse 26. That strike hands] See on the parallel texts in the margin.

Verse 27. If thou hast nothing to pay] Should any man give security for more than he is worth? If he do,—is it not a defraud on the very face of the transaction?

Why should he take thy bed from under thee?] The creditor will not pursue the debtor whom he knows to be worth nothing: but he will sue the bail or bondsman. And why shouldst thou put thyself in such circumstances, as to expose thyself to the loss even of thy bed?

Verse 28. Remove not the ancient landmark] Do not take the advantage, in ploughing or breaking up a field contiguous to that of thy neighbour, to set the dividing stones further into his field, that thou mayest enlarge thy own. Take not what is not thy own in any case. Let all ancient divisions, and the usages connected with them, be held sacred. Bring in no new dogmas, nor rites, nor ceremonies, into religion, or the worship of God, that are not clearly laid down in the Sacred Writings. "Stand in the ways; and see and ask for the old paths, which is the good way, and walk therein; and ye shall find rest for your souls."—Jer. vi. 16. But if any church have lost sight of the genuine doctrines of the Gospel, calling them back to these is not removing the ancient landmarks, as some have falsely asserted. God gave a law against removing the ancient landmarks, by which the inheritances of tribes and families were distinguished. See Deut. xix. 14., from which these words of Solomon appear to be taken.

Even among the heathens the landmark was sacred; so sacred that they made a deity of it. Terminus signifies the stone or post, that served as a landmark. And Terminus was reputed a god, and had offerings made to him. Hence OVID:—

FAST. lib. ii. ver. 639.

Here we find the owners of both fields bringing each his garland, and libation, to the honour of this god. They sang its praises, put on its to pa chaplet of flowers, poured out the libation before it; and the inhabitants of the country held a festival in its honour. It was in short celebrated as the preserver of the bounds and territorial rights of tribes, cities, and whole kingdoms: and, without its testimony and evidence, every field would have been a subject of litigation.

The general meaning of the proverb is, "Every diligent active man shall be at once independent and respectable."

NOTES ON CHAP. XXIII.

Verse 1. When thou sittest to eat with a ruler] When invited to the table of thy betters, eat moderately. Do not appear as if half-starved at home. Eat not of delicacies to which thou art not accustomed: they are deceitful meat; they please, but they do not profit. They are pleasant to the sight, the taste, and the smell: but they are injurious to health. These are prudential cautions; and should be carefully observed by all who would avoid the conduct of a clown, and desire to pass for a well-bred man.

Verse 2. Put a knife to thy throat] Repress thy appetite, and do not be incontinent of speech. Eat, drink, and converse, under a check.

Verse 4. Labour not to be rich] Let not this be thy object. Labour to provide things honest in the sight of God, and all men; and, if thou get wealth, do not forget the poor; else God's curse will be a canker even in thy gold.

Cease from thine own wisdom] בינתך beinetca, thy own understanding, or prudence. The world says, "Get rich if thou can, and how thou canst." Rem, si possis, rectè; si non, quocunque modo rem. "Get a fortune honestly if thou can: but if not, get one at all events." This is the devil's counsel; and well it is followed:—but Solomon says, and God says, Cease from thine own counsel. Thou hast an immortal soul, and shall shortly appear before God. Lay up treasure for heaven; and be rich towards God.

Verse 6. Of him that hath an evil eye] Never eat with a covetous or stingy man: if he entertains you at his own expense, he grudges every morsel you put in your mouth. This is well marked by the wise man in the next verse:—"Eat and drink, saith he: but his heart is not with thee."

Verse 8. The morsel which thou hast eaten] On reflection thou wilt even blame thyself for having accepted his invitation.

Verse 10. Remove not the old landmark] See the preceding chapter, ver. 28.

Enter not into the fields of the fatherless] Take nothing that belongs to an orphan. The heaviest curse of God will fall upon them that do so.

Verse 11. For their redeemer is mighty] גאלם goalam, their kinsman. The word means, the person who has a right, being next in blood, to redeem a field or estate, alienated from the family; to avenge the blood of a murdered relative, by slaying the murderer; and to take to wife a brother's widow who had died childless, in order to preserve the family. The strength here mentioned refers to the justness of his claim, the extent of his influence, and the powerful abettors of such a cause. But in reference to the orphans here mentioned, they having no kinsman, God takes up, vindicates, and avenges, their cause.

Verse 14. Thou shalt beat him with the rod] A proper correction of children was a favourite point of discipline with Solomon. We have already seen how forcibly he speaks on the subject. See the notes on the places referred to in the margin.

Verse 18. Surely there is an end] יש אחרית yesh acharith, there is another life; "and thy expectation" of the enjoyment of a blessed immortality "shall not be cut off." The Old MS. Bible reads thus:—For thou schalt hab hop in the last; and thin abiding schal not ben taken awei. "For the ende is not yet come; and thy pacient abydinge shal not be in vayne."—COVERDALE.

Verse 20. Be not among winebibbers] There is much of this chapter spent in giving directions concerning eating, drinking, and entertainments in general. First, the pupil is directed relative to the manner in which he is to conduct himself in his visits to the tables of the rich and great. 2. Relative to the covetous, and his intercourse with them. And, 3. To public entertainments where there were generally riot and debauch. The reasons, says Calmet, which induced the wise man to give these directions were,—1. The useless expense. 2. The loss of time. 3. The danger from bad company. And, 4. The danger of contracting irregular habits, and of being induced to lead a voluptuous and effeminate life.

Verse 22. Despise not thy mother when she is old.] A very necessary caution, as very old women are generally helpless, useless, and burthensome: yet these circumstances do not at all lessen the child's duty. And this duty is strengthened by the Divine command here given.

Verse 23. Buy the truth] Acquire the knowledge of God at all events: and in order to this, too much pains, industry, and labour, cannot be expended.

And sell it not] When once acquired, let no consideration deprive thee of it. Cleave to and guard it, even to the risk of thy life. Coverdale translates,—Labour for to get the treuth; sell not awaye wissdome.

Verse 26. My son, give me thine heart] This is the speech of God to every human soul,—give thy affections to God; so as to love Him with all thy heart, soul, mind, and strength.

And let thine eyes observe my ways.] Be obedient to me in all things. My son, thou believest that I AM; and that I AM the Fountain of all good. Give me thy heart; it is I alone who can make thee happy. Observe my ways; follow me, do what is right in my sight. This exhortation contains three words:—BELIEVE!—LOVE!—OBEY! This is the sum of God's counsels to every child of man.

Verse 27. For a whore is a deep ditch] See on chap. xxii. 14.

Verse 28. Increaseth the transgressors among men.] More iniquity springs from this one source of evil, than from any other cause in the whole system of sin. Women and strong drink cause multitudes of millions to transgress.

Verse 29. Who hath wo?] I believe Solomon refers here to the natural effects of drunkenness. And perhaps אוי oi, which we translate wo, and אבוי aboi, which we translate sorrow, are mere natural sounds or vociferations that take place among drunken men, either from illness, or the nauseating effects of too much liquor. As to contentions among such; babblings on a variety of subjects, which they neither understand nor are fit to discuss; wounds got by falling out about nothing; and red eyes, blood-shotten with excess of drink, or black and blue eyes with fighting; these are such common and general effects of these compotations, as naturally to follow from them So that they who tarry long at wine, and use mixed wine to make it more inebriating, see chap. ix. 2. are the very persons who are most distinguished by the circumstances enumerated above.

31 Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth his colour in the cup, when it moveth itself aright.

Verse 31. Look not thou upon the wine] Let neither the colour, the odour, the sparkling, &c. of the wine, when poured out, induce thee to drink of it. However good and pure it may be; it will to thee be a snare, because thou art addicted to it, and hast no self-command.

Verse 33. Thine eyes shall behold strange women] Evil concupiscence is inseparable from drunkenness. Mr. Herbert shows these effects well:—

> He that is drunken may his mother kill,
> Big with his sister; he hath lost the reins;
> Is outlaw'd by himself. All kinds of ill
> Did, with his liquor, slide into his veins.
> The drunkard forfeits man; and doth divest
> All worldly right, save what he hath by beast.
> HERBERT'S Poems.—The Church Porch.

Verse 34. Lieth down in the midst of the sea] He is utterly regardless of life, which is expressed very forcibly by one in a state of intoxication ascending the shrouds, clasping he mast-head, and there falling asleep; whence in a few moments he must either fall down upon the deck, and be dashed to pieces; or fall into the sea, and be drowned. Reader, if thou be a man given to this appetite, put a knife to thy throat.

Verse 35. They have stricken me] Though beat and abused, full of pain, and exhibiting a frightful figure; yet so drunk was he, as to be insensible who had struck him; yet, after all this abuse and disgrace, he purposes to embrace the next opportunity of repeating his excesses! SIN makes a man contemptible in life, miserable in death, and wretched to all eternity. Is it not strange, then, that men should LOVE it.

The thinkynge of the fool is synne.—Old MS. Bible.

Fool is here taken for a wicked man, who is not only evil in his actions, but every thought of his heart is evil, and that continually. A simple thought about foolishness, or about sin, itself, is not sinful; it is the purpose or device, the harbouring evil thoughts, and devising how to sin, that is criminal.

Verse 10. If thou faint] If thou give way to discouragement and despair in the day of adversity; time of trial or temptation.

Thy strength is small] צר כחכה tsar cocheca, thy strength is contracted. So the old MS. Bible excellently—Yif sliden thou dispeire, in the dai of anguyfs, schal be made litil thi strengthe. In times of trial we should endeavour to be doubly courageous: when a man loses his courage, his strength avails him nothing.

Verse 11. If thou forbear to deliver] If thou see the innocent taken by the hand of lawless power, or superstitious zeal, and they are about to be put to death, thou shouldest rise up in their behalf, boldly plead for them, testify to their innocence when thou knowest it; and thus thou wilt not be guilty of blood; which thou wouldest be, if thou shouldest, through any pretence, neglect to save the life of a man unjustly condemned.

Verse 13. And the honeycomb] I have often had occasion to remark how much finer the flavour of honey is in the honeycomb, than it is after it has been expressed from it, and exposed to the action of the air. And it has been asserted that the honeycomb is never eaten: it must be by those who have no acquaintance with the apiary. I have seen the comb, with its contained honey, eaten frequently: and of it I have repeatedly partaken. And that our Lord ate it is evident from Luke xxiv. 42. Nor can any man, who has not eaten it in this way, feel the full force of the allusions to the honeycomb, and its sweetness, in several parts of the Sacred Writings. See 1 Sam. xiv. 27. Psa. xix. 10. Prov. v. 3.; xvi. 24.; xxvii. 7. Cant. iv. 11.; v. 1. and the place before us.

Verse 14. So shall the knowledge of wisdom be unto thy soul] True religion, experimental godliness, shall be to thy soul, as the honeycomb is to thy mouth.

Then there shall be a reward, and thy expectation shall not be cut off.] This is precisely the same with that in the preceding chapter, ver. 18; where see the note. The word אחרית acharith, we translate in the former place an end; and here we translate it a reward: but there is no place, I believe, in the Sacred Writings in which it has any such acceptation; nor can such a meaning be deduced from the root אחר achar, which always refers to behind, after, extremity, latter part, time, &c.; but never carries the idea of recompense, compensation, or such like; nor has one of the Versions understood it so. There is another state or life, and thy expectation of happiness in a future world shall not be cut off. In this sense, the Versions all understood it. I will take them as they lie before me.

"Which, (wisdom) when thou shalt have found, thou shalt have hope in thy last days; and thy hope shall not perish."—Vulgate.

This rendering is indefinite, which is not the usual custom of the translator.

Verse 15. The dwelling of the righteous] צדיק tsadik, the man who is walking unblameably in all the testimonies of God; who is rendering to every man his due.

Verse 16. For a just man] צדיק tsadik, the righteous, the same person mentioned above.

Falleth seven times] Gets very often into distresses, through his resting place being spoiled by the wicked man, the robber, the spoiler of the desert, lying in wait for this purpose, ver. 15.

And riseth up again] Though God permit the hand of violence sometimes to spoil his tent, temptations to assail his mind; and afflictions to press down his body, he constantly emerges; and every time he passes through the furnace, he comes out brighter and more refined.

But the wicked shall fall into mischief.] And there they shall lie; they have no strong arm to uphold them. Yet,

Verse 17. Rejoice not when thine enemy falleth, (into this mischief) and let not thine heart be glad when he stumbleth] When he meets with any thing that injures him: for God will not have thee to avenge thyself, or feel any disposition contrary to love; for if thou do, the Lord will be angry; and may turn away his wrath from him, and pour it out on thee.

This I believe to be the true sense of these verses: but we must return to the sixteenth, as that has been most sinfully misrepresented.

For a just man falleth seven times;—That is, say many, "the most righteous man in the world sins seven times a day, on an average." Solomon does not say so:—1. There is not a word about sin, in the text. 2. The word day is not in the Hebrew text, nor in any of the Versions. 3. The word יפול yippol, from נפל napal, to fall, is never applied to sin. 4. When set in opposition to the words riseth up, it merely applies to affliction or calamity. See Mic. vii. 8. Amos viii. 4. Jer. xxv. 27. and Psa. xxxiv. 19, 20. The righteous falls into trouble. See above.

Mr. Holden has a very judicious note on this passage. "Injure not a righteous man; for, though he frequently falls into distress; yet, by the superintending care of Providence, 'he riseth up again,' is delivered from his distress, while the wicked are overwhelmed with their misfortunes. That this is the meaning is plain from the preceding and following verses: yet some expound it by the just man often relapsing into sin, and recovering from it; nay, it has even been adduced to prove the doctrine of the final perseverance of the elect. But נפל is never used for falling into sin, but into distress and affliction,—as chap. xi. 5, 14; xiii. 17.; xvii. 20.; xxvi. 27.; xxviii. 10, 14, 18."

Verse 18. And he turn away his wrath from him.] Wrath is here taken for the effect of wrath, punishment; and the meaning must be, as paraphrased above, lest he take the punishment from him, and inflict it upon thee. And in this way Coverdale understood it:—"Lest the Lorde be angry, and turn his wrath from him unto thee." Or we may understand it, lest the Lord inflict on thee a similar punishment: for, if thou get into his spirit, rejoicing in the calamities of another, thou deservest his punishment.

Verse 20. For there shall be no reward to the evil man] אחרית acharith. There shall not be the future state of blessedness to the wicked: See note on ver. 14. His candle shall be put out,—his prosperity shall finally cease; or he shall have no posterity. Some have thought that this text intimates the annihilation of sinners: but it refers not to being, but to the state or condition of that being. The wicked shall be: but they shall not be HAPPY.

Verse 30. I went by the field of the slothful] This is a most instructive parable; is exemplified every day in a variety of forms; and is powerfully descriptive of the state of many a backslider and trifler in religion. Calmet has an excellent note on this passage. I shall give the substance of it.

Solomon often recommends diligence and œconomy to his disciples. In those primitive times, when agriculture was honourable, no man was respected who neglected to cultivate his grounds, who sunk into poverty, contracted debt, or engaged in ruinous securities. With great propriety, a principal part of wisdom was considered by them as consisting in the knowledge of properly conducting one's domestic affairs, and duly cultivating the inheritances derived from their ancestors. Moses had made a law to prevent the rich from utterly depressing the poor; by obliging them to return their farms to them on the sabbatic year, and to remit all debts at the year of jubilee.

In the civil state of the Hebrews, we never see those enormous and suddenly raised fortunes, which never subsist but in the ruin of numberless families. One of the principal solicitudes of this legislator was, to produce, as far as possible, in a monarchical state, an equality of property and condition. The ancient Romans held agriculture in the same estimation, and highly respected those who had applied themselves to it with success. When they spoke in praise of a man, they considered themselves as giving no mean commendation, when they called him a good husbandman; an excellent labourer. From such men they formed their most valiant generals, and intrepid soldiers. CATO De Re Rustica, cap. 1. The property which is acquired by these means is most innocent, most solid, and exposes its possessor less to envy than property acquired in any other way. than the property acquired in this way, nor the agitated life of the speculative merchant.

But let us look more particularly into this very instructive parable:—

I. The owner is described. 1. He was איש עצל ish âtsel, the loitering, sluggish, slothful man. 2. He was אדם חסר לב adam chaser leb, a man that wanted heart; destitute of courage, alacrity, and decision of mind.

II. His circumstances. This man had, 1st, שדה sedeh, a sowed field, arable ground. This was the character of his estate. It was meadow and corn land. 2. He had כרם kerem, a vineyard, what we would call perhaps garden and orchard, where he might employ his skill to great advantage in raising various kinds of fruits and culinary herbs for the support of his family.

III. The state of this heritage. 1. It was grown over with thorns. It had been long neglected, so that even brambles were permitted to grow in the fields. 2. Nettles had covered the face thereof. It was not weeded, and all kinds of rubbish had been suffered to multiply. 3. The stone wall was broken down. This belonged to the vineyard: it was neither pruned nor digged; and the fence, for want of timely repairs, had all fallen into ruins; ver. 31.

IV. The effect all this had on the attentive observer. 1. I saw it, אחזה אנכי ehezeh anoci, I fixed my attention on it. I found it was no mere report. It is a fact. I myself was an eye-witness of it. 2. I considered it well, אשית לבי ashith libbi, I put my heart on it. All my feelings were interested. 3. I looked upon it, ראיתי râiti, I took an intellectual view of it. And, 4. Thus I received instruction, לקחתי מוסר lakachti musar, I received a very important lesson from it: but the owner paid no attention to it. He alone was uninstructed; for he slumbered, slept, and kept his hands in his bosom. Ver. 33. hugged himself in his sloth and carelessness.

V. The consequences of this conduct. 1. Poverty, which is described coming as a traveller, making sure steps, every hour coming nearer and nearer to the door. 2. Want, מחסר machesar, total destitution; want of all the necessaries, conveniences, and comforts of life; and this is described as coming like an armed man, כאיש מגן keish magen, as a man with a shield, who comes to destroy this unprofitable servant: or it may refer to a man coming with what we call an execution into the house, armed with the law, to take even his bed from the slumberer.

From this literal solution any minister of God may make a profitable discourse.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXV.

Verse 1. These are also proverbs of Solomon] In my old MS. Bible, this verse concludes the preceding chapter. It seems that the remaining part of this book contains Proverbs which had been collected by the order of king Hezekiah; and were added to the preceding book as a sort of supplement, having been collected from traditionary sayings of Solomon. And as the men of Hezekiah may mean Isaiah, Shebna, and other inspired men, who lived in that time, we may consider them as of equal authority with the rest, else such men could not have united them to the sacred book. The chronological notes in the margin of this and the five 4 [b] Take away the dross from the silver, and there shall come forth a vessel for the finer.

5 [c] Take away the wicked from before the king, and [d] his throne shall be established in righteousness.

6 [e] Put not forth thyself in the presence of the king, and stand not in the place of great men:

7 [f] For better it is that it be said unto thee, Come up hither; than that thou shouldest be put lower in the presence of the prince whom thine eyes have seen.

8 [g] Go not forth hastily to strive, lest thou know not what to do in the end thereof, when thy neighbour hath put thee to shame.

9 [h] Debate thy cause with thy neighbour himself; and [i] discover not a secret to another:

[a] Heb. there is no searching ——[b] 2 Tim. 2. 21.——[c] Ch. 20. 8.——[d] Ch. 16. 12. & 29. 14 ——[e] Heb. Set not out thy glory.

following chapters denote the time when the proverbs contained in them were collected together in the reign of Hezekiah, about two hundred and seventy years after the death of Solomon.

Verse 2. It is the glory of God to conceal a thing] This has been understood as referring to the revelation of God's will in His word, where there are many things concealed in parables, allegories, metaphors, similitudes, &c. And it is becoming the majesty of God to publish His will so, that it must be seriously studied to be understood; in order that the truth may be more prized when it is discovered. And if it be to God's glory, thus partially to conceal His purposes; it is the glory of a king to search and examine this word, that he may understand how, by Him kings reign, and princes decree judgment. Prophecies are partially concealed; and we cannot fully know their meaning till their accomplishment: and then the glory of God's wisdom and providence will be more particularly evident, when we see the event to correspond so particularly and exactly with the prediction. I know not, however, that there are not matters in the Book of God, that will not be fully opened till mortality is swallowed up of life. For here we see through a glass darkly; but there face to face: here we know in part; but there we shall know as we also are known.

On this subject I cannot withhold an observation delivered to myself, by a royal and learned personage.

"As far as I have presumed to dive into and occupy myself with the Sacred Volumes, I feel satisfied of their Divine origin and truth. And I am satisfied likewise, that they contain more matter than any one, and myself in particular, can ever aspire fully to understand. This belief, however, ought in no wise to slacken our diligence, nor damp our ardour, in attempting a constant pursuit after the attainment of knowledge and truth; as we may flatter ourselves, although unable to reach the gate, we are still approaching nearer to its portals; which of itself, is a great blessing."—This sentiment will be approved by every pious and enlightened mind.

Verse 3. The heaven for height] The simple meaning of this is,—the reasons of state, in reference to many acts of the executive government, can no more be fathomed by the common people, than the height of the heavens, and the depth of the earth.

Verse 4. Take away the dross from the silver] You cannot have a pure silver vessel, till you have purified the silver; and no nation can have a king a public blessing till the wicked, all bad counsellors, wicked and interested ministers, and sycophants, are banished from the court and cabinet. When the wise and good only are the king's ministers and advisers, then the throne will be established in righteousness, and his administration be a universal blessing.

Verse 7. Come up hither] Our Lord refers to this, see Luke xiv. 8. and the notes there. Be humble; affect not high things; let those who are desperate climb dangerous precipices; keep thyself quiet, and thou shalt live at ease, and in peace. Hear the speech of a wise heathen on this subject:—

Quid fuit, ut tutas agitaret Dædalus alas;
Icarus immensas nomine signet aquas?
Nempe quòd hic altè, dimissus ille volabat.
Nam pennas ambo nonne habuere suas?
Crede mihi; bene qui latuit, bene vixit: & infra
Fortunam debet quisque manere suam.—
Vive sine invidiâ; mollesque inglorius annos
Exige: amicitias, et tibi junge pares.

Ovid. Trist. lib. iii. El. 4. ver. 21.

"Why was it that Dædalus winged his way safely, while Icarus his son fell, and gave name to the Icarian Sea? Was it not because the son flew aloft, and the father skimmed the ground? For both were furnished with the same kind of wings. Take my word for it, that he who lives privately, lives safely; and every one should live within his own income. Envy no man: pray for a quiet life, though it should not be dignified. Seek a friend, and associate with thy equals."

Verse 8. Go not forth hastily to strive] לרב le-rib, to enter into a lawsuit. Keep from this pit of the bottomless deep, unless urged by the direst necessity.

Verse 9. Debate thy cause with thy neighbour] Take the advice of friends. Let both sides attend to their counsels: but do not tell the secret of thy business to any. After squandering your money away upon lawyers, both they and the judge will at last leave it to be settled by twelve of your fellow-citizens! O the folly of going to law! O the blindness of men, and the rapacity of lawyers!

Verse 11. A word fitly spoken] על אפניו âl aphanaiv, upon its wheels. An observation, caution, reproof, or advice, that comes in naturally; runs smoothly along; is not forced nor dragged in; that appears to be without design; to rise out of the conversation; and, though particularly relative to one point, will appear to the company to suit all.

Is like apples of gold in pictures of silver.] Is like the refreshing orange or beautiful citron, served up in open work or filigree baskets, made of silver. The Asiatics excel in filigree silver work. I have seen much of it, and it is exquisitely beautiful. The silver wire by which it is done they form into the appearance of numerous flowers; and though these wires are soldered every where at their junctions with each other, yet this is done with such delicacy and skill as to be scarcely perceptible. I have seen animals formed of this filigree work, with all their limbs, and every joint in its natural play. Fruit baskets are made also in this way, and are exquisitely fine. The wise man seems to have this kind of work particularly in view; and the contrast of the golden yellow fruit in the exquisitely wrought silver basket, which may be all termed picture work, has a fine and pleasing effect upon the eye, as the contained fruit has upon the palate at an entertainment in a sultry climate. So the word spoken judiciously and opportunely is as much in its place, as the golden apples in the silver basket.

Verse 12. As an earring of gold] I believe נזם nezem, to mean the nose ring, with its pendants; the left nostril is pierced, and a ring put through it, as in the ear. This is very common in almost every part of the East, among women of condition. This is a further illustration of the above metaphor.

Verse 13. As the cold of snow] That snow was frequent in Judea is well known; and that in the East they have snow-houses, places dug under ground, where they lay up snow for summer's use, is also a fact. By means of the mass of snow deposited in them the icy temperature is kept up, so that the snow is easily preserved. The common method of cooling their wine, which is as easy as it is effectual, is by dipping a cloth in water, wrapping it round the bottle, and then hanging the bottle in the heat of the sun. The strong evaporation throws off the caloric from the wine, and the repetition of the wet cloth in the same exposure, makes the wine almost as cold as ice.

How agreeable this must be in a burning climate may be easily conceived. Perhaps it is this to which the wise man refers; for it is fact that they could have no snow in harvest, unless such as had been preserved as mentioned above: but this could be only in a few places, and within the reach of a very few persons. But cooling their liquors, by the simple mode of evaporation already explained, was within the reach even of the labourers in the harvest field. I think the text favours this supposition: for כצנת שלג ke-tsinnath sheleg, need not be referred to snow itself producing cold; but to a coldness like that of snow, procured by evaporation. If this interpretation be allowed, all difficulty will be removed.

Verse 14. A false gift] מתת שקר mattath shaker, a lying gift; one promised, but never bestowed. Whoso maketh greate boastes, and giveth nothing.—Coverdale. So the Vulgate—Vir gloriosus, et promissa non complens. "A bragging man, who does not fulfil his promises," is like clouds, which appear to be laden with vapour; and like the wind which, though it blow from a rainy quarter, brings no moistness with it. So the vain-boaster: he is big with promise, but performs nothing.

Verse 15. A soft tongue breaketh the bone.] This is similar to another proverb on the same subject. A soft answer turneth away wrath. An angry word does nothing but mischief.

Verse 16. Hast thou found honey] Make a moderate use of all thy enjoyments. Let thy moderation be known unto all, and appear in all things.

Verse 17. Withdraw thy foot] Another proverb will illustrate this: Too much familiarity breeds contempt.

Verse 20. As vinegar upon nitre] The original word נתר nater, is what is known among chymists as the natron of the ancients and of the Scriptures, and carbonate of soda. It is found native in Syria and India, and occurs as an efflorescence on the soil. In Tripoli, it is found in crystalline incrustations of from one third to half an inch thick. It is found also in solution in the water of some lakes in Egypt and Hungary. The borders of these lakes are covered with crystalline masses, of a grayish white or light brown colour: and in some specimens the natron is nearly pure carbonate of soda, and the carbonate is easily discovered by effervescing with an acid. It appears to have its Hebrew name from נתר natar, to dissolve or loosen: because a solution of it in water is abstersive, taking out spots, &c. It is used in the East for the purpose of washing. If vinegar be poured on it, Dr. Shaw says, a strong fermentation immediately takes place, which illustrates what Solomon says here:—The singing of songs to a heavy heart is like vinegar upon natron: that is, "there is no affinity between them; and opposition, colluctation, and strife, are occasioned by any attempt to unite them."

And poureth vyneger upon chalke.—COVERDALE. This also will occasion an effervescence. See Jer. ii. 22.

Verse 21. If thine enemy be hungry] See this and the next verse explained, Rom. xii. 20.

Verse 22. Thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head] Not to consume, but to melt him into kindness; a metaphor taken from smelting metallic ores:—

"So artists melt the sullen ore of lead,
By heaping coals of fire upon its head:
In the kind warmth the metal learns to glow,
And pure from dross the silver runs below."

S. WESLEY.

Verse 23. The north wind driveth away rain] The margin has, The north wind bringeth forth rain. It is said that the "north wind brings forth rain at Jerusalem, because it brings with it the vapours arising from the sea, that lies north of it." The marginal is the true reading; and is supported by the Chaldee, Syriac, and Septuagint: but the Arabic reads south wind.

A backbiting tongue.] A hidden tongue.

Verse 24. It is better to dwell in a corner] See the Note on chap. xxi. 9.

Verse 27. It is not good to eat much honey] Coverdale translates the whole passage thus:—"Like as it is not good to eat to muche hony; even so, he that wyll search out hye thinges, it shal be to hevy for him." As he that etith myche honge, and it is not to him goode; so, that is a serchar of mageste, schal ben oppressid of glorie.—Old MS. Bible. He that searches too much into mysteries, is like to be confounded by them. I really think this is the meaning of the place; and shall not puzzle either myself or my Reader with the discordant explanations which have been brought forward with the hope of illustrating this passage.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXVI.

Verse 1. As snow in summer] None of these is suitable to the time; and at this unsuitable time, both are unwelcome:—so a fool to be in honour is unbecoming.

Verse 2. As the bird] צפור tsippor, is taken often for the sparrow: but means generally any small bird. As the sparrow flies about the house, and the swallow emigrates to strange countries; so an undeserved malediction may flutter about the neighbourhood for a season: but in a short time it will disappear as the bird of passage; and never take effect on the innocent person against whom it was pronounced.

Verse 3. A whip for the horse] Correction is as suitable to a fool, as a whip is for a horse, or a bridle for an ass.

Verse 4. Answer not a fool] On this and the following verse Bishop Warburton who has written well on many things, and very indifferently on the doctrine of grace, has written with force and perspicuity. "Had this advice been given simply, and without circumstance, to answer the fool, and not to answer him, one, who had reverence for the text, would satisfy himself in supposing that the different directions referred to the doing a thing in and out of season:—1. The reason given why a fool should not be answered according to his folly, is, lest he (the answerer) should be like unto him. 2. The reason given why the fool should be answered according to his folly, is, lest he (the fool) should be wise in his own conceit.

"1. The cause assigned for forbidding to answer, therefore, plainly insinuates that the defender of religion should not imitate the insulter of it in his modes of disputation, which may be comprised in sophistry, buffoonery, and scurrility.

"2. The cause assigned for directing to answer, as plainly intimates that the sage should address himself to confute the fool upon his own false principles, by showing that they lead to conclusions very wide from, very opposite to, those impieties he would deduce from them. If any thing can allay the fool's vanity, and prevent his being wise in his own conceit, it must be the dishonour of having his own principles turned against himself, and shown to be destructive of his own conclusions." Treatise on Grace.—Preface.

Verse 6. Cutteth off the feet] Sending by such a person is utterly useless.—My old MS. Bible translates well:—Halt in feet and drinking wickidnesse that sendith wordis bi a foole messager. Nothing but lameness in himself can vindicate his sending it by such hands; and, after all, the expedient will be worse than the total omission, for he is likely to drink wickedness, i. e. the mischief occasioned by the fool's misconduct. Coverdale nearly hits the sense, as usual:—"He is lame of his fete, yee dronken is he in vanite, that committeth eny thinge to a foole."

Verse 8. As he that bindeth a stone in a sling, so is he that giveth honour to a fool.] It is entirely thrown away. This, however, is a difficult proverb; and the Versions give but little light on the subject. The Hebrew may be translated,—As a piece of precious stone among a heap of stones, so is he that giveth honour to a fool.—See the Margin, and Parkhurst: but on this interpretation the meaning would rather be, It is as useless to throw a jewel among a heap of stones to increase its bulk, as to give honour to a fool.

As he that sendith a stoon into a hepe of monee; so he that geveth to an unwijsman wirship.—Old MS. Bible.

"He that setteth a foole in hye dignite, that is even as yf a man dyd caste a precious stone upon the galous."—Coverdale. This translator refers to the custom of throwing a stone to the heap under which a criminal lay buried. The Vulgate gives some countenance to this translation:—"He who gives honour to a fool is like one who throws a stone to Mercury's heap." Mercury was considered the deity who presided over the highways; and stones were erected in different places to guide the traveller. Hence those lines of Dr. Young:—

"Death stands like Mercuries in every way:
And kindly points us to our journey's end."

Verse 10. The great God that formed all things] See the Margin, where this verse is very differently translated. I shall add that of Coverdale:—"A man of experience discerneth all thinges well: but whoso hyreth a foole, hyreth soch one as wyl take no hede." The רב rab, may mean either the great God, or a great man: hence the two renderings in the text and in the margin.

Verse 11. As a dog returneth to his vomit] See Note on 2 Pet. ii. 22.

Verse 13. The slothful man saith] See Note on chap. xxii. 13.

Verse 16. Than seven men that can render a reason.] Seven only means here perfection, abundance, or multitude. He is wiser in his own eyes than a multitude of the wisest men. "Than seven men that sytt and teach."—Coverdale. i. e. Than seven doctors of the law, or heads of the schools of the prophets, who always sat while they taught.

Verse 17. He that passeth by] This proverb stands true ninety-nine times out of a hundred, where people meddle with domestic broils, or differences between men and their wives.

Verse 19. Am not I in sport?] How many hearts have been made sad, and how many reputations have been slain, by this kind of sport? "I designed no harm by what I said;"—"it was only in jest," &c. Sportive as such persons may think their conduct to be, it is as ruinous as that of the madman who shoots arrows, throws firebrands, and projects in all directions instruments of death, so that some are wounded, some slain, and houses burnt.

Verse 20. Where no wood is, there the fire goeth out] The tale-receiver, and the tale-bearer, are the agents of discord. If none received the slander in the first instance, it could not be propagated. Hence our proverb, The receiver is as bad as the thief. And our laws treat them equally; for the receiver of stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen, is hanged, as well as he who stole them.

Verse 22. The words of a talebearer] The same with chap. xviii. 8. where see the note.

Verse 23. Burning lips and a wicked heart] Splendid, shining, smooth lips; that is, lips which make great professions of friendship, are like a vessel plated over with base metal, to make it resemble silver: but it is only a vile pot; and even the outside is not pure.

Verse 25. When he speaketh fair] For there are such hypocrites and false friends in the world.

Believe him not] Let all his professions go for nothing.

For there are seven abominations in his heart.] That is, he is full of abominations.

Verse 27. Whoso diggeth a pit] See Note on Psa. vii. 15. There is a Latin proverb like this:—Malum consilium, Consultori pessimum, A bad counsel, but worst to the giver. Harm watch; harm catch.

Verse 28. A lying tongue hateth those that are afflicted by it] He that injures another hates him in proportion to the injury he has done him: and, strange to tell, in proportion to the innocence of the oppressed. The debtor cannot bear the sight of his creditor; nor the knave him that he has injured.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXVII.

Verse 1. Boast not thyself of to-morrow] See Note on James iv. 13, &c. Do not depend on any future moment for spiritual good which in present thou needest, and God is willing to give; and without which, should death surprise thee, thou must be eternally lost: such as repentance, faith in Christ, the pardon of sin, the witness of the Holy Spirit, and complete renovation of soul. Be incessant in thy application to God for these blessings.

My old MS. Bible translates thus:—Be glorie thou into the morewenning. Here we see the derivation of our word morning; morewenning, from more, and wen or won, to dwell, i. e. a continuance of time to live or dwell in your present habitation. Every man wishes to live longer; and, therefore, wishes for to-morrow: and when to-morrow comes, then to-morrow, and so on.

Verse 2. Let another man praise thee, and not thine own mouth] We have a similar proverb, which illustrates this:—Self-praise is no commendation.

Verse 4. Who is able to stand before envy?] The Rabbins have a curious story on this subject; and it has been formed by the moderns into a fable. There were two persons, one covetous and the other envious, to whom a certain person promised to grant whatever they should ask: but double to him who should ask last. The covetous man would not ask first, because he wished to get the double portion; and the envious man would not make the first request, because he could not bear the thoughts of thus benefitting his neighbour. However, at last, he requested that one of his eyes should be taken out, in order that his neighbour might lose both.

Verse 5. Open rebuke is better than secret love.] Plutarch gives an account of a man who, aiming a blow at his enemy's life, cut open an imposthume, which, by a salutary discharge saved his life, that was sinking under a disease for which a remedy could not be found. Partial friendship covers faults:—envy, malice, and revenge, will exhibit, heighten, and even multiply them. The former conceals us from ourselves; the latter shows us the worst part of our character. Thus we are taught the necessity of amendment and correction. In this sense, open rebuke is better than secret love. Yet it is a rough medicine, and none can desire it. But the genuine open-hearted friend may be intended; who tells you your faults freely, but conceals them from all others:—hence the sixth verse, Faithful are the wounds of a friend.

Verse 8. As a bird that wandereth from her nest] Leaving her own brood, places of retreat, and feeding ground, behind; and going into strange countries, where she is exposed to every kind of danger. So is the man who leaves his family connexions and country, and goes into strange parts to find employment, better his circumstances, make a fortune, &c. I have seen multitudes of such wanderers from their place come to great misery and wretchedness. God's general advice is, Do good, and dwell in the land; and verily thou shalt be fed.

Verse 9. Ointment and perfume] Anointing the head and various parts of the body with aromatic oil is frequent in the East, and fumigating the beards of the guests at the conclusion of an entertainment is almost universal; as is also sprinkling rose-water, and water highly odoriferous. Two of the curious vessels which are used for this purpose are now before me: they hold some quarts each, and are beautifully inlaid with silver in the form of sprigs, leaves, &c.

Verse 10. Thine own friend] A well and long tried friend is invaluable. He that has been a friend to thy family never forget, and never neglect. And, in the time of adversity, rather apply to such an one, than go to thy nearest relative, who keeps himself at a distance.

Verse 12. A prudent man foreseeth the evil] The very same as chap. xxii. 3.

Verse 13. Take his garment] The same as chap. xx. 16.

Verse 14. He that blesseth his friend] He who makes loud and public protestations of acknowledgments to his friend for favours received, subjects his sincerity to suspicion: and remember the Italian proverb elsewhere quoted, "He who praises you more than he was wont to do, has either deceived you, or is about to do it." Extravagant public professions, are little to be regarded.

Verse 15. A continual dropping] See chap. xix. 13.

Verse 16. Whosoever hideth her, hideth the wind] You may as well attempt to repress the blowing of the wind, as the tongue of a scold; and to conceal this unfortunate propensity of a wife is as impossible as to hush the storm, and prevent its sound from being heard.

The ointment of his right hand] You can no more conceal such a woman's conduct, than you can the smell of the aromatic oil with which your hand has been anointed. The Hebrew is very obscure, and is variously translated. Coverdale thus:—"He that refrayneth her, refrayneth the wynde; and holdith oyle fast in his honde." That is, he attempts to do what is impossible to be done.

Verse 17. Iron sharpeneth iron] As hard iron, viz. steel, will bring a knife to a better edge when it is properly whetted against it; so one friend may be the means of exciting another to reflect, dive deeply into, and illustrate a subject, without which whetting, or excitement, this had never taken place. Had Horace seen this proverb in the Septuagint translation when he wrote to the Pisos?

Ergo fungar vice cotis, acutum
Reddere quæ ferrum valet, exors ipsa secandi.
HOR. ARS. POET. ver. 304.

"But let me sharpen others as the hone Gives edge to razors, though itself have none."
FRANCIS.

Verse 19. As in water face answereth to face] All men's hearts are pretty nearly alike: water is not more like to water, than one heart is to another. Or, as a man sees his face perfectly reflected by the water, when looking into it; so the wise and penetrating man sees generally what is in the heart of another by considering the general tenor of his words and actions.

"Surely, if each man saw another's heart,
There would be no commerce;
All would disperse,
And live apart."
HERBERT.

Verse 20. Hell and destruction are never full] How hideous must the soul be of a covetous man, when God compares it to hell and perdition!

The eyes of man are never satisfied.] As the grave can never be filled up with bodies, nor perdition with souls; so the restless desire, the lust of power, riches, and splendour, is never satisfied. Out of this ever unsatisfied desire spring all the changing fashions, the varied amusements, and the endless modes of getting money, prevalent in every age, and in every country.

Verse 21. As the fining pot for silver] As silver and gold are tried by the art of the refiner, so is a man's heart by the praise he receives. If he feel it not, he deserves it: if he be puffed up by it, he is worthless.

Verse 22. Though thou shouldest bray a fool] Leaving all other conjectures, of which commentators are full, I would propose, that this is a metaphor taken from pounding metallic ores in very large mortars, such as are still common in the East, in order that, when subjected to the action of the fire, the metal may be the more easily separated from the ore. However you may try, by precept, or example, or both, to instruct a stupid man, your labour is lost; his foolishness cannot be separated from him. You may purge metals of all their dross: but you cannot purge the fool of his folly.

Verse 23. The state of thy flocks] The directions to the end of the chapter refer chiefly to pastoral and agricultural affairs. Do not trust thy flocks to the shepherd merely: number them thyself; look into their condition; see how they are tended; and when, and with what, and in what proportion, they are fed.

Verse 24. For riches are not for ever] All other kinds of property are very transitory. Money and the highest civil honours are but for a short season. Flocks and herds, properly attended to, may be multiplied and continued from generation to generation. The crown itself is not so naturally permanent.

Verse 25. The hay appeareth] Take care that this be timeously mown, carefully dried, and safely ricked or housed. And when the tender grass and the proper herbs appear in the mountains in the spring, then send forth the lambs, the young of the flock, that they may get suitable pasturage, without too much impoverishing the home fields: for by the sale of the lambs and goats, the price of the fields is paid,—all the landlord's demands are discharged. Either a certain number of lambs, goats, and other cattle, was given to the landlord; or so much money, as so many lambs, &c. were then worth.

Verse 26. The lambs are for thy clothing] So many fleeces are given in some places as rent to the landlord.

Verse 27. Goats' milk enough for thy food] ללחמך lelachmeca, to thy bread; for they ate the bread and supped the milk to assist mastication, and help deglutition. And it seems that bread, with goats' milk, were the general articles of food for the master and his family; and for the servant maids who assisted in the household work, and performed the operations required in the dairy.

The Reader, who wishes to see these maxims detailed and illustrated at large, may consult the writers De Re Rusticâ, where he will find much curious information.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

The timidity of the wicked. Quick succession in the government of a country is a punishment to the land. Of the poor. Who oppress the poor. The upright poor man, preferable to the wicked rich man. The unprofitable conduct of the usurer. The prosperity of the righteous a cause of rejoicing. He is blessed who fears always. A wicked ruler a curse. The murderer generally execrated. The faithful man. The corrupt judge. The foolishness of trusting in one's own heart. The charitable man. When the wicked are elevated, it is a public evil.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXVIII.

Verse 1. The wicked flee] Every wicked man, however bold he may appear, is full of dreary apprehensions relative to both worlds. But the righteous has true courage, being conscious of his own innocence, and the approbation of his God. The unpitious fleeth.—Old MS. Bible. This word is often used for impious, wicked, ungodly; hence it appears that our word pity meant anciently piety or godliness.

Verse 2. Many are the princes] Nations, as nations, cannot be judged in a future world; therefore, God judges them here. And where the people are very wicked, and the constitution very bad, the succession of princes is frequent: they are generally taken off by an untimely death. Where the people know that the constitution is in their favour, they seldom disturb the prince; as they consider him the guardian of their privileges.

But by a man of understanding] Whether he be a king, or the king's prime minister, the prosperity of the state is advanced by his counsels.

Verse 3. A poor man that oppresseth the poor] Our Lord illustrates this proverb most beautifully, by the parable of the two debtors. Matt. xviii. 23. One owed ten thousand talents, was insolvent, begged for time, was forgiven. A fellow-servant owed this one a hundred pence: he was insolvent; but prayed his fellow-servant to give him a little time, and he would pay it all. He would not, took him by the throat, and cast him into prison till he should pay that debt. Here the poor oppressed the poor;—and what was the consequence? The oppressing poor was delivered to the tormentors; and the forgiven debt charged to his amount, because he showed no mercy. The comparatively poor are often shockingly uncharitable and unfeeling towards the real poor.

Like a sweeping rain] These are frequent in the East; and sometimes carry flocks, crops, and houses, away with them.

Verse 4. They that forsake the law] He that transgresses says, in fact, that it is right to transgress; and thus other wicked persons are encouraged.

Verse 5. They that seek the LORD understand all things.] They are wise unto salvation; they have the unction from the Holy One, and they know all things, 1 John ii. 20. every thing that is essentially needful for them to know, in reference to both worlds.

Verse 8. He that by usury—increaseth his substance] By taking unlawful interest for his money; lending to a man in great distress money, for the use of which he requires an exorbitant sum. O that the names of all those unfeeling hard-hearted consummate villains in the nation, who thus take advantage of their neighbour's necessities to enrich themselves, were published at every market cross; and then the delinquents all sent to their brother savages in New Zealand. It would be a happy riddance to the country.

Verse 9. He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law] Many suppose, if they do not know their duty, they shall not be accountable for their transgressions; and therefore avoid every thing that is calculated to enlighten them. They will not read the Bible, lest they should know the will of God; and they will not attend Divine ordinances for the same reason. But this pretence will avail them nothing; as he that might have known his master's will, but would not, shall be treated as he shall be who did know it, and disobeyed it. Even the prayers of such a person as this are reputed sin before God.

Verse 10. Whoso causeth the righteous to go astray] He who strives to pervert one really converted to God, in order that he may pour contempt on religion, shall fall into that hell to which he has endeavoured to lead the other.

Verse 12. When righteous men do rejoice] When true religion is no longer persecuted, and the word of God duly great glory: but when the wicked rise, a man is [a] hidden.

13 [b] He that covereth his sins shall not prosper: but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy.

14 Happy is the man [c] that feareth alway: [d] but he that hardeneth his heart shall fall into mischief.

15 [e] As a roaring lion, and a ranging bear; [f] so is a wicked ruler over the poor people.

16 The prince that wanteth understanding is also a great oppressor: but he that hateth covetousness shall prolong his days.

17 [g] A man that doeth violence to the blood of any person shall flee to the pit; let no man stay him.

18 [h] Whoso walketh uprightly shall be saved: but [i] he that is perverse in his ways shall fall at once.

19 [k] He that tilleth his land shall have plenty of bread: but he that followeth after vain persons shall have poverty enough.

20 A faithful man shall abound with blessings: [l] but he that maketh haste to be rich shall not be [m] innocent.

21 [n] To have respect of persons is not good; for, [o] for a piece of bread that man will transgress.

22 [p] He [q] that hasteth to be rich hath an evil eye, and considereth not that poverty shall come upon him.

23 [r] He that rebuketh a man, afterward shall find more favour than he that flattereth with the tongue.

24 Whoso robbeth his father or his mother, and saith, It is no transgression; the same [s] is the companion of [t] a destroyer.

25 [u] He that is of a proud heart stirreth up strife: [x] but he that putteth his trust in the LORD shall be made fat.

26 He that trusteth in his own heart is a fool:

esteemed, there is great glory; for the word of the Lord has then free course, runs, and is glorified; but when the wicked rise, when they are elevated to places of trust, and put at the head of civil affairs, then the righteous man is obliged to hide himself; the word of the Lord becomes scarce, and there is no open vision. The first was the case in this country, in the days of EDWARD VI.; the second in the days of his successor MARY I. Popery, and knavery, under her, nearly destroyed the church and the state in these islands.

Verse 13. He that covereth his sins] Here is a general direction relative to conversion. 1. If the sinner do not acknowledge his sins; if he cover and excuse them, and refuse to come to the light of God's word and Spirit, lest his deeds should be reproved, he shall find no salvation. God will never admit a sinful unhumbled soul into his kingdom. 2. But if he confess his sin, with a penitent and broken heart, and by forsaking every evil way, give this proof that he feels his own sore, and the plague of his heart, then he shall have mercy. Here is a doctrine of vital importance to the salvation of the soul, which the weakest may understand.

Verse 14. Happy is the man that feareth alway] That ever carries about with him that reverential and filial fear of God, which will lead him to avoid sin, and labour to do that which is lawful and right in the sight of God his Saviour.

Verse 16. The prince that wanteth understanding] A weak prince will generally have wicked ministers, for his weakness prevents him from making a proper choice; and he is apt to prefer them who flatter him, and minister most to his pleasures. The quantum of the king's intellect may be always appreciated by the mildness or oppressiveness of his government. He who plunges his people into expensive wars, to support which they are burdened with taxes, is a prince without understanding. He does not know his own interest, and does not regard that of his people. But these things, though general truths, apply more particularly to those despotic governments which prevail in Asiatic countries.

Verse 17. That doeth violence to the blood] He who either slays the innocent, or procures his destruction, may flee to hide himself: but let none give him protection. The law demands his life, because he is a murderer; and let none deprive justice of its claim. Murder is the most horrid crime in the sight of God and man: it scarcely ever goes unpunished, and is universally execrated.

Verse 18. Shall fall at once.] Shall fall without resource, altogether.

Verse 19. He that tilleth his land] See chap. xii. 11.

Verse 20. He that maketh haste to be rich] See chap. xiii. 11.; xx. 21.

Verse 24. Whoso robbeth his father] The father's property is as much his own, in reference to the child, as that of the merest stranger. He who robs his parents is worse than a common robber; to the act of dishonesty and rapine he adds ingratitude, cruelty, and disobedience. Such a person is the companion of a destroyer; he may be considered as a murderer.

Verse 25. Shall be made fat.] Shall be prosperous.

Verse 26. He that trusteth in his own heart is a fool] For

NOTES ON CHAP. XXIX.

Verse 1. Hardeneth his neck] Becomes stubborn and obstinate.

Verse 3. But he that keepeth company] רעה rôeh, he that feedeth harlots, יאבר yeabed, shall utterly destroy his substance. Has there ever been a single case to the contrary?

Verse 4. He that receiveth gifts] This was notoriously the case in this kingdom, before the passing of the Magna Charta, or great charter of liberties. Hence that article in it:—Nulli vendemus justitiam,—"We will not sell justice to any." I have met with cases in our ancient records where, in order to get his right, a man was obliged almost to ruin himself in presents to the king, queen, and their favourites, to get the case decided in his favour.

Verse 5. Spreadeth a net for his feet.] Beware of a flatterer: he does not flatter merely to please you, but to deceive you, and profit himself.

Verse 9. Whether he rage or laugh] Coverdale translates:—"Yf a wyse man go to lawe with a foole, whether he deale with him frendly or roughly he geteth no rest."

Verse 11. A fool uttereth all his mind] A man should be careful to keep his own secret; and never tell his whole mind upon any subject, while there are other opinions yet to be delivered: else, if he speak again, he must go over his old ground; and, as he brings out nothing new, he injures his former argument.

Verse 12. If a ruler hearken to lies] Wherever the system of espionage is permitted to prevail, there the system of falsity is established: for he who is capable of being a spy and informer, is not only capable of telling and swearing lies, but also of cutting his king's or even his father's throat. I have seen cases, where the same spy received pay from both parties, and deceived both.

Verse 13. The poor and the deceitful man] It is difficult to fix the meaning of תככים tekakim, which we here render the deceitful man. The TARGUM has, The poor and the man of LITTLE WEALTH. The SEPTUAGINT has, The usurer and the DEBTOR. The VULGATE, The poor and CREDITOR. COVERDALE, The poor and the LENDER. OTHERS, The poor and the RICH; the poor and the OPPRESSORS. I suppose the meaning may be as in chap. xxii. 2. The rich and the poor meet together; the LORD is the Maker of them all. Where see the note.

Verse 16. When the wicked are multiplied] That, in the multiplication of the wicked, transgression is increased, requires no proof: but an important doctrine attaches to this. On this account, wicked nations and wicked families are cut off, and rooted out. Were it not so, righteousness would in process of time be banished from the earth. This will account for many of the numerous instances in which whole families fail.

Verse 18. Where there is no vision] My old MS. Bible, following the Vulgate, translates: Whan prophecye schal failen, the peple schal ben to scatered. Where Divine revelation, and the faithful preaching of the Sacred Testimonies, are neither reverenced nor attended; the ruin of that land is at no great distance.

But he that keepeth the law, happy is he.] Go how it may with others, he shall be safe. So our Lord: Blessed are they who hear the word of God, and keep it.

Verse 21. He that delicately bringeth up his servant] Such persons are generally forgetful of their obligations, assume the rights and privileges of children, and are seldom good for any thing.

Verse 22. An angry man stirreth up strife] His spirit begets its like, wherever he goes.

And a furious man aboundeth in transgression.] His furious spirit is always carrying him into extremes, and each of these is a transgression.

Verse 23. A man's pride shall bring him low] A proud man is universally despised; and such are often exposed to great mortifications.

Verse 24. Hateth his own soul] נפשו naphsho, his life; as outraged law may at any time sieze on and put him to death.

He heareth cursing] אלה alah, the execration or adjuration: for all culprits were charged, as before God, to tell the truth, ולא יגד velo yagid; but HE will not tell IT. He has no fear of God, nor reverence for an oath; because his heart is hardened through the deceitfulness of sin.

Verse 25. The fear of man bringeth a snare] How often has this led weak men, though sincere in their general character, to deny their God, and abjure His people! See the case of Peter; and learn from this, O Reader, that where the mighty have been slain thou wilt fall, unless thou call on the Strong for strength; and courage to use it. Be not ashamed of JESUS, nor of His people, nor of His cross. Glory in this that thou knowest Him, art joined to them, and art counted worthy to bear it.

Verse 26. Many seek the ruler's favour] To be screened from the punishment determined by the law: but should he grant the sought favour, and pardon the criminal, this takes not away his guilt in the sight of God; from whom all just judgment does proceed.

Verse 27. And he that is upright in the way] "But as for those that be in the right waye, the wicked hate them." COVERDALE.

To this verse the VULGATE adds the following:—Verbum custodiens filius, extra perditionem erit. "The son that keeps the word shall not fall into perdition." This is not in all copies of the Vulgate: but it was in that from which my Old MS. Bible was made, where it is thus translated,—The gone keping the worde schal ben out of perdicyon. I believe verbum here is intended for the Divine word; the revelation from God.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXX.

Verse 1. The words of Agur the son of Jakeh] The words Agur, Jakeh, Ithiel, and Ucal, have been considered by some as proper names; by others as descriptive characters. With some Agur is Solomon; and Jakeh, David; and Ithiel and Ucal epithets of Christ.

The Vulgate translates, Verba congregantis, filii vomentis. Visio quem locutus est vir, cum quo est Deus, et qui Deo secum morante confortatus, ait;—"The words of the collector, the son of the vomiter; the vision of the man who has God with him, and who is fortified by God dwelling with him, saith."

COVERDALE makes the following words a title to the Chapter:

"The wordes of Agur the sonne of Jake.

"The prophecie of a true faithfull man, whom God hath helped; whom God hath conforted and nourished."

The whole might be thus translated, keeping near to the letter:—

"The words of the epistle of the obedient son." Or,

"The words of the collector, the son of Jakeh. The parable which הגבר ha-geber, the strong man, the hero, spake unto Him who is God with me; to Him who is God with me, even the strong God."

The visioun that a man spake with whiche is God, and that God with him, wonyng confortid.—Old MS. Bible.

From this introduction, from the names here used, and from the style of the book, it appears evident that Solomon was not the author of this chapter; and that it was designed to be distinguished from his work by this very preface, which specifically distinguishes it from the preceding work. Nor can the words in verses 2, 3, 8, and 9, be at all applied to Solomon:—they suit no part of Solomon's life, nor of his circumstances. We must, therefore, consider it an appendix or supplement to the preceding collection; something in the manner of that part, which the men of Hezekiah, king of Judah, had collected. As to mysteries here, many have been found by them who sought for nothing else: but they are all, in my view of the subject, hazarded and precarious. I believe Agur, Jakeh, Ithiel, and Ucal, to be the names of persons who did exist: but of whom we know but what is here mentioned. Agur seems to have been a public teacher, and Ithiel and Ucal to have been his scholars; and what he delivers to them was done by prophecy. It was what the prophets generally term משא massa, an ORACLE, something immediately delivered by the Holy Spirit for the benefit of man.

Verse 2. Surely I am more brutish] These words can, in no sense, nor by any mode of speech, be true of Solomon: for, while he was the wisest of men, he could not have said that he was more brutish than any man, and had not the understanding of a man. It is saying nothing to the purpose, to say he was so, independently of the Divine teaching. Had he put this in, even by innuendo, it might be legitimate: but he does not; nor is it by fair implication to be understood. Solomon is not supposed to have written the Proverbs after he fell from God. Then indeed he might have said he had been more brutish than any man. But Agur might have used these words with strict propriety, for aught we know; for it is very probable that he was a rustic, without education, and without any human help, as was the prophet Amos; and that all that he knew now was by the inspiration of the Almighty, independently of which he was a rustic, and uneducated.

Verse 3. I neither learned wisdom] I have never been a scholar in any of those schools of the wise men; nor have the knowledge of the holy, קדשים kedoshim, of the saints or holy persons.

The Septuagint gives this a different turn:—Θεος εδιδαχε με σοφιαν, και γνωσιν αγιων εγνωκα, "God hath taught me wisdom, and the knowledge of the saints I have known."

This may refer to the patriarchs, prophets, or holy men, that lived before the days of Solomon. That is, the translators might have had these in view.

Verse 4. Who hath ascended up into heaven, or descended?] Calmet paraphrases this passage thus:—"Who hath descended, &c. In order to show the truth of what he was about to say, he observes: I have not the science of the saints;—for, how could I have acquired it? Who is he who could attain to that? Who has ascended to heaven, to learn that science; and who has descended in order to publish it? Is the science of salvation one of those things that can be apprehended only by study? Is it not a pure gift of the goodness of God? Moses, after having shown to the people the will of God, said to them:—This commandment which I command thee this day, is not hidden from thee; neither is it far off. It is not in heaven, that thou shouldest say, Who shall go up for us to heaven, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it, and do it? Deut. xxx. 11, 12. The person, whose words we are here examining, speaks a knowledge more sublime than that contained in the simple laws of the Lord, common to all the people of Israel. He speaks of the sublime science of the designs of God, of His ways, and of His secrets: and in this sense he affirms he has no knowledge."

Who hath gathered the wind in his fists?] It is as difficult for a mortal man to acquire this Divine science by his own reason and strength, as to collect the winds in his fists. And who can command the spirit of prophecy, so that he can have it whensoever he pleases?

What is his name?] Show me the nature of this Supreme Being? Point out His Eternity, Omniscience, Omnipresence, Omnipotence,—comprehend and describe Him, if thou canst.

What is his son's name] The Septuagint has η τι ονομα τοις τεκνοις αυτου; "Or the name of his sons;" meaning I suppose the holy angels, called his saints or holy ones. Ver. 3.

The Arabic has, What is his name? وما اسم والدهٔ and what is the name of his father,—him who begat him.—But the Chaldee, the Syriac, and the Vulgate, read as the Hebrew.

Many are of opinion that Agur refers here to the First and Second persons of the ever-blessed TRINITY. It may be so:—but who would venture to rest the proof of that most glorious doctrine upon such a text, to say nothing of the obscure author? The doctrine is true, sublimely true: but many doctrines have suffered in controversy, by improper texts being urged in their favour. Every lover of God and truth should be very choice in his selections, when he comes forward in behalf of the more mysterious doctrines of the Bible. Quote nothing that is not clear,—advance nothing that does not tell. When we are obliged to spend a world of critical labour, to establish the sense in which a text is to be understood, which we intend to allege in favour of a doctrine which we wish to support, we may rest assured, we are going the wrong way to work. Those who indiscriminately amass every text of Scripture they think bears upon the subject they defend, give their adversaries great advantage against them. I see many a sacred doctrine suffering through the bad judgment of its friends every day.—The Godhead of Christ—salvation by faith—the great atoning sacrifice,—and other essential doctrines of this class, are all suffering in this way. My heart says with deep concern,—

Non tali auxilio, nec defensoribus istis,
Tempus eget.—

When truth is assailed by all kinds of weapons, handled by the most powerful foes, injudicious defenders may be ranked among its enemies. To such we may innocently say, "Keep your cabins; you do assist the storm."

Verse 5. Every word of God is pure] כל אמרת אלוה צרופה kol imrath Eloah tseruphah—"Every oracle of God is purified." A metaphor taken from the purifying of metals. Every thing that God has pronounced, every inspiration which the prophets have received, is pure, without mixture of error, without dross. Whatever trials it may be exposed to, it is always like gold: it bears the fire: and comes out with the same lustre, the same purity, and the same weight.

He is a shield unto them] And this oracle among the rest. He is the defence of ALL them who put their trust in Him. לכל lecol, to ALL, is added here by nineteen of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS.; for instead of לחסים le-chosim, to the trusters, they read לכל החוסים le-col ha-chosim, "to EVERY ONE of them that trust;" Where the preposition and adjective are not only added, but the noun is written more full, and more emphatic: but a translation cannot well express it, without paraphrase.

6 [a] Add thou not unto his words, lest he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar.

7 Two things have I required of thee; [b] deny me them not before I die:

8 Remove far from me vanity and lies; give me neither poverty nor riches; [c] feed me with food [d] convenient for me;

9 [e] Lest I be full, and [f] deny thee, and say, Who is the LORD? or lest I be poor and steal, and take the name of my God in vain.

10 [g] Accuse not a servant unto his master, lest he curse thee, and thou be found guilty.

11 There is a generation that curseth their father, and doth not bless their mother.

[a] Deut. 4. 2. & 12. 32. Rev. 22. 18, 19.—[b] Heb. withhold not from me.—[c] Matt. 6. 11.—[d] Heb. of my allowance.

[e] Deut. 8. 12, 14, 17. & 31. 20. & 32. 15. Neh. 9. 25, 26. Job 31. 24, 25, 28 Hos. 13. 6.—[f] Heb. belie thee.—[g] Heb. Hurt not with thy tongue.

Verse 6. Add thou not unto his words] You can no more increase their value by any addition, than you can that of gold by adding any other metal to it. Take care that you do not any thing that this word forbids, nor leave undone any thing that it commands; for this is adding and diminishing in Scripture phrase.

Lest he reprove thee] Lest He try thy word by fire, as His has been tried: and it appear that, far from abiding the test, the fire show yours to be reprobate silver; and so thou be found a falsifier of God's word, and a liar.

How amply has this been fulfilled in the case of the Romish church. It has added all the gross stuff in the Apocrypha, besides innumerable legends and traditions, to the word of God! They have been tried by the refiner's fire. And this church has been reproved and found to be a liar, in attempting to filiate on the Most Holy God spurious writings discreditable to His nature.

Verse 7. Two things have I required of thee] These two petitions are mentioned in the next verse; and he wishes to have them answered before he should die. That is, he wishes the answer now, that he may live the rest of his life in the state he describes.

Verse 8. Remove far from me vanity and lies.] 1. שוא shavé, all false shows, all false appearances of happiness, every vain expectation. Let me not set my heart on any thing that is not solid, true, durable, and eternal. 2. Lies, דברי כזב debrey cazab, all words of deception, empty pretensions, false promises, uncertain dependencies, and words that FAIL; promises which, when they become due, are like bad bills; they are dishonoured, because they are found to be forged, or the drawer insolvent.

From the import of the original, I am satisfied that Agur prays against idolatry, false religion, and false worship of every kind. שוא shavé is used for an idol, a false god, Jer. xviii. 15.—My people have forsaken me; they have burnt incense to VANITY,—לשוא le shavé, to an IDOL. Psa. xxxi. 6. I have hated them that regard lying VANITIES;—הבלי שוא habeley shavé, vain IDOLS. See also Hos. xii. 11. Jon. ii. 8. And כזב cazab, a thing that fails or deceives, may well apply to the vain pretensions, false promises, and deceptive religious rites of idolatry. So Jer. xv. 18. Wilt thou be unto me as a liar, כמו אכזב ke-mo acazob, like the false failing promises of the false gods; and as waters that fail; לא נאמנו lo neeminu, that are not faithful,—not like the true God, whose promises never fail. According to this view of the subject, Agur prays, 1. That he may be preserved from idolatry. 2. That he may put no confidence in any words, but those pure words of God that never fail them that trust in him.

Give me neither poverty nor riches] Here are three requests, 1. Give me not poverty. The reason is added; lest being poor, I shall get into a covetous spirit; and impelled by want, distrust my Maker, and take my neighbour's property; and in order to excuse, hide, or vindicate my conduct, I take the name of my God in vain;—תפשתי taphashti, I catch at the name of God. Or, by swearing falsely, endeavour to make myself pass for innocent. For swere the name of my God.—Old MS. Bible. Coverdale, "deny, or apostatize from Him."

2. Give me not riches. For which petition he gives a reason also;—lest I be full, and addict myself to luxurious living, pamper the flesh and starve the soul; and so deny thee—the Fountain of goodness: and, if called on to resort to first principles, I say, Who is Jehovah? Why should I acknowledge, why should I serve Him? And thus cast aside all religion, and all moral obligation.

3. The third request is, Feed me with food convenient for me, הטריפני לחם חקי ha-teripheni lechem chukki; the meaning of which is, give me as prey my statute allowance of bread, i. e. my daily bread, a sufficient portion for each day. There is an allusion made to hunting:—"Direct so by Thy good providence, that I may each day find sufficient portion to subsist on, as a hunter in the forest prays that he may have good speed." It is the province of a preacher to show the importance and utility of such a prayer; and dilate the circumstances, and expand the reasons, after the commentator has shown the literal sense.

Verse 10. Accuse not a servant] Do not bring a false accusation against a servant, lest thou be found guilty of the falsehood; and he curse thee for having traduced his character, and in his turn traduce thine. In general, do not meddle with other people's servants.

wise man points out four grand evils, that prevailed in his time

The first, Those who not only did not honour, but evil-treated, their parents.

Verse 12. The second, Those who were self-righteous, supposing themselves pure, and were not so.

Verse 13. The third, Those who were full of vanity, pride, and insolence.

Verse 14. The fourth, The greedy, cruel, and oppressive; and especially oppressive to the poor.

Verse 15. The horseleech hath two daughters, crying, Give, give] This horseleech, says Calmet, is "COVETOUSNESS; and her two daughters are Avarice and Ambition.—They never say, It is enough; they are never satisfied; they are never contented."

Many explanations have been given of this verse; but as all the Versions agree in rendering עלוקה âlukah, the horseleech, or bloodsucker, the general meaning collected has been, "there are persons so excessively covetous and greedy, that they will scarcely let any live but themselves; and when they lay hold of any thing, by which they may profit, they never let go their hold, till they have extracted the last portion of good from it." Horace has well expressed this disposition, and by the same emblem; applied to a poor poet, who seizes on and extracts all he can from an author of repute, and obliges all to hear him read his wretched verses.

Quem verò arripuit, tenet, occiditque legendo,
Non missura cutem, nisi plena cruoris, HIRUDO.
DE ARTE POET. ver. 475.

"But if he seize you, then the torture dread;
He fastens on you till he read you dead;
And like a LEECH, voracious of his food,
Quits not his cruel hold, till gorg'd with blood."
FRANCIS.

The word עלוקה âlukah, which we here translate horseleech, is read in no other part of the Bible. May it not, like Agur, Jakeh, Ithiel, and Ucal, be a proper name, belonging to some well known woman of his acquaintance, and well known in the public, who had two daughters, notorious for their covetousness and lechery? And at first view the following verse may be thought to confirm this supposition:—There are three things that are never satisfied; yea, four things say not, It is enough. The grave, the barren womb, the earth, the fire. What an astonishing similarity there is between this and the following institute, taken from the Code of Hindoo laws, chap. xx. sect. i. p. 203.

"A woman is never satisfied with the copulation of man, no more than a fire is satisfied with burning fuel; or the main ocean is with receiving the rivers; or death with the dying of men and animals."—You can no more satisfy these two daughters of Alukah, than you can the grave, &c.

Some of the Rabbins have thought that alukah signifies destiny, or the necessity of dying, which they say has two daughters, Eden and Gehenna, Paradise and Hell. The former has never enow of righteous souls; the latter of the wicked. Similar to them is the opinion of Bochart, who thinks alukah means destiny; and the two daughters, the Grave and Hell; into the first of which the body descends after death; and into the second, the soul.

The Septuagint gives it a curious turn, by connecting the fifteenth with the sixteenth verse:—Τῇ Βδελλῃ θυγατερες ησαν αγαπησαι αγαπωμεναι, και αι τρεις αυται ουκ ενεπιμλασαν αυτην, και ἡ τεταρτη ουκ ηρκεσθη ειπειν· Ικανον.—"The horseleech has three well-beloved daughters; and these three have not been able to satisfy her desire: and the fourth is not satisfied, so as to say, It is enough."

After all, I think my own conjecture the most probable. Alukah is a proper name; and the two daughters were of the description I have mentioned.

Verse 17. The eye that mocketh at his father] This seems to be spoken against those who curse their father, and do not bless their mother, ver. 11.

21 For three things the earth is disquieted, and for four which it cannot bear.

[b] Ch. 19. 10. Eccles. 10. 7.

The raven, the crow, the rook, the daw, the carrion crow, and the Cornish chough, appear to be all of the same genus. Some of them live on pulse and insects; others, the raven in particular, live on carrion.

The young eagles shall eat it.] The mother eagle shall scoop out such an eye, and carry it to the nest to feed her young. Many of the disobedient to parents have come to an untimely end: and in the field of battle, where many a profligate has fallen, and upon gibbets, have actually become the prey of ravenous birds.

Verse 19. The way of an eagle] I borrow with thanks the very sensible note of the Rev. Mr. Holden on this passage.

"The particle כן (ken) plainly shows, that verses 19 and 20. are to be taken in connexion; consequently, it is a comparison between the way of an adulterous woman, and the way of the things here described.

"The adulterous woman goes about in search of her deluded victim, like as the eagle takes its flight into the air to spy out its prey. She uses every species of blandishment and insinuation to allure and beguile, as the serpent employs its winding and sinuous motions to pass along the rocks: she pursues a course surrounded with danger, as a ship in the midst of the sea is continually exposed to the fury of the tempest, and the hazard of the shipwreck; and she tries every means, and exercises all her sagacity, to prevent the discovery of her illicit enjoyments, as a man attempts to conceal his clandestine intercourse with a maid. Such is the conduct of a lewd woman, marked by specious dissimulation and traitorous blandishment; she eateth, and wipes her mouth; she indulges her adulterous lust, yet artfully endeavours to conceal it, and with unblushing countenance asserts her innocence, exclaiming—I have done no wickedness."

Chaucer's January and May is an excellent comment on such wiles and protestations.

The way of a man with a maid.] בעלמה be-âlemah, with or in a maid: but one of De Rossi's MSS. has בעלמיו be-âlemaiv, in his youth; and with this the Septuagint, εν νεοτητι, the Vulgate, in adolescentiâ, the Syriac and the Arabic agree; and so also my own MS. Bible,—The weie of a man in his maying youthe. Dr. Kennicott, in a Sermon preached at Oxford, 1765, p. 46., has defended the reading of the Versions, corroborating it by two MSS. one in the Harleian, and the other in the Bodleian Library, besides that mentioned by De Rossi. See De Rossi's Var. Lect. Certainly the way of a man in his youth contains too many intricacies for human wisdom to explore. He only who searches the heart knows fully its various corrupt principles, and their productions. The common reading may refer to the formation of a child in the womb. But some have understood it of the immaculate conception. See my note on Matt. i. 23. where the subject is largely considered.

If we take the four things, which Agur says were too wonderful for him, in their obvious sense, there is little difficulty in them. 1. The passage which a bird makes through the air. 2. That which is made by a serpent on a rock. And, 3. That made by a ship through the sea,—are such as cannot be ascertained: for who can possibly show the track in which either of them has passed? And as to the fourth, if it refer to the suspected incontinence of one reputed a virgin, the signs are so equivocal, as to be absolutely unascertainable. The existence of the hymen has been denied by the ablest anatomists; and the signs of continence or incontinence, except in the most recent cases, are such as neither man nor woman can swear to, even to the present day; and they were certainly not less difficult to Agur and his contemporaries. I shall carry this matter no further.

Verse 21. For three things the earth is disquieted, and for four which it cannot bear] This is another enigma. Four things insupportable to men. 1. A slave, when he becomes ruler. 2. An overfed fool. 3. An ill-tempered woman, when mistress of a family. And, 4. A servant maid, when the rule of the house is committed to her.

1. A slave, when he comes to bear rule, is an unprincipled tyrant. It has been often observed both in America, and in the West Indies, when it was judged necessary to arm some of the most confidential slaves, that no regiments were used so cruelly in the drill, &c. as those black regiments, that had black officers.

2. The overfed fool. The intellectually weak man, who has every thing at his command, has generally manners, which none can bear; and, if a favourite with his master, he is insupportable to all others.

3. An ill-tempered woman, when she gets embarrassed with domestic cares, is beyond bearing.

4. A servant maid, when either through the death of the mistress, or the sin of the husband, she is in fact exalted to be head over the family, is so insolent and impudent, as to be hateful to every one, and execrated by all.

24 There be four things which are little upon the earth, but they are [a] exceeding wise:
25 [b] The ants are a people not strong; yet they prepare their meat in the summer;
26 [c] The conies are but a feeble folk, yet make they their houses in the rocks;
27 The locusts have no king, yet go they forth all of them [d] by bands;
28 The spider taketh hold with her hands, and is in kings' palaces.
29 There be three things which go well, yea, four are comely in going:
30 A lion which is strongest among beasts, and turneth not away for any;
31 A [e] greyhound; [f] an he goat also; and a king, against whom there is no rising up.
32 If thou hast done foolishly in lifting up thyself, or if thou hast thought evil, [g] lay thine hand upon thy mouth.
33 Surely the churning of milk bringeth forth butter, and the wringing of the nose bringeth forth blood: so the forcing of wrath bringeth forth strife.

Verse 24. There be four things] Of which it is said, they are very little, but very wise. 1. The Ants. 2. The Rabbits. 3. The Locusts. 4. The Spider.

1. The ants show their wisdom by preparing their meat in the summer; seeking for it and storing it when it may be had; not for winter consumption, for they sleep all that time; but for autumn and spring. See the note on chap. vi. 6. The Ants are a people; they have their houses, towns, cities, public roads, &c. I have seen several of these, both of the brown and large black ant.

2. The rabbits act curiously enough in the construction of their burrows: but the word שפן shaphan, probably does not here mean the animal we call coney or rabbit. It is most likely that this is what Dr. Shaw calls the Daman Israel; a creature very like a rabbit, but never burrowing in the ground, but dwelling in clefts and holes of rocks.

3. The locusts. These surprising animals we have already met with and described. Though they have no leader, yet they go forth by troops, some miles in circumference, when they take wing.

4. The spider. This is a singularly curious animal, both in the manner of constructing her house, her nets, and taking her prey. But the habits, &c. of these and such like must be sought in works on natural history.

Verse 29. There be three things which go well] Here is another set of emblems: four things which walk beautifully and with majesty. 1. The Lion. 2. The Greyhound. 3. The He-Goat. And, 4. A King.

1. Nothing can be more majestic than the walk of the lion. It is deliberate, equal, firm, and in every respect becoming the king of the forest.

2. The greyhound. זרזיר מתנים zarzir matenayim, the girt in the loins: but what this beast is, we do not distinctly know. It is most likely that it was the greyhound, which in the East are remarkably fine, and very fleet. Scarcely any thing can be conceived to go with greater fleetness, in full chase, than a greyhound: with its prey in view, it seems to swim over the earth.

3. The goat, תיש taish. This is generally allowed to be the he-goat,—and how he walks, and what state he assumes in the presence of his part of the flock, every one knows, who has at all noticed this animal. The ram also, which some suppose to be intended, is both fierce and majestic at the head of the sheep.

4. And a king, against whom there is no rising up. That is, a king whose court, counsels, and troops, are so firmly united to him, as to render all hopes of successful conspiracy against him utterly vain. He walks boldly and majestically about, being safe in the affections of his people. But the Hebrew is singular: it makes but two words; and these are they, ומלך אלקום u-melec Alkum, "and king Alkum." It is a doubt whether this may not be a proper name, as Agur abounds in them,—see Ithiel, Ucal, and probably Alukah, ver. 15. But it is said, "we know nothing of a king named Alkum:"—nor do we know any thing of Agur, Ithiel, Ucal, to say nothing of Alukah. And this might have been some remarkable chieftain, who carried his victories wherever he went, and was remarkably fortunate. If, however, we separate the word into אל al, "not," and קום kum, "he arose," we may make the interpretation above given.

Verse 32. If thou hast done foolishly] And who has not, at one time or other of his life?

Lay thine hand upon thy mouth.] Like the leper; and cry to God, Unclean! unclean! and keep silence to all besides. God will blot out thy offence, and neither the world nor the church ever know it, for He is merciful; and man is rarely able to pass by a sin committed by his fellows, especially if it be one to which himself is by nature not liable or inclined.

Verse 33. And the wringing] Who hugeli snytith drawith out blood.—Old MS. Bible. This is well expressed in homely phrase. The Septuagint have, "draw the milk, and you may have butter; if you press the nostrils, you may bring out blood; and if you draw out your discourse to a great length, you may have strife and contention." Avoid, therefore, all strong excitements and irritations. Coverdale's translations of this verse is very simple. "Whoso chyrneth mylck maketh butter; he that rubbeth his nose, maketh it blede; and he that causeth wrath, bryngeth forth strife."

THE words of king Lemuel, [a] the prophecy that his mother taught him.

2 What, my son? and what, [b] the son of my womb? and what, the son of my vows?

3 [c] Give not thy strength unto women, nor thy ways [d] to that which destroyeth kings.

4 [e] It is not for kings, O Lemuel, it is not for kings to drink wine; nor for princes strong drink:

5 [f] Lest they drink, and forget the law, and [g] pervert the judgment [h] of any of the afflicted.

6 [i] Give strong drink unto him that is ready to perish, and wine unto those that be [k] of heavy hearts.

7 Let him drink, and forget his poverty, and remember his misery no more.

8 [l] Open thy mouth for the dumb [m] in the cause of all [n] such as are appointed to destruction.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXXI.

Verse 1. The words of king Lemuel] דברי למואל מלך dibrey le-muel melec, "The words to Muel the king."—So the Syriac; and so I think it should be read, the ל lamed, being the article or preposition.

But who is Muel, or Lemuel? Solomon, according to general opinion; and the mother here mentioned, Bathsheba. I cannot receive these sayings:—1. Whoever this was, he appears to have been the first-born of his mother; called here emphatically בר בטני bar bitni, the son of my womb; which is not likely to be true of Solomon, as his mother had been wife of Uriah, and possibly had borne that rough and faithful soldier some children. 2. It is intimated here that this son had come by a lawful marriage: hence בר נדרי bar nidrai, the son of my vow, her matrimonial covenant: for so it is most natural to understand the words. But is there any proper sense in which we can say that this was correct in reference to David, Bathsheba, and Solomon? For although the son born in adultery died, it is by no means likely that Bathsheba made any particular vows relative to Solomon; for of her piety, so much vaunted of by some writers, we yet want the proofs.

But, however this may be, there is no evidence whatever that Muel or Lemuel means Solomon:—the chapter seems to be much later than his time; and the several Chaldaisms which occur in the very opening of it, are no mean proof of this. If Agur was not the author of it, it may be considered as another supplement to the Book of Proverbs. Most certainly Solomon did not write it.

The prophecy that his mother taught him.] משא massa, may here signify the oracle; the subject that came by Divine inspiration, see on chap. xxx. ver. 1. From this and some other circumstances it is probable that both these chapters were written by the same author. Houbigant thinks that Massa here is the name of a place; and, therefore, translates, "The words of Lemuel, king of Massa, with which his mother instructed him."

Verse 2. What, my son?] The Chaldee בר bar, is used twice in this verse, instead of the Hebrew בן ben, son. This verse is very elliptical; and commentators, according to their different tastes, have inserted words, indeed some of them a whole sentence, to make up the sense. Perhaps Coverdale has hit the sense as nearly as any other. "These are the wordes of kynge Lemuel; and the lesson that his mother taughte him. My sonne, thou son of my body, O my deare beloved sonne!"

Verse 3. Give not thy strength] Do not waste thy substance on women. In such connexions the strength both of body, soul, and substance, is destroyed. Such connexions are they that destroy kings, מלכין milacin, the Chaldee termination, instead of the Hebrew.

Verse 4. It is not for kings—to drink wine] An intemperate man is ill fit to hold the reins of government.

Verse 5. Lest they drink, and forget the law] When they should be administering justice, they are found either incapable of it; or, if they go into the judgment seat, may pervert justice.

Verse 6. Give strong drink unto him that is ready to perish] We have already seen, that inebriating drinks were mercifully given to condemned criminals, to render them less sensible of the torture they endured in dying. This is what was offered to our Lord: but He refused it. See note on Psa. civ. 15.

Verse 8. Open thy mouth for the dumb] For such accused persons as have no counsellors, and cannot plead for themselves.

Are appointed to destruction.] בני חלוף beney cheluph,—variously translated, children of passage, i. e. indigent travellers; children of desolation, those who have no possessions, or orphans. I believe it either signifies those who are strangers, and are travelling from place to place, or those who are ready to perish in consequence of want or oppression.

Verse 10. Who can find a virtuous woman?] This and the following verses are acrostic, each beginning with a consecutive letter of the Hebrew alphabet:—ver. 10. א aleph; ver. 11. ב beth; ver. 12. ג gimel; and so on to the end of the chapter, the last verse of which has the letter ת tau. From this to the end of the chapter we have the character of a woman of genuine worth laid down: first, in general, ver. 10, 11, and 12.; second, in its particular or component parts, ver. 13—29; and, third, the summing up of the character, ver. 30, 31.

I. Her general character.

1. She is a virtuous woman—a woman of power and strength. אשת חיל eshet chayil, a strong or virtuous wife, full of mental energy.

2. She is invaluable; her price is above rubies: no quantity of precious stones can be equal to her worth.

Verse 11. The heart of her husband]

3. She is an unspotted wife, and makes no waste of any thing: the heart of her husband doth safely trust in her. She will take care that a proper provision is made for the household. He has no need of spoil,—he is not obliged to go out on predatory excursions, to provide for his family, at the expense of the neighbouring tribes.

Verse 12. She will do him good]

4. She has her husband's happiness in view constantly. She recompenses all his kindness to her in beneficent acts. For kind words she gives kind deeds. 1. Her good is unmixed; she will do him good, and not evil. 2. Her good is not capricious; it is constant and permanent, while she lives and her husband lives. His heart safely trusts in her, for she will do him good all the days of her life. This is her general character.

Verse 13. She seeketh wool and flax, and worketh willingly, &c.]

II. This is the second part of her character, giving the particulars of which it is composed.

1. She did not buy ready woven cloth: she procured the raw material, if wool, most probably from her own flocks; if flax, most probably from her own fields.

2. Here she manufactured; for she worketh willingly with her hands. And all her labour is a cheerful service; her will, her heart, is in it.

It needs no arguments to prove that women, even of the highest ranks among the Greeks, Romans, and Israelites, worked with their hands at every kind of occupation necessary for the support of the family. This kind of employment was not peculiar to the virtuous woman in the text.

Verse 14. She is like the merchants' ships]

3. She acts like merchants. If she buy any thing for her household, she sells sufficient of her own manufactures to pay for it. If she imports, she exports; and she sends articles of her own manufacturing or produce to distant countries; she traffics with the neighbouring tribes.

Verse 15. She riseth also while it is yet night]

4. She is an economist of time: and when the nights are long, and the days short, her family not only spend a part of the evening after sunset in domestic labour; but they all arise before daylight, and prepare the day's food, that they may not have their labour interrupted. To those who are going to the fields, and to the flock, she gives the food necessary for the day;—טרף teref, prey, a term taken from hunting; the object of which was, the supplying their natural wants. Hence applied to daily food. See note on chap. xxx. ver. 8. And to the women who are to be employed within she gives חק chok, the task,—the kind of work they are to do, the materials out of which they are to form it, and the quantity which she expects from each. Thus all the servants are settled; their food, work, and tasks, appointed. Every thing is done orderly.

Verse 16. She considereth a field, and buyeth it]

5. She provides for the growing wants of her family. More land will shortly be needed, for the family is growing up; and having seen a field contiguous to her own, which was on sale, she estimates its worth, and purchases it a good bargain; and she pays for it by the fruit of her own industry.

6. She does not restrict herself to the bare necessaries of with the fruit of her hands she planteth a vineyard.

17 She girdeth her loins with strength, and strengtheneth her arms.

18 [a] She perceiveth that her merchandise is good: her candle goeth not out by night.

19 She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff.

20 [b] She [c] stretcheth out her hand to the poor; yea, she reacheth forth her hands to the needy.

21 She is not afraid of the snow for her household: for all her household are clothed with [d] scarlet.

22 She maketh herself coverings of tapestry; her clothing is silk and purple.

life; she is able to procure some of its comforts. She plants a vineyard, that she may have wine for beverage, for medicine, and for sacrifice. This also is procured by the fruit of her hands, by the produce of her own labour. Whatever goes out brings its worth in; and barter, not buying, is her chief mode of traffic.

Verse 17. She girdeth her loins with strength]

7. She takes care of her own health and strength, not only by means of useful labour: but by healthy exercise. She avoids what might enervate her body, or soften her mind,—she is ever active, and girt ready for every necessary exercise. Her loins are firm, and her arms strong.

Verse 18. She perceiveth that her merchandise is good]

8. She takes care to manufacture the best articles of the kind; and to lay on a reasonable price, that she may secure a ready sale. Her goods are in high repute; and she knows she can sell as much as she can make. And she finds that while she pleases her customers, she increases her own profits.

9. She is watchful and careful. Her candle, her lamp burns, all night, which is of great advantage in case of sudden alarms: and in the times and places where there were so many banditti, this was a very necessary family regulation. Perhaps some works were carried on during the night; those employed, sleeping in the day-time. Thus labour never stood still: while some slept, others worked. This was no unusual thing in ancient times; and it prevails now: but, alas, little children are often thus employed to help to support their indigent parents, and to fill the coffers of their unfeeling taskmasters.

Verse 19. She layeth her hands to the spindle]

10. She gives an example of skill and industry to her household. She takes the distaff, that on which the wool or flax was rolled; and the spindle, that by twisting of which she twisted the thread, with the right hand, while she held the distaff in the guard of the left arm, and drew down the thread with the fingers of the left-hand. Allowing that spindle and distaff are proper translations of כישור kishor, and פלך palec, this was their use, and the way in which they were used. The spindle and distaff are the most ancient of all the instruments used for spinning, or making thread. The spinning wheel superseded them in these countries: but still they were in considerable use till spinning machinery superseded both them and the spinning wheels in general.

Verse 20. She stretcheth out her hand to the poor]

11. She is truly charitable. She knows that in every portion of a man's gain God requires a lot for the poor; and if this is not given, God's blessing is not in the rest. And she is not contented to give common alms. While with one hand יד yad) she relieved the general poor; with both hands, (ידיה yadeyah) she gives to the needy, לעני le-âney to the afflicted poor.

Verse 21. She is not afraid of the snow]

12. She is not anxious relative to the health and comfort of her family in the winter season, she having provided clothes sufficient for each in the cold weather, in addition to those which they wore in the warm seasons.

For all her household are clothed with scarlet] Not scarlet, for the colour can avail nothing in keeping off the cold; nor would it be a proper colour for the bogs and dirt of winter. But שנים shanim, from שנה shanah, to iterate, to double, signifies not only scarlet, so called from being twice or double dyed: but also double garments; not only the ordinary coat, but the surtout, or great coat also, or a cloak to cover all. But most probably double garments, or twofold to what they were accustomed to wear, are here intended. If the general clothing be intended, scarlet cannot be the meaning; nor did our translators entirely rely on it: and, therefore, put double garments, the true meaning, in the margin; from which it cannot be too speedily transferred to the text. The Vulgate has duplicibus. And my old MS. very properly, alle forgoth hir hoomli men, ben clothid with double. And Coverdale, with equal propriety, "For all hir housholde folkes are duble clothed." But if her husband and children alone are referred to, scarlet, which is the general meaning of the term, may be proper enough: as even in these countries of ours, scarlet, as being a lively bright colour, is used in the winter dresses.

Verse 22. She maketh herself coverings of tapestry]

13. She is not regardless either of her own person, or of the decent proper appearance of her presses and wardrobe. She has coverings or carpeting for her guests to sit upon;—she has also tapestry, מרבדים merabedim, either tapestry, carpet-

24 She maketh fine linen, and selleth it; and delivereth girdles unto the merchant.

25 Strength and honour are her clothing; and she shall rejoice in time to come.

26 She openeth her mouth with wisdom; and in her tongue is the law of [b] kindness.

27 She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness.

28 Her children arise up, and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her.

ing, or quilted work for her beds: and her own clothing is ww shish, fine flax, or linen cloth, and purple; probably for a cloak or mantle. The fine linen or cotton cloth of Egypt is probably intended. I have seen it often wrapping the bodies of mummies: it is something like our coarse calico. The purple was supposed to have been dyed by a precious liquor obtained from the pinna magna, a large shell fish, of the muscle kind, found on the coasts of the Mediterranean Sea. I have seen some of them nearly two feet in length. But it is a doubt whether ever any such liquor was obtained from this or any other fish: and the story itself is invented merely to hide the secret, the proper method of dying purple; which was kept so well, that it certainly died with the ancients.

Verse 23. Her husband is known in the gates]

14. She is a loving wife, and feels for the respectability and honour of her husband. He is an elder among his people, and he sits as a magistrate in the gate. He is respected not only on the account of the neatness and cleanliness of his person and dress: but because he is the husband of a woman who is justly held in universal esteem. And her complete management of household affairs gives him full leisure to devote himself to the civil interests of the community.

Verse 24. She maketh fine linen, and selleth it]

15. She is here remarkable for carrying on a traffic of splendid and ornamental dresses, or habits, as she is ver. 13. for a coarser manufacture. The סדין sidon, is supposed to come from سدن in Arabic; and to signify a kind of loose inner garment, shirt, chemise, or fine muslin covering. Some of these are so exceedingly fine, like the abrooan, that when spread on the grass, they are scarcely discernible. Some such garments as these are still worn by ladies in India, and in China; and are so thin and transparent, that every part of the body may be seen through them. I have many representations of persons clothed in this way before me, both of the Chinese, the Hindoo, and the Malabar ladies. Probably this eminent Jewish matron had such articles manufactured in her own house. She dealt also in girdles. These are still a very general and very expensive article of dress. I have seen them made of silk; and highly ornamented with gold and silver thread, worked into flowers and various curious devices. The loose Eastern robe is confined by these: and the word may also take in the shawl of the turban, which is often superb and costly. It is properly the girdle for the head. As these were generally woven, the consumption was great: and an able artist must have a good trade.

The Arabic gives a remarkable translation of this verse:—"She maketh towels (or table-cloths,) and sells them to the inhabitants of Bisra, (a city in Mesopotamia,) and fine linens, and sells them to the Canaanites." My old MS. Bible has, Sandel sche made and sold, and a litil girdil sche toke to Chanane. Perhaps לכנעני le-canâney, for the merchants, may stand here for לכנעניים le-canaanim, the Canaanites.

Verse 25. Strength and honour are her clothing]

16. All the articles manufactured by herself, or under her care, have a double perfection:—1. They are strong. 2. They are elegant. Strength and honour are her clothing; and on account of this she shall rejoice in time to come; she shall never have occasion to blush for any thing she has made, for any thing she or hers have worn, or for any thing she has sold. Besides, she has so conducted herself that she has reason to expect that the hand of the Lord shall be still with her, and shall keep her from evil that it may not grieve her.

Verse 26. She openeth her mouth with wisdom]

17. He comes now to the moral management of her family. 1. She is wise and intelligent;—she has not neglected the cultivation of her mind. 2. She is amiable in her carriage, full of good nature, well-tempered, and conciliating in her manners and address.

Her tongue is the law of kindness.] This is the most distinguishing excellence of this woman. There are very few of those who are called managing women who are not lords over their husbands, tyrants over their servants, and insolent among their neighbours. But this woman, with all her eminence and excellence, was of a meek and quiet spirit. Blessed woman!

Verse 27. She looketh well to the ways of her household]

18. She is a moral manager;—she takes care that all shall behave themselves well; that none of them shall keep bad company, or contract vicious habits. A religious industry, or an industrious religion, is the law of her house. She can instruct them in religion, as well as she can teach them in their labour. In her house, diligence in business, and fervency of spirit, serving the Lord, go hand in hand.

And eateth not the bread of idleness.]

19. She knows that idleness leads to vice; and, therefore, every one has his work, and every one has his proper food. That they may work well, they are fed well; and every one, at least, earns the bread that he eats—eateth not the bread of idleness.

Verse 28. Her children arise up, and call her blessed]

20. She considers a good education next to Divine influ-

29 Many daughters [a] have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all.

30 Favour is deceitful, and [b] beauty is vain: but a woman that feareth the LORD, she shall be praised.

31 Give her of the fruit of her hands; and let her own works praise her in the gates.

ence: and she knows also that if she train up a child in the way he should go, when he is old he will not depart from it. 1. Her children are well bred: they rise up, and pay due respect. 2. They are taught the fear of the Lord, and obedience to His testimonies;—therefore, they call her blessed. So, they are of a decent, orderly, respectable, religious behaviour. 3. Her husband is so satisfied with her conduct towards himself, his household, his business, and their children, that he praiseth her. He shows himself sensible of her excellence; and encourages her, in her work, by the commendations he bestows.

Verse 29. Many daughters have done virtuously] This is undoubtedly the speech of the husband, giving testimony to the excellence of his wife:—her husband also, and he praiseth her, saying, Many daughters, women, have done virtuously, with due propriety as wives, mistresses, and mothers; but THOU, my incomparable wife, excellest them all: ואת עליה על כלנה ve-attah âlita âl culana, but THOU hast ascended above the whole of them; thou hast carried every duty, every virtue, and every qualification and excellency, to a higher perfection, than any of whom we have ever read or heard. And let the Reader seriously consider the above particulars, as specified under the different heads and subdivisions; and he will be probably of the same mind. But high as the character of this Jewish matron stands in the preceding description, I can say, that I have met at least her equal, in a daughter of the Rev. Dr. Samuel Annesly, the wife of Samuel Wesley, sen. Rector of Epworth in Lincolnshire, and mother of the late extraordinary brothers, John and Charles Wesley. I am constrained to add this testimony, after having traced her from her birth to her death, through all the relations that a woman can bear upon earth. Her Christianity gave to her virtues and excellencies a heightening, which the Jewish matron could not possess. Besides, she was a woman of great learning and information, and of a depth of mind, and reach of thought, seldom to be found among the daughters of Eve, and not often among the sons of Adam.

Verse 30. Favour is deceitful, and beauty is vain, &c.] III. Here is the summing up of the character. 1. Favour, חן chen, grace of manner may be deceitful, many a fair appearance of this kind is put on, assumed for certain secular or more unworthy purposes; it is learned by painful drilling in polished seminaries, and being the effect of mere physical discipline, it continues while the restraint lasts; but it is שקר sheker, a lie, a mere semblance, an outward varnish. It is not the effect of internal moral regulation: it is an outside, at which the inside murmurs; and which, because not ingenuous, is a burthen to itself.

2. Beauty, היפי hayophi, elegance of shape, symmetry of features, dignity of mien, and beauty of countenance, are all הבל hebel, vanity; sickness impairs them, suffering deranges them, and death destroys them.

3. But a woman that feareth the LORD, possesses true religion, has that grace that harmonizes the soul, that purifies and refines all the tempers and passions, and, that ornament beauty; of a meek and quiet mind, which, in the sight of God, is of great price.

She shall be praised.] This is the lasting grace, the unfading beauty.

Verse 31. Give her of the fruit of her hands] This may be a prayer. May she long enjoy the fruit of her labours! May she see her children's children, and peace upon Israel!

And let her own works praise her in the gates.] Let what she has done be spoken of for a memorial of her: let her bright example be held forth in the most public places. Let it be set before the eyes of every female, particularly of every wife, and especially of every mother; and let them learn from this exemplar, what men have a right to expect in their wives, the mistresses of their families, and the mothers of their children. Amen.

Masoretic notes on this Book.

Number of verses in the Book of Proverbs, 915.
Middle verse, chap. xvi. 18.
The Syriac reckons 1863 verses.

The Arabic concludes thus:—"The discipline of Solomon written out by the friends of Hezekiah, king of Judah, the interpretation of which is extremely difficult, (but) is now completed by the assistance and influence of the Son of God."

In the Introduction to the Book of Proverbs, among the several collections of a similar nature which are mentioned there, I have referred to M. Galand's Maximes des Orientaux. From this work, as contained in the Supplement to the Bibliotheque Orientale, I have translated the following selection. They will serve to show the curious Reader how much similar sayings to those of Solomon still abound in the East.

ASIATIC PROVERBS.

I fear God; and beside Him I fear none, but that man who fears Him not.

He who knows not his Maker cannot know himself.

Godliness is the greatest wisdom, and impiety the greatest of follies.

The fear of God is the greatest safeguard.

To sin once is too much: but a thousand acts of devotion towards God are not sufficient to honour Him.

ASIATIC PROVERBS.

If a man foresaw his end, and his exit from life, he would abhor his actions, and their deceitfulness.

Life is a sort of sleep, from which many awake not but in death.

The life of man is a path that leads to death.

The orphan is not the person who has lost his father: but he who has neither wisdom, nor a good education.

Want of good sense is worse than all the degrees of poverty.

Nothing so effectually hides what we are as silence.

He who has least wisdom, has most vanity.

There is no greatness of soul in avenging oneself.

The heart of the fool is in his mouth, and the tongue of the wise man is in his heart.

He who runs with a slack rein, guided only by hope, encounters the last moment of his life, and falls.

Envy has no rest.

When you have once received a benefit, render yourself not unworthy of it, by a want of gratitude.

The desire of revenge is a constant hindrance to a happy and contented life.

When you have got an advantage over your enemy, pardon him, in returning God thanks for that advantage.

When you are in prosperity, you need seek no other revenge against him who envies you, than the mortification he has from it.

How advantageous must wisdom be to its possessor, seeing it is of so great value, as not to be purchased by money.

Nothing obtains pardon more speedily than repentance.

There is no disease so dangerous as the want of common sense.

Of all vices, vanity and a love of contention, are the most difficult to be corrected.

Visiting your neighbour is no crime: but your visits should not be so often repeated, as to induce him to say, It is enough.

If a prince would worship God in truth, he must remain in his limits, be true to his treaties, be content with what he has, and suffer patiently the privation of what he has not.

Nothing so much resembles flowers planted on a dunghill, as the good which is done to an ignorant or worthless man.

In whatsoever company or society you be, engage not in those matters which concern the whole; for if you succeed, the whole company will attribute the success to itself; and if you succeed not, each person will lay the blame on you.

When the soul is ready to depart, what avails it whether a man die on a throne, or in the dust?

Take and give with equity.

We need not be surprised when those who ask or seek for improper things, fall into misfortunes which they did not expect.

Riches dwell no longer in the hand of a liberal man, than patience in the heart of a lover, or water in a sieve.

As soon as a person takes pleasure in hearing slander, he is to be ranked in the number of slanderers.

That which a man suffers for this world, fills his heart with darkness: but that which he suffers for the other, fills it with light.

The greatest repose which a man can enjoy, is that which he feels in desiring nothing.

One seldom finds that which he seeks, when he searches for it with impatience.

Do not reproach a man for the sin which he has committed, when God has forgiven him.

He who pushes a jest further than good breeding requires, shall never fail to be hated or despised.

He who is worthy of being called a man, is unshaken in adversity, humble in prosperity, active and bold in danger; and, if he be not learned, has at least a love for learning.

The man who is governed by his passions is in a worse state than the most miserable slave.

Men often give themselves much trouble to succeed in an affair from which they derive only vexation in the end.

He is a free man who desires nothing; and he is a slave, who expects that which he wishes.

The advice of a wise man is to be considered as a prediction.

Be sincere, though your sincerity should cost you your life.

Live not on credit, and you shall live in liberty.

A wise man practises the three following things:—he abandons the world before it abandons him; he builds his sepulchre before the time of entering it; and he does all with a design to please God, before entering into His presence.

He who lords it over those who are below him, shall one day find a master who will lord it over him.

Sin not, if you would have less vexation in the hour of death.

He who takes not counsel before hand, will surely fail in accomplishing his projects.

Covetousness leads to poverty: but he is truly rich who desires nothing.

He who relates the faults of others to you, designs to relate yours to others.

Watch your friends; except those of whom you are certain: but know that none can be a true friend but he who has the fear of God.

The most perfect pleasures in this world are always mingled with some bitterness.

He who considers consequences with too much attention, is ordinarily a man of no courage.

The world is the hell of the good, and the heaven of the wicked; i. e. it is all the evil that the former shall meet with, and all the good the latter shall enjoy.

By doing good to those who have evil intentions against you, you thereby shut their mouth.

He who knows well what he is capable of, has seldom bad success.

He who has too good an opinion of himself, drives all others away from him.

He who loves jesting and raillery, brings himself into many troubles.

Partial knowledge is better than total ignorance; if you cannot get what you wish, get what you can.

ASIATIC PROVERBS.

He who has lost shame, may bury his heart.

The poor should get learning in order to become rich; and the rich should acquire it for their ornament.

A man should accommodate himself to the weakness of his inferiors, in order to derive from them the services he requires.

An avaricious man runs straight into poverty. He leads a life of poverty here below: but he must give the account of a rich man in the day of judgment.

The greatest advantage that a man can procure for his children, is to have them well educated.

Do good to him who does you evil, and by this means you will gain the victory over him.

Men, because of speech, have the advantage over beasts; but brutes are preferable to men whose language is indecent.

If you can do good to-day, defer it not till to-morrow.

The excellence of many discourses consists in their brevity.

Two things are inseparable from lying; many promises, and many excuses.

Deceivers, liars, and all persons who lead an irregular life, are intoxicated by the prosperity which smiles upon them in all things: but that intoxication is the just recompense of their evil actions.

He lives in true repose, who bridles his passions.

It is in vain to expect these five things from the following persons. A present from a poor man; service from a lazy man; succour from an enemy; counsel from an envious man; and true love from a prude.

It is unbecoming the character of a wise man to commit the fault for which he reproves others.

A passionate man is capable of nothing:—how unfit then is such a person for a governor!

A rich man who is not liberal, resembles a tree without fruit.

You cannot keep your own secret,—what cause then have you to complain, if another to whom you have declared it, should reveal it?

It is the same with the administration of the affairs of kings, as with sea-voyages; you may lose, gain, amass treasures, and lose your life.

He who submits to a voluntary poverty neither possesses, nor is possessed by, any thing.

A wicked man should be considered as dead while he is alive: but a good man lives even in the tomb.

No man should undertake any thing till he has thoroughly examined it.

He who possesses any art or science, is at least equal to a great lord.

Honours, employments, and dignities, cannot recompense a man for the pains he has taken to acquire them.

On many occasions a good book supplies the place of an agreeable companion.

That day in which a man neither does some good action, nor acquires some useful knowledge, should not be (if possible) numbered in the days of his life.

He who is of a surly and unyielding disposition never fails to excite troubles even among relatives and friends.

A great monarch should fix a good reputation as an object to which he should continually bend his pursuits; because, of all the grandeurs and eminences of this world, this is the only thing that shall survive him.

Leave not till to-morrow what you can perform to-day.

To have pity on one's enemy, when he is in distress, is the mark of a great soul.

He who does good shall not lose his reward. A good action never perishes, neither before God nor before men.

Covetousness proceeds ad infinitum; therefore, determine the bounds of your desires, and the objects of your pursuits. He who does not act thus, shall never become either rich or happy.

A monarch who considers his own interest should ever abide in his kingdom, and consider himself as a rose in the midst of a garden, which continually reposes on thorns.

Never despise a man because his employment is mean, or his clothing bad. The bee is an insect which is not very pleasing to the sight, yet its hive affords abundance of honey.

The people enjoy repose, when governed by princes who take none. The monarch who watches, causes his people to repose in safety.

Confer your opinion with that of another, for truth is more easily discovered by two than one.

Do not rejoice at the death of your enemy; your life is not eternal.

Be always employed, that ye become not slothful; and refer to God all that you acquire by labour, otherwise you shall live in a continual and condemnable idleness.

It is extremely difficult to render him wise who knows nothing; because his ignorance causes him to believe that he knows more than he who attempts to instruct him.

One coat, one house, and one day's food, is enough for you; and should you die at noonday you will have one-half too much.

A covetous man is an enemy to all the poor; and is cursed both in this and the coming world.

Interested friends resemble dogs in public places, who love the bones better than those who throw them.

In order to live well, a man should die to all his passions, and every thing that depends on them.

A thousand years of delight do not deserve the risk of our lives for a single moment.

You shall only receive in proportion to what you give.

The service of kings may be compared to a vast sea, where many merchants traffic, some of whom acquire great riches, and others are shipwrecked.

Fear the man who fears you.

Do nothing without design.

Humble yourself in asking, that you may be raised up in obtaining what you request.

A wicked woman in the house of a good man is a hell to him in this world.

ASIATIC PROVERBS.

It cannot be said of a miser that he possesses his riches, however attached he may be to them.

The thought of evil frequently derives its origin from idleness.

Kings and subjects are equally unhappy, where persons of merit are despised, and where ignorant men occupy the chief places of trust.

Answer those who ask questions of you in such a manner as not to offend them.

The most proper method of punishing an envious person is, to load him with benefits.

Prudence suffers between impossibility and irresolution.

When you speak, let it be in such a manner as not to require an explanation.

The most precious acquisition is that of a friend.

Never trust to appearances. Behold the drum: notwithstanding all its noise, it is empty within.

Keep not an evil conscience: but be diffident, to the end that you be never surprised nor deceived.

Nothing remains with punishment or reward.

A wise man by his speeches does things which a hundred armies conjoined could not execute.

Do not speak till you have thought on what you intend to say.

Those who believe they may gain by seditions and commotions never fail to excite them.

The best friends we have in this world, are the spies of our actions, who publish our faults.

Hope for nothing from this world, and your soul will enjoy rest.

He who applies himself to acquire knowledge, puts himself in the capacity of possessing all good things.

He who does not succeed in the business in which he is employed, because he is incapable of it, deserves to be excused; for it is to be believed that he has done all he could to accomplish his end.

Every kind of employment requires a particular sort of genius.

Riches increase in proportion as you give to the poor.

The greatest reputation is frequently an embarrassment.

Do not despise a poor man because he is such; the lion is not less noble because he is chained.

A young man, who has the wisdom of an old man, is considered as an old man among those who are wise.

A righteous prince is the image and shadow of God upon earth.

As soon as virtue begins to discover itself, vice begins its insolent insults.

Can it be said that a man has wisely considered what he has done, when the end corresponds not with what he proposed?

To the end that what you desire may be advantageous to you, never desire any thing but that which is proper for you.

Those who will not forgive an offence are the most accursed of all men.

Though it be pretended that no man can shun his destiny, yet it is well to do nothing without precaution.

It is a double present when given with a cheerful countenance.

Nobility is nothing, unless supported by good actions.

Evil speaking and calumny never quit their hold till they have destroyed the innocent on whom they have once seized.

Consider your estate, and leave playing and jesting to children.

Soft words may appease an angry man; bitter words never will.

Would you throw fire on a house in flames to extinguish them?

Continue to speak the truth, though you know it to be hateful.

It is a blessing to a house to have a number of guests at table.

Five things are useless when they are not accompanied each with another thing:—advice without effect;—riches without economy;—science without good manners;—almsgiving to improper objects, or without a pure intention;—and life without health.

If you wish your enemy never to know your secret, never divulge it to your friend.

Art thou a man in honour? Wouldst thou live without inquietude or remorse? Then do actions worthy of thy character.

When subjects are ill-treated by subaltern officers, and cannot make remonstrances to the prince, because the too great authority of ministers of state deprives them of the means; their lot is like to that of a man who, half-dead with thirst, approaches the river Nile to drink; but, perceiving a crocodile, is obliged to perish for lack of water, or submit to be devoured.

It is better to perish with hunger, than to deprive the poor of their bread.

If you be reproved for your faults, do not be angry with him who does it: but turn your anger against the things for which he has reproved you.

Poisonous food is preferable to bad discourse.

Do not discover the faults of others, if you be unwilling to have your own known.

Wage war against yourself, and you will thereby acquire true peace of soul.

One resembles those, the company of whom he most frequents.

The best expended riches are those which are given for God's sake.

If you have a dispute with any person, take heed that you say not of him all the evil which you know; otherwise you will leave no room for accommodation.

Your conversation is the index of your intellect, and your actions show the bottom of your heart.

It is more difficult to manage riches well, than to acquire them.

The grandeur of kings is evidenced in the administration of justice.

Honour your parents, and your children will honour you.

Cultivate no friendship with him who loves your enemy.

If you have a friend who takes offence at trifles, break entirely with him, for he is not to be trusted.

The happiness of life is only to be found, when the conscience is pure and clean.

Measure every man with his own measure; i. e. do not expect or require from him more than is in him.

Can any man boast who considers what he is come from?

In whatever corner of the world you are, you will have something to suffer.

It will be more profitable for thee to adorn thy inside than thy outside.

The words of Lockman to his son.

My son, I wish thee to observe these six maxims, which comprehend all the morality of the ancients and moderns.

1. Have no attachment to the world, but in proportion to the short duration of thy life.

2. Serve God with all that fervour which the need thou hast of Him demands.

3. Labour for the other life that awaits thee, and consider the time it must endure.

4. Strive to escape that fire, out of which those who are once cast in, can never escape.

5. If thou hast temerity enough to sin, measure before hand the strength thou shalt require to endure the fire of hell, and the chastisements of God.

6. When thou wishest to transgress, seek for a place where God cannot see thee.

The words of Ali to his sons.

My sons, never despise any person: consider your superior as your father, your equal as your brother, and your inferior as your son.

Words addressed by a Mohammedan to the Messiah.

The heart of the afflicted draws all its consolation from Thy words.

The soul receives life and vigour at the bare mention of Thy name.

If ever the human spirit be rendered capable of contemplating the mysteries of the Divinity, it is Thou alone who givest it the light by which it understands, and the attractions by which it is penetrated.

END OF THE NOTES ON THE BOOK OF PROVERBS.

INTRODUCTION

BOOK OF ECCLESIASTES.

THE book, intituled Koheleth or Ecclesiastes, has ever been received, both by the Jewish and Christian church, as written under the inspiration of the Almighty; and was held to be properly a part of the Sacred Canon. But while this has been almost universally granted, there has been but little unanimity among learned men and critics, as to its author. To Solomon it has been most generally attributed, both in ancient and modern times.

Grotius, however, conjectured that it was written a long time after Solomon; and he says, at the close of his Notes on it, that it was revised in the days of Zerubbabel by some learned man, who in the twelfth verse of the last chapter addresses his son Abiud; And further by these, my son, be admonished. But such a conjecture appears to have little foundation. This great man was more successful in his criticism on the language of the book; showing that there are many words in it which do not savour of the purity of the Hebrew tongue; and are found in the times of the Captivity, and afterward, and such as appear principally in the Books of Ezra and Daniel.

Calovius has on the other hand (not with as much success as he imagined) argued against Grotius for the purity of the language.

Mr. G. Zirkel of Wurtzburgh published an examination of this book in 1792, in which he endeavours to prove:—

1. That the style of Ecclesiastes is that of the later Hebrew writers, as appears by the Chaldaisms, Syriasms, and Hellenisms, that occur in it.

2. That it may have been written between the years 380 and 130 before Jesus Christ, if not later.

The Jena reviewers, seem to have thought it to be a translation from the Greek, and to have been written by a Jew of Alexandria, while the famous library was founding by Ptolemy Philadelphus, king of Egypt, about the year 240 before Christ. And that it is to this circumstance that chap. xii. 12. alludes; of making many books there is no end; which could not have entered into the head of a Palestine Jew; and such a person might speak with propriety of an Israel in Jerusalem, chap. i. ver. 12. being acquainted with an Israel in Alexandria.

The Jews in general, and St. Jerom, hold the book to be the composition of Solomon, and the fruit of his repentance when restored from his idolatry, into which he had fallen through means of the strange or heathenish women whom he had taken for wives and concubines.

Others of no mean note, who consider Solomon as the author, believe, that he wrote it before his fall; there being no evidence,—1. That he wrote it afterward. 2. Nor that he ever recovered from his fall. 3. That it was in his old age, that his wives turned away his heart from God; and the book bears too many evidences of mental energy to allow the supposition, that in his declining age, after so deep a fall from God, he was capable of writing such a treatise. And, 4. That this opinion goes far towards destroying the Divine inspiration of the book; for if he did recover and repent, there is no evidence that God gave him back that Divine inspiration which he before possessed; for we hear of the Lord appearing to him twice before his fall, but of a third appearance there is no intimation. 5. Of the restoration of Solomon to the favour of God, there is no proof in the Sacred History: for in the very place where we are told that in his old age his wives turned away his heart from the Lord, we are told of his death, without the slightest intimation of his repentance.—See my character of Solomon at the end of 1 Kings xi.

Nothing, however, of this uncertainty can affect the character, importance, and utility, of the book in question. It is a book of singular worth; and the finest monument we have of the wisdom of the ancients, except the Book of Job.

But the chief difficulty attending this book is the principle on which it should be interpreted. Some have supposed it to be a dialogue between a true believer and an infidel; which makes it to the unwary Reader appear to abound with contradictions, and in some instances false doctrine. And that the parts must be attributed to their respective speakers, before an interpretation can be successfully attempted. I am not convinced that the book has any such structure; though in some places the opinions and sayings of infidels may be quoted; e. g. chap. vii. ver. 16. and in some of the following chapters.

In the year 1763, M. Desvœux, a learned foreigner, then resident in England, and in the British service, wrote and published a Philosophical and Critical Essay on this book, in which he endeavours to prove, that the design of the author was to prove the immortality of the soul; and that it is on this principle alone, that the book can be understood and explained.

As a late Commentator on the Bible has adopted this plan, and woven the major part of this dissertation in his notes on the book, I shall introduce the whole of Mr. Desvœux's analysis of its contents, the propositions, arguments, proofs, illustrations, corollaries, &c. on the ground of which he attempts its illustration.

"The whole of the discourse," he says, "may be reduced to the three following Propositions, each of which is attended with its apparatus of proofs and special observations.

PROPOSITION I.

"No labour of man in this world can render him contented, or give him true satisfaction of soul.

PROPOSITION II.

"Earthly goods and possessions are so far from making us happy, that they may be even viewed as real obstacles to our ease, quiet, and tranquillity of mind.

PROPOSITION III.

"Men know not what is or is not truly advantageous to them: because they are either ignorant or unmindful of that which must come to pass after their death.

"The three propositions, with their proofs and illustrations, are contained in the following Analysis.

PROPOSITION I.

Chap.	Ver.
I.	2, 3.	No labour of man, &c.
	4—11.	First proof.—The course of nature.
	12, &c.	Second proof.—Men's occupations.
	16—18.	First head.—Wisdom or Philosophy.
II.	1, 2.	Second head.—Pleasure.
	3—10.	Both jointly.
	11.	General conclusion of the second proof.
		A review of the second proof, with special conclusions, relating to every particular therein mentioned, viz.
	12—17.	I. Wisdom.
	18—23.	II. Riches.
	24—26.	III. Pleasure.
III.	1, &c.	Third Proof.—Inconstancy of men's wills.
	9.	Conclusion of the third proof.
		A review of the second and third proofs, considered, jointly, with special observations and corollaries.
	10, 11.	First observation.—God is inculpable.
	12—15.	Second observation.—God is the Author of whatever befalls us in this world.
III.	16, 17.	First corollary.—God shall redress all grievances.
	18—21.	Second corollary.—God must be exalted, and man humbled.
	22.	Third corollary.—God allows men to enjoy the present.
IV.	1.	Fourth proof.—Men's neglect of proper opportunities, evidenced in several instances, viz.
	1—3.	I. Oppression.
	4.	II. Envy.
	5, 6.	III. Idleness.
	7—12.	IV. Avarice.
V.	13—19.	V. Misapplication of esteem and regard.
		N. B. 1—9. Is a digression containing several admonitions, in order to prevent any misconstruction of the foregoing remarks.
	10—12.	IV. Expensive living.

PROPOSITION II.—Ch. IV. ver. 13.

Chap.	Ver.
V.	14—17.	First proof.—Instability of riches
VI.	18. 2.	Second proof.—Insufficiency of riches to make men happy.
	3—6.	Corollary.—The fate of an abortive is, on the whole, preferable to that of him who lives without enjoying life.
VI.	7—9.	Third proof.—Men's insatiableness.
	10, 11.	General conclusion from the first and second propositions.

PROPOSITION III.—Ch. IV. ver. 12.

Chap.	Ver.
VII.	1, &c.	First proof.—Wrong estimation of things.
		A digression, intended like that ver. 1—9. to prevent any misconstruction of the preceding observations; and containing several advices, together with a strong commendation of him who gives them, in order to enforce the observation of the rules he lays down.
	9—12.	First advice.—Do not blame Providence.
	13.	Second advice.—Do not judge of Providence.
	14, 15.	Third advice.—Submit to Providence.
VII.	16—20.	Fourth advice.—Avoid excesses.
	21, 22.	Fifth advice.—Do not heed idle reports.
	23—25.	Commendation of the foregoing advices from the author's application of every thing; and, especially,
	26—29.	I. Wickedness and ignorance.
VIII.	1—8.	II. Wisdom.
		Second proof.—Anticipated judgments;
	9—14.	I. That sin shall go unpunished, because it is so in this world.
IX.	15—6.	II. That life is preferable to death.

Chap.	Ver.
ix.	7—9.	First corollary.—Earthly enjoyments are not criminal.
	10.	Second Corollary.—We must make a proper use of our faculties.
	11—15.	Third proof.—Judgments that are seemingly right, but entirely false.
ix.	16, &c.	Fourth proof.—Little regard paid to wisdom.
	16. i.	Past services are forgotten.
	ii.	The least fault is noticed.
x. 5—19.	iii.	Favour gets what is due to merit.
	20.	A caution, to prevent the abuse of the preceding remarks.

PRACTICAL INFERENCES.

Chap.	Ver.
xi.	1—4. i.	From the first PROPOSITION.—We must give to earthly goods that stability of which they are capable.
	5, 6. ii.	From the first and second PROPOSITIONS,—We must, in all our conduct, conform to the design of Providence, and leave the success to God.
xii.	7, 8. iii.	From the three PROPOSITIONS, but especially from the third, we must seek for happiness beyond the grave.
	9—12.	Commendation of the work, from several considerations.
	13, 14.	CONCLUSION of the whole."

This is the whole of Mr. Desvœux's Analysis; and I place it here, that the Reader, who may approve of the plan, may keep it in view, while he is passing through the book. For my own part, I doubt whether the author made any such technical arrangement.

The three propositions which Mr. Desvœux lays down, and which are so essential to the interpretation he gives of the book, would have been expressly laid down by the inspired writer, had he intended such: but they appear no where in it; and Mr. D. is obliged to assume or gather them from the general scope of the work. However, on his plan, he has certainly made a number of judicious observations on different passages, though his translations are generally too bold; and seldom well supported by the original text.

In 1778, was published "Choheleth, or the Royal Preacher, a poetical Paraphrase of the Book of Ecclesiastes. Most humbly inscribed to the King." 4to. There is no name to this work. The late Rev. John Wesley gives the following account of the work and its author in his Journals:—

"Monday, Feb. 8, 1768. I met with a surprising poem, intituled Choheleth, or the Preacher: it is a paraphrase in tolerable verse, on the Book of Ecclesiastes. I really think the author of it, (a Turkey merchant) understands both the difficult expressions, and the connexion of the whole, better than any other, either ancient or modern writer, whom I have seen. He was at Lisbon during the great earthquake, just then sitting in his night gown and slippers. Before he could dress himself, part of the house he was in fell, and blocked him up. By this means, his life was saved; for all who had run out were dashed to pieces by the falling houses."

Mr. Wesley had certainly read this book in 1768: but it does not appear to have been printed till ten years after! How can we account for this? I know of no way, but one of these two:—1. Either there was a second edition, or a second title; which I have not been able to ascertain: or, 2. Mr. W. read the work in MS. He seems to have known the author well: but did not like to tell his name. About the year 1789 that eminent man recommended this work to me; and told me several particulars relative to it, which have escaped my memory. I procured the book the first opportunity, and read it with great satisfaction; and from it derived no small portion of information. Having now examined it anew, I can most cordially subscribe to Mr. Wesley's opinion. I really believe that the author understood both the difficult expressions, and the connexion of the whole, better than any other writer, whether ancient or modern, at least known to me.

Had it comported with my plan, I should have thought a reprint of his work, with the text (which he does not insert) and a few philological notes, would have been quite sufficient to have given my readers a safe and general view of the whole work and its design; though I can by no means adopt the author's hypothesis, that the book was written by Solomon after he was restored from his grievous apostasy. This is an assumption that never was proved, and never can be.

From the Preface to this work I have selected some general observations which I consider to be important, and subjoin to this Introduction; and what I borrow from the work itself I mark with a C, not knowing the author's name. Of the authenticity of the Book of Ecclesiastes I have no doubt: but I must say, the language and style puzzle me not a little. Chaldaisms and Syriasms are certainly frequent in it, and not a few Chaldee words and terminations; and the style is such as may be seen in those writers who lived at or after the Captivity. If these can be reconciled with the age of Solomon, I have no objection: but the attempts that have been made to deny this, and overthrow the evidence, are in my view often trifling, and generally ineffectual. That Solomon, son of David, might have been author of the whole matter of this, and a subsequent writer put it in his own language, is a possible case: and were this to be allowed it would solve all difficulties. Let us place the supposition thus: Solomon said all these things, and they are highly worthy of his wisdom; and a Divine writer, after his time, who does not mention his name, gives us a faithful version of the whole in his own language.

On other subjects relative to this book the author of Choheleth shall speak for me.

"I. Not to perplex our readers with the various expositions of the word Choheleth, the title of this book in the original; (for, in truth, we can find none better or more significant than that commonly received, viz. Ecclesiastes, or the Preacher;) let us now come to the book itself. Nothing can be more interesting than the subject it treats of, to wit, the chief or sovereign good, which man, as a rational and accountable being, should here propose to himself. Every human creature, it is certain, naturally aims at happiness: but though all apply themselves with equal ardour to this desirable end, yet such is the violence of passion, and want of reflection in the generality of mankind, that the means they use for obtaining it, instead of conducting them to the safe and direct road, only serve to mislead and bewilder them in dark and intricate labyrinths where it is impossible to find what they seek for. Now as it was absolutely necessary to convince such men of the vanity of their pursuits, in order to induce them to turn back into the right way, Solomon shows, in the first place, what is not happiness, and then what really is. Like a skilful physician, he searches deeply into the latent cause of the malady, and then prescribes a radical cure.

"II. In the former disquisition, he enumerates all those particulars which mankind are most apt to fix their hearts upon; and shows from his own dear bought experience, and the transient and unsatisfactory nature of the things themselves, that no such thing as solid felicity is to be found in any of them. What he asserts on this head carries with it the greater weight, as no man upon earth was ever better qualified to speak decisively on such a subject, considering the opportunities he had of enjoying to the utmost all that this world affords. After having thus cleared away the obstacles to happiness, he enters on the main point, which is to direct us how and where it may be found. This he affirms at the conclusion of the book, where he recapitulates the sum and substance of the sermon, as some not improperly have styled it, consists in a religious and virtuous life, with which, as he frequently intimates, a man in the lowest circumstances may be happy, and without which one in the highest must be miserable. As the whole book tends to this single point; so, in discussing thereof, many excellent observations are interspersed, relating to the various duties of life, from the highest to the lowest station; the advantages resulting even from poverty; the genuine use of riches, and extreme folly of abusing them; the unequal dispensations of Divine Providence; the immortality of the human soul; and great day of final retribution. All these noble and important subjects are treated of in such a style and manner as nothing among the ancients can parallel.

"We have here given the genuine character of this inestimable piece; yet such has been the ignorance, inattention, or depravity, of some persons, that it would be hard to find an instance of any thing written on so serious and interesting a subject, which has been so grossly misrepresented. How often has a handle been taken from certain passages, ill understood, and worse applied, to patronize libertinism, by such as pretend to judge of the whole from a single sentence, independent of the rest, without paying the least regard to the general scope or design? According to which rule the most pious discourse that ever was written may be perverted to Atheism. Some fanatics have fallen into the contrary extreme; for, on reading that all here below was vanity, they have been so wrong-headed, as to condemn every thing as evil in itself. This world according to them, cannot be too bitterly inveighed against; and man has nothing else to do with it, but to spend his days in sighing and mourning. But it is evident that nothing could be further from the Preacher's intention: for notwithstanding he speaks so feelingly of the instability and unsatisfactory nature of all sublunary things, and the vanity of human cares, schemes, and contrivances; yet, lest any one should mistake his meaning, he advises every man, at the same time, to reap the fruit of his honest labours, and take the comfort of what he possesses with a sober freedom and cheerful spirit. Not to harass and disturb his mind with anxious cares and restless solicitudes about future events: but to pass the short space which heaven has allotted him here, as pleasantly as his station will admit, with a quiet conscience. He does not condemn the things themselves, such as science, prudence, mirth, riches, honours, &c.: but only their abuse, that is, the useless studies, unreasonable pursuits, and immoderate desires, of those who pervert God's blessings to their own destruction.

"On this head Solomon gives his sentiments, not only as a divine and philosopher, but like one thoroughly acquainted with the foibles of the human heart. It was not his design to drive people out of the world, or to make them live wretchedly in it: but only that they should think, and act, like rational creatures; or, in other words, be induced to consult their own happiness.

"There is nothing in the whole body of Pagan philosophy so elevated and magnificent, as what some have written on the important subject of this poem: but we find their opinions so various and contradictory, and the most plausible so blended with errors, (even those of the divine Plato not excepted) that their sublimest sentiments on the sovereign good, or ultimate happiness of man, when compared with those of the Royal Preacher, not only appear cold and languid, but always leave the mind unsatisfied and restless. We are lost in a pompous flow of words; and dazzled, but not illuminated. One sect, by confining happiness to sensual pleasures, so greatly slackened the cord, as to render it wholly useless: another, by their too austere and rigid maxims, stretched it so tight, that it snapped asunder; though the experience of all ages has evinced that these latter imposed both on themselves and the world, when they taught that virtue, however afflicted here, was its own reward, and sufficient of itself to render a man completely happy. Even in the brazen bull of Perillus, truth will cry out from the rack, against such fallacious teachers, and prove them liars. The extravagant figments, therefore, of the stoical apathy, no less than those of the voluptuous Epicurean, both equally vanish at the splendour of the Divine truth delivered by Solomon. He alone decides the great question in such a manner, that the soul is instantly convinced: it need seek no further.

"III. To prevent all misapprehensions, which a slight and cursory reading of this book is apt to raise in many persons, it will be requisite to observe two cautions: First, that Solomon, who tells us that he applied his heart not only to the search of wisdom and knowledge, but also of folly and madness, frequently speaks, not according to his own sentiments, though he proposes the thing in a naked and simple manner, designedly making use of such terms as might set the picture in a fuller and clearer light, so that we often meet with certain expressions which, unless we search into their true design, seem to have a quite different force and meaning from what the author really intended. We must, therefore, take particular care to distinguish the doubts and objections of others from Solomon's answers; the want of attending to which has made this book much more obscure than otherwise it would appear. Secondly, we should not judge of the entire discourse from some parts of it; since many things are pertinently said, according to the present subject, which, in themselves, and strictly taken, are far from true. In order to come at the genuine sense, we should form our opinion from the different circumstances of the matter treated of, comparing the antecedent with the consequent passages, and always considering the Preacher's real scope and design. By carefully attending to these two cautions, this book will be seen in a very different light, from what it now appears in, to the generality of readers.

"IV. This book, besides the figurative and proverbial expressions, to be found in no other part of the Scripture, is undoubtedly metrical; and, consequently, the grammatization, in many places, not a little perplexed, from the frequent ellipses, abbreviations, transposition of words, and other poetical licences, allowed in all languages; to say nothing of the carelessness or ignorance of transcribers, as appears from the variety of readings. Yet, notwithstanding we are so little acquainted with the nature of the Hebrew metre, and the propriety of certain words and phrases, which, at this vast distance of time, in a language that has been dead upwards of two thousand years, must unavoidably occasion the same difficulties and obscurities as occur in works of far less antiquity, and in languages more generally studied and better understood; notwithstanding this, I say, a diligent and attentive observer will always find enough to recompense his trouble; and, if he has any taste, cannot avoid being struck with the exquisite beauty and regularity of the plan.

"V. The most judicious Commentators have remarked on this book, that we have here a conspicuous example of that form of disputing, which was so justly admired in the soundest of the Pagan philosophers; particularly in Socrates, who, whilst others were taken up with abstruse speculations about the nature of things, and investigating the number, motions, distance, and magnitude of the stars, brought down philosophy from the upper regions, and fixed its abode on earth; that is, by teaching such precepts as served for the regulation of life and manners, by far the most useful of all sciences, as being most conducive to the welfare of society, and the general benefit of mankind. Of this we have a noble specimen in the memoirs of that ancient moralist, collected by Xenophon. It is, I think, beyond all contradiction, that no one ever made deeper researches into nature, or had made so great a progress in every branch of science, both speculative and experimental. But what, after all, was the result of his inquiries? A thorough conviction of the inutility of such studies, and how little they conduce towards the obtaining that peace and tranquillity of mind wherein true happiness consists. He applied himself, therefore, to that study which might produce a real and lasting advantage, namely, to render men wise to some purpose; that is, truly virtuous. The manner of his treating this important subject bears some resemblance to that of the celebrated Greek moralist. He does not give us a long roll of dry formal precepts, with which the mind is soon tired: but, to confirm the truth of every thing he says, appeals not only to his own experience, but the general sense of unbiassed reason. At the same time he sets before us, in the liveliest colours, the sad effects of vice and folly; and makes use of every incentive to engage the heart to be enamoured with virtue, and pursue its own interest. Whatever he intends to inculcate is first barely proposed, and then more accurately explained and illustrated, though by gentle and almost imperceptible transitions; with this peculiarity, that there is always much more implied than expressed; insomuch that the Reader, from a slight hint given him, is left to draw such inferences as his own reflection must naturally suggest. Every thing, in short is drawn, in this admirable composition, with equal simplicity and elegance; and hath as distinguished a superiority to whatever the best Pagan philosophers have given us on the same subject, as the borrowed light of the moon is surpassed by that of the sun in his full meridian lustre; or, to use a still stronger comparison, as Solomon's knowledge of the one true God excelled the idle notion of their fictitious deities."

Some have supposed that the book of Ecclesiastes is a poem. That some poetic lines may be found in it there is no doubt: but it has nothing in common with poetic books; nor does it exist in the hemistic form in any printed edition, or MS. yet discovered. It is plain prose, and is not susceptible of that form in which the Hebrew poetic books appear.

The author already quoted thinks that the book of Ecclesiastes is metrical. I cannot see this: but it has what is essential to poetry, a truly dignified style; there are no mean, creeping words in it, whether pure Hebrew, or borrowed from any of its dialects. They are all well chosen, nervous, and highly expressive. They are, in short, such as become the subject, and are worthy of that inspiration by which the author was guided.

NOTES ON CHAP. I.

Verse 1. The words of the Preacher] Literally, The words of Koheleth, son of David, king of Jerusalem. But the Targum explains it thus:—"The words of the prophecy, which Koheleth prophesied; the same is Solomon, son of David the king, who was in Jerusalem. For when Solomon, king of Israel, saw by the spirit of prophecy that the kingdom of Rehoboam his son was about to be divided with Jeroboam, the son of Nebat; and the house of the sanctuary was about to be destroyed, and the people of Israel sent into captivity: he said in his word—Vanity of vanities is all that I have laboured, and David my father; they are altogether vanity."

The word קהלת Koheleth, is a feminine noun, from the root קהל kahal, to collect, gather together, assemble; and means, she who assembles or collects a congregation; translated by the Septuagint, Εκκλησιαστης, a public speaker, a speaker in an assembly; and hence translated by us a preacher. In my old MS. Bible it is explained thus:—a talker to the peple: or togyder cleping.

Verse 2. Vanity of vanities] As the words are an exclamation, it would be better to translate, O vanity of vanities! Emptiness of emptinesses. True substantial good is not to be found in any thing liable to change and corruption.

The author referred to in the Introduction begins his paraphrase thus:—

"O vain deluding world! whose largest gifts
Thine emptiness betray, like painted clouds,
Or wat'ry bubbles: as the vapour flies,
Dispersed by lightest blast, so fleet thy joys,
And leave no trace behind. This serious truth
The royal preacher loud proclaims, convinced
By sad experience; with a sigh repeats

The mournful theme, that nothing here below
Can solid comfort yield: 'tis all a scene
Of vanity, beyond the power of words
To express, or thought conceive. Let every man
Survey himself, then ask, what fruit remains
Of all his fond pursuits? What has he gained,
By toiling thus for more than nature's wants
Require? Why thus with endless projects rack'd
His heated brain, and to the labouring mind
Repose denied? Why such expense of time,
That steals away so fast, and ne'er looks back?
Could man his wish obtain, how short the space
For its enjoyment! No less transient here
The time of his duration, than the things
Thus anxiously pursued. For, as the mind,
In search of bliss, fix'd on no solid point,
For ever fluctuates; so our little frames,
In which we glory, haste to their decline,
Nor permanence can find. The human race
Drop like autumnal leaves, by spring reviv'd:
One generation from the stage of life
Withdrawn, another comes, and thus makes room
For that which follows. Mightiest realms decay,
Sink by degrees; and, lo! new form'd estates
Rise from their ruins. E'en the earth itself,
Sole object of our hopes and fears,
Shall have its period, though to man unknown."

Verse 3. What profit hath a man] What is the sum of the real good he has gained by all his toils in life? They, in themselves, have neither made him contented nor happy.

Verse 4. One generation passeth away] Men succeed each other in unceasing generations: but the earth is still the same; it undergoes no change that leads to melioration, or greater perfection. And it will continue the same, לעולם le-ôlam, during the whole course of time; till the end of all things arrives.

Verses 5 and 6. These verses are confused by being falsely divided. The first clause of the sixth should be joined to the fifth verse.

The sun also ariseth, and the sun goeth down, and hasteth to his place where he ariseth; going to the south, and circulating to the north.

Verse 6. The wind is continually whirling about, and the wind returneth upon its whirlings.

It is plain, from the clause which I have restored to the fifth verse, that the author refers to the approximations of the sun to the northern and southern tropics, viz. of Cancer and Capricorn.

All the Versions agree in applying the first clause of the sixth verse to the sun, and not to the wind. Our Version alone has mistaken the meaning. My old MS. Bible is quite correct:

The sunne risith up, and goth doun, and to his place turnith agein; and there agein rising, goth about bi the south, and then agein to the north.

The author points out two things here:—1. Day and night, marked by the appearance of the sun above the horizon; proceeding apparently from East to West; where he sinks under the horizon, and appears to be lost during the night. 2. His annual course through the twelve signs of the zodiac, when, from the equinoctial, he proceeds southward to the tropic of Capricorn; and thence turneth about towards the north, till he reaches the tropic of Cancer; and so on.

Verse 7. All the rivers run into the sea; yet the sea is not full] The reason is, nothing goes into it either by the rivers or by rain, that does not come from it: and to the place whence the rivers come, whether from the sea originally by evaporation, or immediately by rain, thither they return again; for the water exhaled from the sea by evaporation is collected in the clouds, and in rain, &c. falls upon the tops of the mountains; and, filtered through their fissures, produce streams, several of which uniting, make rivers which flow into the sea. The water is again evaporated by the sun; the vapours collected are precipitated and being filtered through the earth, become streams, &c. as before.

Verse 8. All things are full of labour] It is impossible to calculate how much anxiety, pain, labour, and fatigue, are necessary in order to carry on the common operations of life. But an endless desire to gain, and an endless curiosity to witness a variety of results, cause men to labour on. The eye sees much: but wishes to see more. The ear hears of many things: but is curious to have the actual knowledge of them. So, desire and curiosity carry men (under the Divine providence) through all the labours and pains of life.

Verse 9. The thing that hath been] Every thing in the whole economy of nature has its revolutions: summer and winter, heat and cold, rain and drought, seed time and autumn, with the whole system of corruption and generation, alternately succeed each other; so that whatever has been shall be again. There is really, physically, and philosophically, nothing absolutely new under the sun, in the course of sublunary things. The same is the case in all the revolutions of the heavens.

Verse 10. Is there any thing, &c.] The original is beautiful. Is there any thing which will say, See this! it is new? Men may say this of their discoveries, &c.: but universal nature says, It is not new. It has been, and it will be.

Verse 11. There is no remembrance] I believe the general meaning to be this:—Multitudes of ancient transactions have been lost, because they were not recorded; and of many that had been recorded, the records are lost. And this will be the case with many others which are yet to occur. How many persons, not much acquainted with books, have supposed that certain things were their own discoveries, which have been written or printed, even long before they were born! Dutens, in his Origin of the Discoveries attributed to the Moderns, has made this a very clear case.

Verse 12. I the Preacher was king] This is a strange verse, and does not admit of an easy solution. It is literally;—I, Koheleth, have been king over Israel, in Jerusalem. This book, as we have already seen, has been conjectured by some to have been written about the time that Ptolemy Philadelphus formed his great library at Alexandria, about two hundred and eighty-five years before our Lord: and from the multitude of Jews that dwelt there; and resorted to that city for the sake of commerce, it was said there was an Israel in Alexandria.—See the Introduction.

It has also been conjectured from this, that if the book were written by Solomon, it was intended to be a posthumous publication. "I that was king, still continue to preach and instruct you." Those who suppose the book to have been written after Solomon's fall think, that he speaks thus through humility. "I was once worthy of the name of king: but I fell into all evil; and, though recovered, I am no longer worthy of the name."—I am afraid this is not solid.

Verse 13. And I gave my heart to seek and search] While Solomon was faithful to his God, he diligently cultivated his mind. His giving himself to the study of natural history, philosophy, poetry, &c. are sufficient proofs of it. He had not intuitive knowledge from God: but he had a capacity to obtain every kind of knowledge useful to man.

This sore travail] This is the way in which knowledge is to be acquired: and, in order to investigate the operations of nature, the most laborious discussions and perplexing experiments must be instituted, and conducted to their proper results. It is God's determination that knowledge shall be acquired in no other way.

Verse 14. Behold all is vanity] After all these discussions and experiments, when even the results have been the most successful, I have found only rational satisfaction; but not that supreme good, by which alone the soul can be made happy.

O curas hominum! O quantum est in rebus inane!

"How anxious are our cares, and yet how vain
The bent of our desires!" PERS. sat. I. v. 1.

Verse 15. That which is crooked cannot be made straight] There are many apparent irregularities and anomalies in nature, for which we cannot account; and there are many defects, that cannot be supplied. This is the impression from a general view of nature: but the more we study and investigate its operations, the more we shall be convinced that all is a consecutive and well-ordered whole; and that in the chain of nature not one link is broken, deficient, or lost.

Verse 16. I communed with mine own heart] Literally, I spoke, I, with my heart, saying,—"When successful in my researches, but not happy in my soul; though easy in my circumstances, I entered into my own heart, and there inquired the cause of my discontent." He found that though,—1. He had gotten wisdom beyond all men. 2. Wealth and honours more than any other. 3. Practical wisdom more than all his predecessors. 4. Had tried pleasure and animal gratification, even to their extremes. Yet after all this he had nothing but vexation of spirit. None of these four things, nor the whole of them conjoined, could afford him such a happiness as satisfies the soul. Why was all this? Because the soul was made for God; and in the possession of Him alone can it find happiness.

Verse 17. To know madness and folly] הוללות ושכלות holehoth ve-saciloth. παραβολας και επιστημιν, Parables and science.—Septuagint. So the Syriac; nearly so the Arabic. "What were error and foolishness."—Coverdale. Perhaps gaiety and sobriety may be the better meaning for these two difficult words. I can scarcely think they are taken in that bad sense in which our translation exhibits them. "I tried pleasure in all its forms; and sobriety and self-abnegation to their utmost extent." Koheleth paraphrases, Even fools and madmen taught me rules.

Verse 18. For in much wisdom is much grief] The more we know of ourselves the less satisfied shall we be of our own hearts: and the more we know of mankind the less willing shall we be to trust them; and the less shall we admire.

He that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow.] And why so? Because, independently of God, the principal objects of knowledge are natural and moral evils.

The Targum gives a curious paraphrase here:—"The man who multiplies wisdom, when he sins and is not converted to repentance, multiplies the indignation of God against himself: and the man who adds science, and yet dies in his childhood, adds grief of heart to his relatives." A man in science; a foolish child in conduct. How pained must they be who had the expense of his education! But there are many men-children of this sort in every age and country.

NOTES ON CHAP. II.

Verse 1. I will prove thee with mirth] This is well expressed by the author so often referred to. Having tried speculative knowledge in vain, passion and appetite whisper,—

"From the rugged thorny road
Of wisdom, which so ill repays thy toil,
Turn back, and enter pleasure's flow'ry paths.
Go, take thy fill of joy; to passion give
The reins; nor let one serious thought restrain
What youth and affluence prompt."

Verse 2. I said of laughter, It is mad] Literally, To laughter I said, O mad one! and to mirth, What is this one doing?

Solomon is not speaking here of a sober enjoyment of the mine heart with wisdom,) and to lay hold on folly, till I might see what was that good for the sons of men, which they should do under the heaven [a] all the days of their life.

4 I made me great works; I builded me houses; I planted me vineyards:

5 I made me gardens and orchards, and I planted trees in them of all kind of fruits:

6 I made me pools of water, to water therewith the wood that bringeth forth trees:

7 I got me servants and maidens, and had [b] servants born in my house; also I had great possessions of great and small cattle above all that were in Jerusalem before me:

8 [c] I gathered me also silver and gold, and the peculiar treasure of kings and of the provinces: I gat me men singers and women singers, and the delights of the sons of men, as [d] musical instruments, and that of all sorts.

9 So [e] I was great, and increased more than all things of this world, but of intemperate pleasure, whose two attendants, laughter and mirth, are introduced by a beautiful prosopopœia, as two persons; and the contemptuous manner wherewith he treats them has something remarkably striking. He tells the former to her face, that she is mad: but as to the latter, he thinks her so much beneath his notice, that he only points at her, and instantly turns his back.

Verse 3. To give myself unto wine, (yet acquainting (נהג noheg, "guiding") mine heart with wisdom)] I did not run into extremes, as when I gave up myself to mirth and pleasure. There, I threw off all restraint; here, I took the middle course, to see whether a moderate enjoyment of the things of the world might not produce that happiness which I supposed man was created to enjoy here below.

Verse 4. I builded me houses] Palace after palace; the house of the forest of Lebanon, 1 Kings vii. 1, &c.—a house for the queen;—the Temple, &c. 2 Chron. viii. 3, &c. 1 Kings ix. 19, &c. besides many other buildings of various kinds.

Verse 5. I made me gardens and orchards] פרדסים paradisim, paradises. I doubt much whether this be an original Hebrew word. فردوس ferdoos, is found in the Persian and Arabic; and signifies a pleasant garden, a vineyard. Hence our word paradise, a place full of delights. How well Solomon was qualified to form gardens, orchards, vineyards, conservatories, &c. may be at once conceived when we recollect his knowledge of natural history; and that he wrote treatises on vegetables and their properties, from the cedar to the hyssop.

Verse 6. Pools of water] Tanks and reservoirs.

To water therewith the wood] Aqueducts to lead the water from the tanks to different parts.

Verse 7. Servants and maidens] For my works, fields, folds, and various domestic labours.

Servants born in my house] Besides those hired from without, he had married couples in the precincts of his grounds, palaces, &c. who, when their children grew up, got them employment with themselves.

Great and small cattle] Oxen, neat, horses, asses, mules, camels, and such like; with sheep and goats. And multitudes of most of these he needed, when we are told that his household consumed daily ten stall-fed oxen, with twenty from the pasture, with a hundred sheep; besides harts, roebucks, fallow deer, fatted fowls, and other kinds of provision. Probably, such another court for splendour and expense was not in the universe.

Verse 8. The peculiar treasure of kings and of the provinces] 1. The taxes levied off his subjects. 2. The tribute given by the neighbouring potentates. Both these make the peculiar treasure of kings; taxes and tribute.

Men-singers and women-singers] This includes all instrumental and vocal performers. These may be called the delights of the sons of men.

Musical instruments, and that of all sorts.] For these seven words, there are only two in the original, שדה ושדות shidah ve-shiddoth. These words are acknowledged on all hands to be utterly unknown, if not utterly inexplicable. Some render them male and female captives; others, cups and flagons; others, cooks and confectioners; others, a species of musical compositions derived from a celebrated Phœnician woman named Sido, to whom Sanchoniatho attributes the invention of music. Others, with more probability, wives and concubines; of the former of whom Solomon had three hundred, and of the latter seven hundred; and if these be not spoken of here, they are not mentioned at all, whereas music, and every thing connected with that, was referred to before. The author of Choheleth paraphrases thus:

To complete
This scene of earthly bliss, how large a span
Of that which most delights the sons of men
Fell to my portion! What a lovely train
Of blooming beauties, by connubial ties,
By purchase, or the gifts of neighbouring kings,
Or spoils of war, made mine.

If, after all this, I may add one conjecture, it shall be this: שדה sadeh, in Hebrew, is a field, and occurs in various parts of the Bible. שדות siddoth, is fields, 1 Sam. xxii. 7. the points that were before me in Jerusalem: also my wisdom remained with me.

10 And whatsoever mine eyes desired I kept not from them, I withheld not my heart from any joy; for my heart rejoiced in all my labour: and [a] this was my portion of all my labour.

11 Then I looked on all the works that my hands had wrought, and on the labour that I had laboured to do: and, behold, all was [b] vanity and vexation of spirit, and there was no profit under the sun.

12 And I turned myself to behold wisdom, [c] and madness, and folly: for what can the man do that cometh after the king? [d] even that which hath been already done.

in such a case are of no consideration. May not Solomon be speaking here of farms upon farms, or estates upon estates, which he had added by purchase to the common regal portion? We know that a king of Israel (Ahab) once desired to have a vineyard (Naboth's) which he could not obtain: now, Solomon having spoken before of gardens, orchards, and vineyards,—why may he not here speak of supernumerary estates?—Perhaps every man who critically examines the place will be dissatisfied, and have a conjecture of his own.

Verse 10. I withheld not my heart from any joy] He had every means of gratification: he could desire nothing that was not within his reach; and whatever he wished, he took care to possess.

Verse 11. And, behold, all was vanity] Emptiness and insufficiency in itself.

And vexation of spirit] Because it promised the good I wished for, but did not, could not, perform the promise; and left my soul discontented and chagrined.

Verse 12. For what can the man do that cometh after the king] I have examined every thing proposed by science, by maddening pleasure, and by more refined and regulated mirth. I seized on the whole, and used them to the uttermost: and so far, as none ever shall be able to exceed me; as none can, in the course of things, ever have such powers and means of gratification.

Verse 13. Then I saw that wisdom excelleth folly] Though in none of these pursuits I found the supreme good, the happiness my soul longed after; yet I could easily perceive that wisdom excelled the others, as far as light excels darkness. And he immediately subjoins the reasons.

Verse 14. The wise man's eyes, &c.] Well expressed by Choheleth:—

> "The wise are circumspect, maturely weigh
> The consequence of what they undertake,
> Good ends propose, and fittest means apply
> To accomplish their designs."

But the fool walketh in darkness]

> "But fools, depriv'd
> Of reason's guidance, or in darkness grope,
> Or, unreflecting like a frantic man,
> Who on the brink of some steep precipice
> Attempts to run a race with heedless steps,
> Rush to their own perdition."

One event happeneth to them all.]

> "Though wide the difference,—what has human pride
> To boast? Even I myself too plainly saw,
> That one event to both alike befalls;
> To various accidents of life exposed,
> Without distinction: nor can wisdom screen
> From dangers, disappointments, grief, and pain."

Verse 15. As it happeneth to the fool] Literally, according as the event is to the fool, it happens to me, even me. There is a peculiar beauty and emphasis in the repetition of me. Having pointed out the advantages that wisdom has over folly, he takes this opportunity of reminding us of the danger of trusting too much to it, by showing that it is equally subject to the common accidents of life; and, therefore, incapable of making us completely happy. Having given his sentiments on this point in general terms, he proceeds to those particular instances wherein human prudence chiefly exerts itself; and shows how egregiously it is mistaken in every one of them.—C.

Verse 16. There is no remembrance] The wise and the fool are equally subject to death; and, in most instances, they are equally forgotten. Time sweeps away all remembrances, except the very few out of millions which are preserved for awhile in the page of history.

19 And who knoweth whether he shall be a wise man or a fool? yet shall he have rule over all my labour wherein I have laboured, and wherein I have showed myself wise under the sun. This is also vanity.

20 Therefore I went about to cause my heart to despair of all the labour which I took under the sun.

21 For there is a man whose labour is in wisdom, and in knowledge, and in equity; yet to a man that hath not laboured therein shall he [c] leave it for his portion. This also is vanity and a great evil.

There was nothing in it worth pursuing; no period worth re-living; and no hope, that if this were possible, I could again be more successful.

Verse 18. I hated all my labour] 1. Because it had not answered the end for which it was instituted. 2. Because I could enjoy the fruits of it but a short time. 3. Because I must leave it to others; and know not whether a wise man, a knave, or a fool, may possess it.

Verse 19. A wise man or a fool] Alas! Solomon, the wisest of all men, made the worst use of his wisdom; had three hundred wives, and seven hundred concubines; left but one son behind him, to possess his estates and his throne; and that one was the silliest of fools!

Verse 20. I went about to cause my heart to despair] What makes all worse there is no remedy. It is impossible in the present state of things to prevent these evils.

Verse 21. For there is a man] Does he not allude to himself? As if he had said,—"I have laboured to cultivate my mind in wisdom and in science; in knowledge of men and things; and have endeavoured to establish equity, and dispense justice. And now I find I shall leave all the fruits of my labour to a man that hath not laboured therein, and consequently cannot prize what I have wrought." Does he not refer to his son Rehoboam?

Verse 22. For what hath man of all his labour] Labour of body, disappointment of hope, and vexation of heart, have been all my portion.

Verse 23. His days are sorrows] What a picture of human life, where the heart is not filled with the peace and love of God! All his days are sorrows; all his labours, griefs; all his nights, restless; for he has no portion but merely what earth can give; and that is embittered by the labour of acquisition, and the disappointment in the using.

This is also vanity] Emptiness of good, and substantial misery.

Verse 24. There is nothing better for a man] The sense of this passage is well expressed in the following lines:—

"For these disorders wouldst thou find a cure,
Such cure as human frality will admit?
Drive from thee anxious cares; let reason curb
Thy passions; and with cheerful heart enjoy
That little which the world affords: for here,
Though vain the hopes of perfect happiness,
Yet still the road of life, rugged at best,
Is not without its comforts.—
Wouldst thou their sweetness taste, look up to heaven,
And praise th' all bounteous Donor, who bestows
The pow'r to use aright."

Verse 25. For who can eat—more than I?] But instead of חוץ ממני chuts mimenni, more than I, חוץ ממנו chuts mimenu, without HIM, is the reading of eight of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. as also of the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic.

"For who maye eate, drynke, or bryng enythinge to passe without him?"—COVERDALE.

I believe this to be the true reading. No one can have a true relish of the comforts of life without the Divine blessing? This reading connects all the sentences. This also I saw, that it was from the hand of God;—for who can eat, and who can relish without HIM? For God giveth to man that is good. It is through His liberality that we have any thing to eat or drink; and it is only through His blessing that we can derive good from the use of what we possess.

But to the sinner he giveth travail] He has a life of labour, disappointment, and distress: for, because he is an enemy to God, he travails in pain all his days; and, as the wise man says elsewhere, the wealth of the wicked is laid up for the just.

NOTES ON CHAP. III.

Verse 1. To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose] Two general remarks may be made on the eight first verses of this chapter. 1. God by His providence governs the world, and has determined particular things and operations to particular times. In those times such things may be done with propriety and success: but if we neglect the appointed seasons, we sin against this Providence, and become the authors of our own distresses. 2. God has given to man that portion of duration called TIME; the space in which all the operations of nature, of animals, and intellectual beings, are carried on: but while nature is steady in its course, and animals faithful to their instincts, man devotes it to a great variety of purposes; but very frequently to that for which God never made time, space, or opportunity. And all we can say, when an evil deed is done, there was a time in which it was done, though God never made it for that purpose.

To say any further on this subject is needless, as the words themselves give in general their own meaning. The Jews, it is true, see in these times and seasons, all the events of their own nation, from the birth of Abraham to the present times: and as to Fathers and their followers, they see all the events and states of the Christian church in them!

It is worthy of remark, that in all this list there are but two things which may be said to be done generally by the disposal of God, and in which men can have but little influence;—the time of birth, and the time of death. But all the others are left to the option of man, though God continues to overrule them by His providence. The following paraphrase will explain all that is necessary to be generally understood:—

Verse 2. A time to be born, and a time to die,—plant]

"As in its mother's womb the embryo lies
A space determined; to full growth arrived,
From its dark prison bursts, and sees the light:
So is the period fix'd when man shall drop a time to break down, and a time to build up;

4 A time to weep, and a time to laugh; a time to mourn, and a time to dance;

5 A time to cast away stones, and a time to gather stones together; a time to embrace, and [a] a time [b] to refrain from embracing;

6 A time to [c] get, and a time to lose; a time to keep, and a time to cast away;

7 A time to rend, and a time to sew: [d] a time to keep silence, and a time to speak;

8 A time to love, and a time to [e] hate; a time of war, and a time of peace.

9 [f] What profit hath he that worketh in that wherein he laboureth?

10 [g] I have seen the travail, which God hath given to the sons of men to be exercised in it.

11 He hath made every thing beautiful in his time: also he hath set the world in their heart, so that [h] no man can find out the work that God maketh from the beginning to the end.

And sow; another time to pluck and reap.
Even nations have their destined rise and fall:
A while they thrive; and for destruction ripe,
When grown, are rooted up like withered plants."

Verse 3. A time to kill,—heal,—break down,—build up.]

"The healing art, when out of season used,
Pernicious proves, and serves to hasten death.
But timely medicines drooping nature raise,
And health restore.—Now, Justice wields her sword
With wholesome rigour, nor the offender spares:
But Mercy now is more expedient found.
On crazy fabrics ill-timed cost bestowed
No purpose answers, when discretion bids
To pull them down, and wait a season fit

Verse 4. A time to weep,—laugh,—mourn,—dance.]

"When private griefs affect
The heart, our tears with decent sorrow flow;
Nor less becoming, when the public mourns,
To vent the deepest sighs. But all around
When things a smiling aspect bear, our souls
May well exult; 'tis then a time for joy."

Verse 5. A time to cast away stones,—to gather stones,—to embrace,—to refrain.]

"One while domestic cares abortive prove,
And then successful. Nature now invites Connubial pleasures: but, when languid grown,
No less rejects."

Verse 6. A time to get,—to lose,—to keep,—to cast away.]

"Commerce produces wealth,
Whilst time of gaining lasts; from every point
Blow prosperous gales. Now heaven begins to lowr,
And all our hopes are blasted. Prudence bids
One while, our treasure to reserve, and then
With liberal hand to scatter wide. How oft,
In raging storms, the owner wisely casts
Into the deep his precious merchandise,
To save the found'ring bark!"

Verse 7. A time to rend,—sew,—keep silence,—speak.]

"Intestine broils
And factions rend a state: at length the breach
Is heal'd, and rest ensues.—Wisdom restrains
The tongue, when words are vain: but now,
'Tis time to speak, and silence would be criminal."

Verse 8. A time to love,—hate,—of war,—of peace.]

"Love turns to hatred; interest or caprice
Dissolves the firmest knot by friendship tied.
O'er rival nations, with revenge inflam'd,
Or lust of power, fell discord shakes awhile
Her baleful torch: now, smiling Peace returns."

The above paraphrase on the verses cited contain a general view of the principal occurrences of time, in reference to the human being, from his cradle to his grave, through all the operations of life.

Verse 9. What profit hath he] What real good, what solid pleasures are derived from all the labours of man. Necessity drives him to the principal part of his cares and toils: he labours that he may eat and drink; and he eats and drinks that he may be preserved alive, and kept from sickness and pain. Love of money, the basest of all passions, and restless ambition, drive men to many labours and expedients which perplex, and often destroy them. He then who lives without God, travails in pain all his days.

Verse 10. I have seen the travail] Man is a sinner; and, because he is such, he suffers.

Verse 11. Beautiful in his time] God's works are well done: there are order, harmony, and beauty, in them all.

13 And also [b] that every man should eat and drink, and enjoy the good of all his labour, it is the gift of God.

14 I know that whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: [c] nothing can be put to it, nor any thing taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before him.

Even the caterpillar is a finished beauty in all the changes through which it passes, when its structure is properly examined, and the end kept in view in which each change is to issue. Nothing of this kind can be said of the works of man. The most finished works of art are bungling jobs, when compared with the meanest operation of nature.

He hath set the world in their heart] העולם ha-ôlam, that hidden time—the period beyond the present,—ETERNITY. The proper translation of this clause is the following:—"Also that eternity hath he placed in their heart, without which man could not find out the work which God hath made, from the commencement to the end." God has deeply rooted the idea of eternity in every human heart; and every considerate man sees, that all the operations of God refer to that endless duration. See ver. 14. And it is only in eternity that man will be able to discover what God has designed by the various works He has formed.

Verse 12. I know that there is no good in them, but, &c.] Since God has so disposed the affairs of this world, that the great events of providence cannot be accelerated or retarded by human cares and anxieties, submit to God; make a proper use of what He has given: do thyself no harm, and endeavour as much as possible to do others good.

Enjoy, and bless thyself; let others share
The transient blessing: 'tis the gift of God. Ver. 13.

Verse 14. I know that whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever] לעולם le-ôlam, for eternity; in reference to that grand consummation of men and things intimated in ver. 11. God has produced no being that he intends ultimately to destroy. He made every thing in reference to eternity; and, however matter may be changed and refined, animal and intellectual beings shall not be deprived of their existence. The brute creation shall be restored, and all human spirits shall live for ever; the pure in a state of supreme and endless blessedness, the impure in a state of indestructible misery.

Nothing can be put to it] No new order of beings, whether animate or inanimate, can be produced. God will not create more: man cannot add.

Nor any thing taken from it] Nothing can be annihilated; no power but that which can create, can destroy. And whatsoever He has done, He intended to be a means of impressing a just sense of His Being, providence, mercy, and judgments, upon the souls of men. A proper consideration of God's works has a tendency to make man a religious creature; that is, to impress his mind with a sense of the existence of the Supreme Being, and the reverence that is due to Him. In this sense the fear of God is frequently taken in Scripture. The Hebrew of this clause is strongly emphatic:—והאלהים עשה שיראו מלפניו ve-ha-elohim âsah she-yireu mi-le-panaiv, "And the Gods He hath done, that they might fear from before his faces." Even the doctrine of the eternal Trinity in Unity may be collected from numberless appearances in nature. A consideration of the herb trefoil is said to have been the means of fully convincing the learned Erasmus of the truth of the assertion, These Three are One; and yet three distinct. He saw the same root, the same fibres, the same pulpy substance, the same membraneous covering, the same colour, the same taste, the same smell, in every part; and yet the three leaves distinct: but each and all a continuation of the stem, and proceeding from the same root. Such a fact as this may at least illustrate the doctrine. An intelligent shepherd, whom he met upon the mountains, is said to have exhibited the herb, and the illustration, while discoursing on certain difficulties in the Christian faith. When a child, I heard a learned man relate this fact.

Verse 15. That which hath been is now] God governs the world now, as He has governed it from the beginning; and the revolutions and operations of nature are the same now, that they have been from the beginning. What we see now, is the same as has been seen by those before us.

And God requireth that which is past.] i. e. that it may return again in its proper order. The heavens themselves, taking in their great revolutions, show the same phenomena. Even comets are supposed to have their revolutions, though some of them are hundreds of years in going round their orbits.

But, in the economy of grace, does not God require that which is past? Whatever blessing or influence God gives to the soul of man, He intends shall remain and increase; and it will, if man be faithful. Reader, canst thou produce all the secret inspirations of His Spirit?—all the drawings of His love?—His pardoning mercy?—His sanctifying grace?—the heavenly mindedness produced in thee?—thy holy zeal?—thy spirit of prayer?—thy tender conscience?—the witness of the Spirit?—which thou didst once receive and enjoy?—WHERE are they?—God requireth that which is past.

Verse 16. The place of judgment, that wickedness was and the place of righteousness, that iniquity was there.

17 I said in mine heart, [a] God shall judge the righteous and the wicked: for there is [b] a time there for every purpose and for every work.

18 I said in mine heart concerning the estate of the sons of men, [c] that God might manifest them, and that they might see that they themselves are beasts.

19 [d] For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath: so that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast: for all is vanity.

there] The abuse of power, and the perversion of judgment, have been justly complained of in every age of the world. The following paraphrase is good:—

"But what enjoyment can our labours yield,
When even the remedy prescribed by heaven
To cure disorders proves our deadliest bane?
When God's vicegerents destined to protect
The weak from insolence of power, to guard
Their lives and fortunes, impious robbers turn.
And, or by force or fraud, deprive of both?—
To what asylum shall the injur'd fly
From her tribunal, where perverted law
Acquits the guilty, th' innocent condemns?"—C.

Verse 17. For there is a time there for every purpose] Man has his time here below, and God shall have his time above. At His throne the judge shall be rejudged, and iniquity for ever close her mouth.

Verse 18. That they might see that they themselves are beasts.] The author of Choheleth has given a correct view of this difficult verse, by a proper translation:—I said in my heart, reflecting on the state of the sons of men, O! that God would enlighten them, and make them see that even they themselves are like beasts. These words are to be referred to those in authority who abused their power; particularly to the corrupt magistrates mentioned above.

Verse 19. For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts] From the present comparison of great men to beasts, the author takes occasion to enforce the subject, by mentioning the state of mankind in general, with respect to the mortality of their bodies; and then, by an easy transition, touches in the next verse on the point which is of such infinite consequence to religion.

As the one dieth, so dieth the other] Animal life is the same both in the man and in the beast.

They have all one breath] They respire in the same way; and, when they cease to respire, animal life becomes extinct.

Befalleth beasts—This is wanting in six of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS.

Verse 20. All go unto one place]

"Man was born
To die, nor aught exceeds in this respect
The vilest brute. Both transient, frail, and vain,
Draw the same breath; alike grow old, decay,
And then expire: both to one grave descend;
There blended lie, to native dust return'd."—C.

Verse 21. Who knoweth the spirit of man] I think the meaning of this important verse is well taken by the above able writer.

"The nobler part of man, 'tis true, survives
The frail corporeal frame:—but who regards
The difference? Those who live like beasts, as such Would die, and be no more, if their own fate
Depended on themselves. Who once reflects,
Amidst his revels, that the human soul,
Of origin celestial, mounts aloft,
While that of brutes, to earth shall downward go."

The word רוח ruach, which is used in this and the nineteenth verse, has two significations, breath and spirit. It signifies spirit, or an incorporeal substance, as distinguished from flesh, or a corporeal one, 1 Kings xxii. 21, 22. and Isa. xxxi. 3. And it signifies the spirit or soul of man, Psa. xxxi. 6. Isa. lvii. 16. and in this book, chap. xii. 7., and in many other places. In this book it is used also to signify the breath, spirit, or soul, of a beast. While it was said in ver. 19, they have all one breath, i. e. the man and the beast live the same kind of animal life; in this verse, a proper distinction is made between the רוח ruach, soul of man; and the רוח ruach, or soul of the beast: the one goeth upwards, the other goeth downwards. The literal translation of these important words is this: Who considereth the רוח ruach, immortal spirit of the sons of Adam, which ascendeth; it is from above היא למעלה hi le-maâlah; and the spirit or breath of the cattle, which descendeth; it is downwards unto the earth, i. e. it tends to the earth only. This place gives no countenance to the materiality of the soul; and yet it is the strongest hold to which the cold and fruitless materialist can resort.

Solomon most evidently makes an essential difference between the human soul, and that of brutes. Both have souls, but of different natures: the soul of man was made for that goeth downward to the earth?

A. M. cir. 3027. B. C. cir. 977. Ante I. Olymp. cir. 201. Ante U. C. cir. 224.

22 [a] Wherefore I perceive that there is nothing better, than that a man should rejoice in his own works; for [b] that is his portion: [c] for who shall bring him to see what shall be after him.

God, and to God it shall return: God is its portion; and, when a holy soul leaves the body, it goes to Paradise. The soul of the beast was made to derive its happiness from this lower world. Brutes shall have a resurrection, and have an endless enjoyment in a new earth. The body of man shall arise, and join his soul that is already above; and both enjoy final blessedness in the enjoyment of God. That Solomon did not believe they had the same kind of spirit, and the same final lot as some materialists and infidels say, is evident from chap. xii. 7. The spirit shall return to God, who gave it.

Verse 22. A man should rejoice in his own works] Do not turn God's blessings into sin, by perverseness and complaining; make the best of life. God will sweeten its bitters to you, if you be faithful. Remember this is the state to prepare for glory; and the evils of life may be so sanctified to you, as to work for your good. Though even wretched without, you may be happy within; for God can make all grace to abound towards you. You may be happy if you please; cry to God, who never rejects the prayer of the humble; and gives His Holy Spirit to all them that ask Him.

NOTES ON CHAP. IV.

Verse 1. Considered all the oppressions] עשקים ashakim, signifies any kind of injury which a man can receive in his person, his property, or his good fame.

On the side of their oppressors there was power] And, therefore, neither protection nor comfort for the oppressed.

Verse 2. Wherefore I praised the dead] I considered those happy who had escaped from the pilgrimage of life to the place where the wicked cease from troubling, and where the weary are at rest.

Verse 3. Which hath not yet been] Better never to have been born into the world, than to have seen and suffered so many miseries.

Verse 4. For this a man is envied] It is not by injustice and wrong only, that men suffer, but through envy also. For if a man act uprightly and proper in the world, he soon becomes the object of his neighbours' envy and calumny too. Therefore, the encouragement to do good, to act an upright part, is very little. This constitutes a part of the vain and empty system of human life.

Verse 5. The fool foldeth his hands] After all, without labour and industry, no man can get any comfort in life; and he who gives way to idleness is the veriest of fools.

Verse 6. Better is a handful with quietness] These may be the words of the slothful man, and spoken in vindication of his idleness; as if he had said, "Every man who labours and both the hands full with travail and vexation of spirit.

7 Then I returned, and I saw vanity under the sun.

8 There is one alone, and there is not a second; yea, he hath neither child nor brother: yet is there no end of all his labour; neither is his [a] eye satisfied with riches; [b] neither saith he, For whom do I labour, and bereave my soul of good? This is also vanity, yea, it is a sore travail.

9 Two are better than one; because they have a good reward for their labour.

10 For if they fall, the one will lift up his fellow: but wo to him that is alone when he falleth; for he hath not another to help him up.

11 Again, if two lie together, then they have heat: but how can one be warm alone?

12 And if one prevail against him, two shall withstand him; and a threefold cord is not quickly broken.

13 Better is a poor and a wise child, than an old and foolish king, [c] who will no more be admonished.

14 For out of prison he cometh to reign: whereas also he that is born in his kingdom becometh poor.

15 I considered all the living which walk unamasses property, is the object of envy; and is marked by the oppressor as a subject for spoil: better, therefore, to act as I do; gain little and have little, and enjoy my handful with quietness." Or, the words may contain Solomon's reflection on the subject.

Verse 8. There is one alone, and there is not a second] Here covetousness and avarice are characterized. The man, who is the centre of his own existence, has neither wife, child, nor legal heir; and yet is as intent on getting money as if he had the largest family to provide for: nor does he only labour with intense application, but he even refuses himself the comforts of life out of his own gains! This is not only vanity, the excess of foolishness; but it is also sore travail.

Verse 9. Two are better than one] Married life is infinitely to be preferred to this kind of life, for the very reasons alleged below, and which require no explanation.

Verse 13. Better is a poor and wise child] The Targum applies this to Abraham. "Abraham was a poor child of only three years of age: but he had the spirit of prophecy; and he refused to worship the idols which the old foolish king, Nimrod, had set up; therefore, Nimrod cast him into a furnace of fire. But the Lord worked a miracle, and delivered him. Yet there was no knowledge in Nimrod, and he would not be admonished." The Targum proceeds:—

Verse 14. For out of prison he cometh to reign] "Then Abraham left the country of the idolaters, where he had been imprisoned, and came and reigned over the land of Canaan; and Nimrod became poor in this world." This is the fact to which the ancient Rabbins supposed Solomon to allude.

Verse 15. With the second child that shall stand up] The Targum applies this to the case of Jeroboam and Rehoboam. History affords many instances of mean persons raised to sovereign authority; and of kings being reduced to the meanest offices, and to a morsel of bread. Agrippa himself mounted the throne of Israel after having been long in prison.—See Josephus, Ant. lib. c. xviii. 8. This the heathens attributed to Fortune.

> Si volet hæc eadem, fies de consule rhetor.
> Juv. Sat. vii. ver. 197.

Though I have given what the Jews suppose to be the allusion in these verses, yet the Reader may doubt whether the reference be correct. There is a case implied, whether from fact or assumption, I cannot say; but it seems to be this:—

A king who had abused the authority vested in him, by oppressing the people, had a son whose prudent conduct promised much comfort to the nation, when he should come to the throne. The father seeing the popular wish, and becoming jealous of his son, shut him up in prison. In the interim, the old king either dies, or is deposed; and the son is brought out of prison, and placed on the throne. Then (ver. 15, 16.) multitudes of the people flock to him, and begin to walk under the sun; i. e. the prosperous state to which the nation is raised by its redemption from the former tyranny. However, the wise man insinuates, that this sunshine will not last long. The young king feeling the reins in his own hands, and being surrounded by those whose interest it was to flatter, in order to obtain and continue in court favour; he also becomes corrupted, so that those who come after shall have no cause of rejoicing in him. This appears to be the case; and similar cases have frequently occurred, not only in Asiatic, but also in European history. I have, in another place, referred to the case of Rushn Achter, who was brought out of prison, and set upon the throne of Hindoostan. This is expressed in the following elegant Persian couplet der the sun, with the [a] second child that shall stand up in his stead.

16 There is no end of all the people, even of all that have been before them: they also that come after shall not rejoice in him. Surely this also is [b] vanity and vexation of spirit.

where his fortune is represented as similar to that of the patriarch Joseph:—

یوسف از زندن بر آمد شاه شد

"The bright star is now become a moon:
Joseph is taken out of prison, and become a king."

Rushn Achter signifies a bright or splendid star.

Verse 16. There is no end of all the people] This is supposed to refer to the multitudes of people who hail the advent and accession of a new sovereign; for, as Suetonius remarks, A plerisque adorari solem orientem, "Most people adore the rising sun." But when the new king becomes old, very few regard him; and perhaps he lives long enough to be as much despised by the very persons who before were ready to worship him. This is also a miserable vanity. Thus the blooming heir—

"Shall feel the sad reverse: honoured awhile;
Then, like his sire, contemn'd, abhorr'd, forgot." C.

NOTES ON CHAP. V.

Verse 1. Keep thy foot] This verse the Hebrew, and all the Versions, join to the preceding chapter.

Solomon having before intimated, though very briefly, that the only cure against human vanity is a due sense of religion; now enters more largely on this important subject, and gives some excellent directions with regard to the right performance of Divine service, the nature of vocal and mental prayer, the danger of rash vows, &c.—C.

The whole verse might be more literally translated thus:—

"Guard thy steps as thou art going to the house of God; and approach to hearken, and not to give the sacrifice of fools, for none of them have knowledge about doing evil." "They offer gifts for their sins, and do not turn from their evil works; for they know not (they distinguish not,) between good and evil."—See the Chaldee.

Verse 2. Be not rash with thy mouth] Do not hasten with thy mouth;—weigh thy words,—feel deeply,—think much,—speak little.

"When ye approach His altar, on your lips
Set strictest guard; and let your thoughts be pure,
Fervent, and recollected. Thus prepared,
Send up the silent breathings of your souls,
Submissive to his will." C.

Verse 3. For a dream cometh] That is, as dreams, are ge of business; and [a] a fool's voice is known by multitude of words.

4 [b] When thou vowest a vow unto God, defer not to pay it; for he hath no pleasure in fools: [c] pay that which thou hast vowed.

5 [d] Better is it that thou shouldest not vow, than that thou shouldest vow and not pay.

6 Suffer not thy mouth to cause thy flesh to sin; [e] neither say thou before the angel, that it was an error: wherefore should God be angry at thy voice, and destroy the work of thine hands?

7 For in the multitude of dreams and many words there are also divers vanities: but [f] fear thou God.

8 If thou [g] seest the oppression of the poor, and violent perverting of judgment and justice in a province, marvel not [h] at the matter: for [i] he that is higher than the highest regardeth; and there be higher than they.

nerally the effect of the business in which we have been engaged during the day, so a multitude of words evidence the feeble workings of a foolish heart.

Verse 4. When thou vowest a vow] When in distress and difficulty, men are apt to promise much to God if He will relieve them; but generally forget the vow when the distress or trouble is gone by.

Verse 5. Better is it that thou shouldest not vow, &c.] We are under constant obligations to live to God;—no vow can make it more so. Yet there may be cases in which we should bind ourselves to take up some particular cross—to perform some particular duty, to forego some particular attachment that does not tend to bring our souls nearer to God. Then, if fully determined, and strong in faith relative to the point, bind and hold fast: but if not fully, rationally, and conscientiously determined, do not suffer thy mouth to cause thy soul to sin.

Verse 6. Neither say thou before the angel, that it was an error] Nor think of saying "before the cruel angel, who shall exercise authority over thee in the judgment of the great day, that thou didst it through ignorance."—Chaldee. I believe by the angel nothing else is intended than the priest, whose business it was to take cognizance of vows and offerings.—See Lev. v. 4, 5. In Mal. ii. 7. the priest is called the angel of the Lord of hosts.

Verse 7. In—dreams—are—divers vanities: but fear thou God] If, by the disturbed state of thy mind during the day, or by Satanic influence, thou dream of evil, do not give way to any unreasonable fears, or gloomy forebodings, of any coming mischief:—Fear God. Fear neither the dream, nor its interpretation: God will take care of and protect thee. Most certainly, he that fears God, need fear nothing else. Well may an upright soul say to Satan himself,—I fear God:—and because I fear Him, I do not fear thee.

Verse 8. If thou seest the oppression of the poor] For this was a frequent case under all governments; and especially in the provinces or colonies, which, being far from the seat of government, were generally oppressed by the sovereign's deputies.

Marvel not at the matter] החפץ ha-chaphets, the will, i. e. of God; which permits such evils to take place: but all things shall work together for good to them that love Him.

Unequal seem. What, though disorders reign,
He still presides, and with unerring hand
Directs the vast machine. His wisdom can
From discord harmony produce; and make Ev'n vice itself subservient to His ends.

Verse 9. The profit of the earth is for all] The earth, if properly cultivated, is capable of producing food for every living creature: and without cultivation none has a right to expect bread.

The king himself is served by the field.] Without the field he cannot have supplies for his own house; and, unless agriculture flourish, the necessary expenses of the state cannot be defrayed. Thus, God joins the head and feet together; for while the peasant is protected by the king as executor of the laws, the king himself is dependent on the peasant; as the wealth of the nation is the fruit of the labourers' toil.

Verse 10. He that loveth silver shall not be satisfied with silver] The more he gets, the more he would get: for the saying is true,—

Crescit amor nummi, quantum ipsa pecunia crescit.

"The love of money increases, in proportion as money itself increases."

Verse 11. When goods increase] An increase of property always brings an increase of expense, by a multitude of servants: and the owner really possesses no more, and probably enjoys much less, than he did, when every day provided its own bread, and could lay up no store for the next. But if he have more enjoyment, his cares are multiplied; and he has no kind of profit.—This also is vanity.

Verse 12. The sleep of a labouring man is sweet.] His labour is healthy exercise. He is without possessions, and without cares: his sleep being undisturbed is sound and refreshing.

Verse 13. Riches kept for the owners thereof to their hurt.] This may be the case through various causes:—1. He may make an improper use of them, and lose his health by them. 2. He may join in an unfortunate partnership, and lose all. 3. His riches may excite the desire of the robber; and he may spoil him of his goods, and even take away his life. 4. Or, he may leave them to his son who turns profligate, spends the whole, and ruins both his body and soul. I have seen this again and again.

Verse 14. And he begetteth a son, and there is nothing in his hand.] He has been stript of his property by unfortunate trade, or by plunderers; and he has nothing to leave to his children.

Verse 15. As he came forth] However it may be, he himself shall carry nothing with him into the eternal world. If he die worth millions, those millions are dead to him for ever: so he has had no real profit from all his labours, cares, anxieties, and vast property!

Verse 17. All his days also he eateth in darkness] Even his enjoyments are embittered by uncertainty. He fears for his goods: the possibility of being deprived of them fills his heart with anguish. But instead of יאכל yocel, he shall eat, ילך yelek, he shall walk, is the reading of several MSS. He walks in darkness—he has no evidence of salvation. There is no ray of light from God to penetrate the gloom; and all beyond life is darkness impenetrable!

And wrath with his sickness.] His last hours are awful; for,

> "Counting on long years of pleasure here,
> He's quite unfurnished for the world to come."

He is full of anguish at the thought of death: but the fear of it is horrible. But if he have a sense of God's wrath in his guilty conscience, what horror can be compared with his horror!

Verse 18. Behold that which I have seen] This is the result of my observations and experience. God gives every man, in the course of His providence, the necessaries of life: and it is His will that he should thankfully use them.

For it is his portion] What is requisite for him in the lower world: without them his life cannot subsist; and earthly blessings are as truly the portion of his body and animal life, as the salvation of God is the portion of his soul.

Verse 20. For he shall not much remember] The person who acts in this way, extracts all the good requisite from life. He passes through things temporal so as not to lose those that are eternal.

> "Calm and serene, the road of life to him,
> Or long or short, rugged or smooth, with thorns
> O'erspread, or gay with flow'rs, is but a road.
> Such fare as offers grateful he accepts,
> And smiling to his native home proceeds." C.

NOTES ON CHAP. VI.

Verse 2. A man to whom God hath given riches] A man may possess much earthly goods, and yet enjoy nothing of them. Possession and fruition are not necessarily joined together; and this is also among the vanities of life. It is worthy of remark, that it belongs to God as much to give the power to enjoy, as it does to give the earthly blessings. A wise heathen saw this:—

Dĕ tibi divitias dĕ derunt, artemque fruendi.
HOR. Ep. lib. i. ep. 4. ver. 7.

"The gods have given thee riches, and the art to enjoy them."

Verse 3. If a man beget a hundred children] If he have the most numerous family, and the largest possessions, and is so much attached to his riches that he grudges himself a monument; an abortion in the eye of reason is to be preferred to such a man: himself is contemptible, and his life worthless. The abortion comes in with vanity; balks expectation; departs in darkness; never opened its eyes upon the light, and its name is covered with darkness; it has no place in the family register, nor in the chronicles of Israel. This, that hath neither seen the sun, nor known any thing, is preferable to the miser, who has his coffers and granaries well furnished, should he have lived a thousand years, and had a hundred children. He has seen (possessed) no good; and he and the abortion go to one place, equally unknown, and wholly forgotten.

Verse 7. All the labour of man] This is the grand primary object of all human labour; merely to provide for the support of life by procuring things necessary. And life only exists for the sake of the soul: because man puts these things in place of spiritual good, the appetite, the intense desire after the supreme good, is not satisfied. When man learns to provide as distinctly for his soul as he does for his body, then he will begin to be happy; and may soon attain his end.

Verse 8. For what hath the wise more than the fool] They must both labour for the same end. Both depend upon the labour of themselves or others for the necessaries of life. Both must eat and drink in order to live; and the rich man can no more eat two meals at a time, than he can comfortably wear two changes of raiment. The necessaries of life are the same to both;—and their condition in life is nearly similar; liable to the same diseases, dissolution, and death.

Verse 9. Better is the sight of the eyes than the wandering of the desire] This is translated by the Vulgate, as a sort of adage,—Melius est videre quod cupias, quàm desiderare quod nescias, "It is better to see what one desires, than to covet what one knows not." It is better to enjoy the present, than to feed oneself with vain desires of the future. What we translate the wandering of desire, מהלך נפש me-halac nephesh, is the travelling of the soul. What is this? Does it simply mean desire? Or is there any reference here to the state of separate spirits? It, however, shows the soul to be in a restless state, and consequently to be unhappy. If Christ dwell in the heart by faith, the soul is then at rest; and this is properly the rest of the people of God.

Verse 10. That which hath been is named already] The Hebrew of this verse might be translated,—Who is he who is? His name has been already called. And it is known that he is Adam; and that he cannot contend in judgment with him who is stronger than he.

"What is more excellent then man; yet can he not, in the lawe, get the victory of him that is mightier than he."—COVERDALE.

ADAM is his name; and it at once points out,—1. His dignity. He was made in the image of God. 2. His fall. He sinned against his Maker, and was cast out of Paradise. And, 3. His recovery by Christ. The second man, Adam, was the Lord from heaven, and a quickening Spirit.

Verse 12. For who knoweth what is good for man in this life] Those things which we deem good are often evil. And those which we think evil are often good. So ignorant are we, that we run the greatest hazard in making a choice. It is better to leave ourselves and our concerns in the hands of the Lord, than to keep them in our own.

For who can tell a man what shall be after him.] Futurity is with God. While he lives, man wishes to know what is before him. When he is about to die, he wishes to know what will be after him. All this is vanity: God, because He is merciful, will reveal neither.

NOTES ON CHAP. VII.

Verse 1. A good name] Unsatisfactory as all sublunary things are, yet still there are some which are of great consequence; and among them a good name. The place is well paraphrased in the following verses:—

A spotless name,
By virtuous deeds acquired, is sweeter far
Than fragrant balms, whose odours round diffus'd
Regale th' invited guests.—Well may such men
Rejoice at death's approach, and bless the hours
That end their toilsome pilgrimage; assured
That till the race of life is finish'd none
Can be completely blest.

Verse 2. It is better to go to the house of mourning] Birth days were generally kept with great festivity; and to these the wise man most probably refers: but, according to his maxim, the miseries of life were so many, and so oppressive, that the day of a man's death was to be preferred to the day of his birth. But, independently of the allusion, it is much more profitable to visit the house of mourning for the dead, than the house of festivity. In the former we find occasion for serious and deeply edifying thoughts and reflections: from the latter we seldom return with one profitable thought, or one solid impression.

Verse 3. Sorrow is better than laughter] The reason is immediately given; for by the sorrow of the countenance, the grief of heart that shows itself in the countenance,—

The heart is made better.] In such cases, most men try themselves at the tribunal of their own consciences, and resolve on amendment of life.

Verse 4. The heart of the wise is in the house of mourning] A wise man loves those occasions from which he can derive spiritual advantage; and therefore prefers visiting the sick, and sympathizing with those who have suffered privations by death. But the fool, the gay, thoughtless, and giddy, prefer places and times of diversion and amusement. Here they are prevented from seriously considering either themselves or their latter end. The grand fault and misfortune of youth.

Verse 6. For as the crackling of thorns] They make a great noise, a great blaze; and are extinguished in a few moments. Such indeed, comparatively, are the joys of life; they are noisy, flashy, and transitory.

Verse 7. Oppression maketh a wise man mad] This has been translated with good show of reason,—Surely oppression shall give lustre to a wise man; but a gift corrupteth the heart. The chief difference here is in the word יהולל yeholel, which, from the root הלל halal, signifies to glister, irradiate, as well as to move briskly, to be mad, furious, in a rage; and certainly the former meaning suits this place best. We cannot think that the wise man, he that is truly religious,—for this is its meaning in the language of Solomon,—can be made mad by any kind of oppression; but as he trusts in God, so in patience he possesses his soul.

Verse 8. Better is the end] We can then judge of the whole, and especially, if the matter relate to the conduct of Divine Providence. At the beginning we are often apt to make very rash conjectures, and often suppose that such and such things are against us; and that every thing is going wrong. Dr. Byrom gives good advice on such a subject.

> "With patient mind thy course of duty run;
> God nothing does, nor suffers to be done,
> But thou would'st do thyself, could'st thou but see
> The end of all events, as well as He."

I may add, in the words of our paraphrast,—

> "Wait the result, nor ask with frantic rage
> Why God permits such things. His ways, tho' now
> Involv'd in clouds and darkness, will appear
> All right: when from thine eyes the mist is clear'd.
> Till then, to learn submission to His will > More wisdom shows, than vainly thus t' attempt > Exploring what thou canst not comprehend,
> And God for wisest ends thinks fit to hide."—C.

Verse 9. Anger resteth in the bosom of fools.] A wise man, off his guard, may feel it for a moment: but in him it cannot rest: it is a fire which he immediately casts out of his breast. But the fool, the man who is under the dominion of his own tempers, harbours and fosters it, till it takes the form of malice, and then excites him to seek full revenge on those whom he deems his enemies.

Verse 10. The former days were better than these] This is a common saying; and it is as foolish as it is common. There is no weight nor truth in it; but men use it to excuse their crimes, and the folly of their conduct. "In former times, say they, men might be more religious—use more self-denial—be more exemplary." This is all false. In former days men were wicked as they are now, and religion was unfashionable. God also is the same now, as He was then. As just, as merciful, as ready to help; and there is no depravity in the age that will excuse your crimes, your follies, and your carelessness.

Among the oriental proverbs I find the following:—

Many say this is a corrupt age. This mode of speaking is not just: it is not the age that is corrupt, but the men of the age.

Verse 11. Wisdom is good with an inheritance] In this by it there is profit [a] to them that see the sun.

chapter, Solomon introduces many observations which appear to be made by objectors against his doctrine; and as he was satisfied of their futility, he proposes them in their own full strength, and then combats and destroys them. It is quite necessary to atttend to this; else we shall take the objector's words for those of Solomon; and think, as some have done, that the wise man contradicts and refutes himself. Observations, reflections, and objections, of friends and adversaries, are frequently introduced in the works of ancient authors, without mentioning them as such. This is frequent, more particularly in Ethic writers; and we have many specimens in Horace; and without this distinction, it would be impossible to make sense of some of his writings. Here, an objector, who had listened to the wise man declaiming in favour of wisdom, suddenly interrupts him, and says in effect, —"I grant the truth of what you have said. Wisdom is very good in its place;—but what is it without property? A man who has a good inheritance may be profited by wisdom, because it will show him how to manage it to the best advantage."

Verse 12. Wisdom is a defence] To whom Solomon answers:—All true wisdom is most undoubtedly a great advantage to men in all circumstances; and money is also of great use: but it cannot be compared to wisdom. Knowledge of Divine and human things is a great blessing. Money is the means of supporting our animal life: but wisdom, the religion of the true God, gives life to them that have it. Money cannot procure the favour of God, nor give life to the soul.

Verse 13. Consider the work of God] Such is the nature of his providence, that it puts money into the hands of few: but wisdom is within the reach of all. The first is not necessary to happiness; therefore, it is not offered to men: the latter is; and therefore God, in His goodness, offers it to the whole human race. The former can rarely be acquired, for God puts it out of the reach of most men, and you cannot make that straight which he hath made crooked; the latter may be easily attained by every person who carefully and seriously seeks it from God.

Verse 14. In the day of prosperity be joyful] When ye receive these temporal gifts from God, enjoy them, and be thankful to the Giver; but remember, this sunshine will not always last. God has balanced prosperity and adversity against each other; and were it not so, how many would put the former in the place of God Himself.

Verse 15. There is a just man that perisheth] This is another objection; as if he had said,—"I also have had considerable experience; and I have not discovered any marked approbation of the conduct of the righteous, or disapprobation of that of the wicked. On the contrary, I have seen a righteous man perish, while employed on the work of righteousness; and a wicked man prosperous, and even exalted, while living wickedly. The former is indeed a victim to his righteousness, while the life and prosperity of the latter were preserved:—hence I conclude, it is not prudent, whatever good there may be in religion, and whatever excellence in wisdom, that men should be over much righteous, or over wise: for why should they by austerity and hard study, destroy themselves!" So far the objector.

Verse 16. Why shouldest thou destroy thyself] תשומם tishomem, make thyself desolate, so that thou shalt be obliged to stand alone; neither make thyself overwise, תתחכם tithechakam, do not pretend to abundance of wisdom. Why shouldest thou be so singular? In other words, and in modern language,—"There is no need of all this watching, fasting, praying, self-denial, &c. you carry things to extremes. Why should you wish to be reputed singular and precise?" To this the man of God answers:

Verse 17. Be not over much wicked, neither be thou foolish: why shouldest thou die before thy time?] אל תרשע הרבה al tirshâ ha rebbeh. Do not multiply wickedness; do not add direct opposition to godliness to the rest of your crimes. Why should you provoke God to destroy you before your time? Perdition will come soon enough. If you will not turn from your sins, and avoid it finally; yet keep out of it as long as you can.

It cannot be supposed, except by those who are totally unacquainted with the nature of true religion, that a man may have too much holiness, too much of the life of God in his soul! And yet a learned Doctor, in three Sermons on this text, has endeavoured to show, out-doing Solomon's infidel,—"the sin, folly, and danger, of being righteous overmuch!" O rare darkness!

Verse 18. It is good that thou shouldest take hold of this] Do not let such an observation slip: take hold of this; do not forget that. Get what you can in an honest way: but do not forget to get true religion; for he that fears God will be saved from all evil.

Verse 19. Wisdom strengtheneth the wise] One wise, thoroughly learned, and scientific man, may be of more use in fortifying and defending a city, than ten princes. Witness the case of Syracuse when attacked by the Romans both by sea and land. Archimedes by his engines burnt and dashed their fleet to pieces, and destroyed all that came near the walls. And had not the city been betrayed, and he killed, all their force and skill could not have taken it.

Verse 20. There is not a just man upon earth that doeth good, and sinneth not.] לא יחטא lo yecheta, that may not sin. There is not a man upon earth, howsoever just he may be, and habituated to do good, but is peccable, liable to commit sin; and therefore should continually watch and pray, and depend upon the Lord. But the text does not say, the just man does commit sin,—but simply that he may sin; and so our translators have rendered it in 1 Sam. ii. 25. twice in 1 Kings viii. 31. & 46. & 2 Chron. vi. 36. and the Reader is requested to consult the Note on 1 Kings viii. 46. where the proper construction of this word may be found, and the doctrine in question fully considered.

Verse 21. Also take no heed unto all words that are spoken] This is good advice, and much for every man's peace through life.

Thy servant curse thee] מקללך mekaleleca, make light of thee, speak evil of thee.

Verse 22. Thou thyself—hast cursed others.] קללת kelalta, thou hast spoken evil; hast vilified others. O! who is free from evil-speaking,—from uncharitable speaking,—from detailing their neighbour's faults,—from whispering, tale-bearing, and backbiting! Do not wonder if God, in His justice, permit thee to be calumniated, seeing thou hast so frequently calumniated others.

Verse 23. All this have I proved by wisdom] These rules I have laid down for my own conduct, and sought after more wisdom: but have fallen far short of what I wished to be.

Verse 24. That which is far off] Though the wisdom that is essential to our salvation may be soon learnt, through the teaching of the Spirit of wisdom; yet in wisdom itself there are extents and depths which who can reach or fathom!

Verse 25. I applied mine heart] I cast about, סבותי saboti, I made a circuit;—I circumscribed the ground I was to traverse; and all within my circle I was determined to know, and to investigate, and to seek out wisdom, and the reason of things. Has man reason and understanding? If so, then, this is his work. God as much calls him to use these powers in this way, as to believe on the Lord Jesus that he may be saved; and he that does not, according to the means in his power, is a slothful servant, from whom God may justly take away the misemployed or not used talent, and punish him for his neglect. Every doctrine of God is a subject both for reason and faith to work on.

foolishness of madness, he found nothing equally dangerous and ruinous, as the blandishments of cunning women. When once the affections are entangled, escape, without ruin, is almost impossible.

Whoso pleaseth God] The man who walks with God, and he alone, shall escape this sore evil: and even he that fears God, if he get with an artful woman, may be soon robbed of his strength, and become like other men. A bad or artful woman is represented as a company of hunters, with nets, gins, &c. to catch their prey.

Verse 27. Counting one by one] I have gone over every particular. I have compared one thing with another;—man, with woman;—his wisdom, with her wiles; his strength, with her blandishments; his influence, with her ascendency; his powers of reason, with her arts and cunning: and, in a thousand men, I have found one thoroughly upright man: but among one thousand women I have not found one such. This is a lamentable account of the state of morals in Judea, in the days of the wise king Solomon. Thank God! it would not be difficult to get a tithe of both, in the same number, in the present day.

The Targum gives a curious turn:—"There is another thing which my soul has sought, but could not find:—a man perfect and innocent, and without corruption, from the days of Adam until Abraham the just was born; who was found faithful and upright among the thousand kings who came together to construct the tower of Babel: But a woman like to Sarah among the wives of all those kings I have not found."

Verse 29. Lo, this only have I found, that God hath made man upright] Whatever evil may be now found among men and women, it is not of God; for God made them all upright. This is a singular verse, and has been most variously translated. עשה האלהים את האדם ישר והמה בקשו חשבנות רבים âsah ha-Elohim et ha-adam yashar ve-hemah bikkeshu chashebonoth rabbim.

"Elohim has made mankind upright, and they have sought many computations."

"Many reasonings."—SEPTUAGINT SYRIAC, and ARABIC.

"They seke dyverse sotylties."—COVERDALE.

And he himself mengide with questions without eend.—Old MS. Bible.

The Targum considers the text as speaking of Adam and Eve.

"This have I found out, that the Lord made the first man upright before him, and innocent: but the serpent and Eve seduced him to eat of the fruit of the tree which gave the power to those who ate of it to discern between good and evil; and was the cause that death came upon him, and all the inhabitants of the earth; and they sought that they might find out many stratagems to bring this evil upon all the inhabitants of the world."

I doubt much whether the word חשבנות chashebonoth, should be taken in a bad sense. It may signify the whole of human devices, imaginations, inventions, artifice, with all their products; arts, sciences, schemes, plans, and all that they have found out for the destruction or melioration of life. God has given man wondrous faculties; and of them he has made strange uses, and sovereign abuses; and they have been, in consequence, at one time his help, and at another his bane.

NOTES ON CHAP. VIII.

Verse 1. Who knoweth the interpretation] פשר pesher, a pure Chaldee word, found no where else in the Bible, but in the Chaldee parts of Daniel. A man's wisdom maketh his face to shine. Every state of the heart shines through the countenance: but there is such an evidence of the contented, happy, pure, benevolent, state of the soul, in the face of a truly pious man, that must be observed, and cannot be mistaken. In the Hebrew, the former clause of this verse ends the preceding chapter. Who has ever been deceived in the appearance of the face that belonged to a savage heart. Those who represent, by painting or otherwise, a wise man, with a gravely sour face, striking awe and forbidding approach, have either mistaken the man, or are unacquainted with some essential principles of their art.

The boldness of his face shall be changed] Instead of ישנא yeshunne, which signifies shall be hated, many of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. have ישנה yeshaneh, shall be changed or doubled. Hence the verse might be read, "The wisdom of a man shall illuminate his face; and the strength of his countenance shall be doubled." He shall speak with full confidence and conviction on a subject which he perfectly understands, and all will feel the weight of his observations.

Verse 2. To keep the king's commandment] This sentence would be better translated, I keep the mouth of the king.—I take good heed not to meddle with state secrets; and if I know, to hide them. Or, I am obedient to the commands of the laws; I feel myself bound by whatever the king has decreed.

In regard of the oath of God.] You have sworn obedience to him: keep your oath, for the engagement was made in the presence of God. It appears that the Jewish princes and chiefs took an oath of fidelity to their kings. This appears to have been done to David, 2 Sam. v. 1—3.; to Joash, 2 Kings xi. 17.; and to Solomon, 1 Chron. xxix. 24.

Verse 3. Be not hasty] I consider the first five verses here as directions to courtiers, and the more immediate servants of kings.

Be steadily faithful to your sovereign. Do not stand in an evil thing. If you have done wrong, do not endeavour to vindicate yourself before him:—it is of no use; his power is absolute, and he will do what he pleases. He will take his own view of the subject, and he will retain it. The language of an Asiatic sovereign was ever this, Sic volo, sic jubeo, stat pro ratione voluntas. I will this. I command that. No hesitation! My will is law! Therefore it is added here, Where the word of a king is, there is power; influence, authority, and the sword. And who may say unto him, whether he acts right or wrong, What doest thou? Ver. 4. No wonder in such governments there are so many revolutions: but they are revolutions without amendment, as it is one tyrant rising up to destroy another; who, when seated in authority, acts in the way of his predecessor; till another, like himself, do to him as he has done to the former. In our country, after a long trial, we find that a mixed monarchy is the safest, best, and most useful form of government: we have had, it is true, unprincipled ministers, who wished to turn our limited into an absolute monarchy; and they were always ready to state that an absolute monarchy was best.—Granted; provided the monarch be as wise, as holy, and as powerful, as GOD!

Verse 5. Both time and judgment.] It is a matter of great importance to be able to discern WHEN and HOW both to speak and act: but when time and manner are both determined, the matter comes next. WHAT shall I speak? WHAT shall I do? When, how, and what, answer to time, manner, and matter. To discern all these, and act suitably, is a lesson for a philosopher, and a study for a Christian.

Verse 6. To every purpose there is time] חפץ chaphets, every volition; every thing that depends on the will of man. He has generally the opportunity to do whatever he purposes; and as his purposes are frequently evil, his acts are so too; and, in consequence, his misery is great.

Verse 8. There is no man that hath power over the spirit to retain the spirit] The Chaldee has,—"There is no man who can rule over the spirit of the breath, so as to prevent the in that war; neither shall wickedness deliver those that are given to it.

9 All this have I seen, and applied my heart unto every work that is done under the sun: there is a time wherein one man ruleth over another to his own hurt.

10 And so I saw the wicked buried, who had come and gone from the place of the holy, and they were forgotten in the city where they had so done: this is also vanity.

11 [a] Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil.

12 [b] Though a sinner do evil a hundred times, and his days be prolonged, yet surely I know that [c] it shall be well with them that fear God, which fear before him.

13 But it shall not be well with the wicked, neither shall he prolong his days, which are as a shadow; because he feareth not before God.

15 [e] Then I commended mirth, because a man hath no better thing under the sun, than to eat, and to drink, and to be merry: for that shall abide with him of his labour the days of his life, which God giveth him under the sun.

animal life from leaving the body of man." Others translate to this sense,—"No man hath power over the wind, to restrain the wind; and none has power over death, to restrain him: and when a man engages as a soldier, he cannot be discharged from the war till it is ended; and by wickedness no man shall be delivered from any evil." Taking it in this way, these are maxims which contain self-evident truths. Others suppose the verse to refer to the king who tyrannizes over and oppresses his people. He also shall account to God for his actions: he shall die, and he cannot prevent it: and when he is judged, his wickedness cannot deliver him.

Verse 9. One man ruleth over another to his own hurt.] This may be spoken of rulers generally; who, instead of feeding, fleece the flock. Tyrants and oppressors, who come to an untimely end by their mismanagement of the offices of the state. All these things relate to Asiatic despots, and have ever been more applicable to them than to any other sovereigns in the world. They were despotic; they still are so.

Verse 10. Who had come and gone from the place of the holy] The place of the holy is the sacred office which they held, anointed either as kings or priests to God; and having not fulfilled the holy office in a holy way, have been carried to their graves without lamentation, and lie among the dead without remembrance.

Verse 11. Because sentence] פתגם pithgam, a Divine decree or declaration. This is no Hebrew, but a mere Chaldee word; and occurs only in the later books of the Bible; Esther, Ezra, and Daniel; and no where else, but in this place. Because God does not immediately punish every delinquency, men think He disregards evil acts; and, therefore they are emboldened to sin on: so, this long-suffering of God, which leadeth to repentance, is abused so as to lead to further crimes! When men sin against the remedy of their salvation,—how can they escape perdition?

Verse 12. Though a sinner do evil a hundred times] If God bear so long with a transgressor, waiting in His long-suffering for him to repent and turn to Him, surely He will be peculiarly kind to them that fear Him, and endeavour to walk uprightly before Him.

Verse 13. But it shall not be well with the wicked] Let not the long-spared sinner presume, that because sentence is not speedily executed on his evil works, and that he is suffered to go on to his hundredth transgression, that God has forgotten to punish.—No: he feareth not before God; and, therefore, he shall not ultimately escape.

Verse 14. There be just men] See on chap. vii. ver. 16.

Verse 15. Then I commended mirth] These are some more of the cavils of the infidel objector.—"Since virtue is frequently under oppression, and vice triumphs in health, and rolls in wealth; I see plainly that we should not trouble ourselves about future things; and therefore should be governed by the maxim, EDE, BIBE, LUDE. Post mortem nulla voluptas.

Eat, drink, and play,
While here you may;
For soon as death
Has stopp'd your breath,
Ye ne'er shall see a cheerful day.

Verse 16. When I applied mine heart to know wisdom] This is the reply of the wise man: "I have also considered these seeming contradictions. God governs the world: but we cannot see the reasons of His conduct; nor know why He does this, omits that, or permits a third thing. We may the earth: (for also there is that neither day nor night seeth sleep with his eyes:)

17 Then I beheld all the work of God, that [a] a man cannot find out the work that is done under the sun: because though a man labour to seek it out, yet he shall not find it; yea further; though a wise man think to know it, [b] yet shall he not be able to find it.

study night and day, and deprive ourselves of rest and sleep; but we shall never fathom the depths that are in the Divine government: but all is right and just. This is the state of probation; and in it neither can the wicked be punished, nor the righteous rewarded. But eternity is at hand; and then shall every man receive according to his works. He that spends his life in the eat, drink, and play, will find in that day, that he has lost the time in which he could have prepared for eternity.

Verse 17. Then I beheld all the work of God, that a man cannot find out the work that is done under the sun] I saw it to be of such a nature,—1. That a man cannot find it out. 2. That if he labour to find it out, he shall not succeed. 3. That though he be wise, the most instructed among men, and think to find it out, he shall find he is not able. It is beyond the wisdom and power of man. How vain then are all your cavils against Providence. You do not understand it,—you cannot comprehend it. Fear God!

NOTES ON CHAP. IX.

Verse 1. The righteous, and the wise, and their works, are in the hand of God] This is a continuation of the preceding subject: and here the wise man draws a conclusion from what he had seen, and from the well-known character of God; that the righteous, the wise, and their conduct, were all in the hand, protected by the power, of God, and safe in His approbation: but we cannot judge, from the occurrences which take place in life, who the objects of God's love or displeasure may be.

Verse 2. All things come alike to all] This is very generally true: but God often makes a difference: and His faithful followers witness many interventions of Divine providence in their behalf. But there are general blessings, and general natural evils, that equally affect the just and the unjust. But in this all is right: the evils that are in nature are the effects of the FALL of man; and God will not suspend general laws, or alter them, to favour individual cases. Nor does He design that His approbation or disapprobation shall be shown by any of these occurrences. Every holy man has a testimony of God's approbation in his own heart; and this makes him truly happy, let outward things be as they may. And, in general, what the wicked suffer is the fruit of their own doings. But the general state of nature, as to what are called natural evils, is just as it ought to be. There is evil enough to show that man has fallen from God; and good enough to show that God deals with him in mercy. I cannot see that there is any rational cause for me to 3 This is an evil among all things that are done under the sun, that there is one event unto all: yea, also the heart of the sons of men is full of evil, and madness is in their heart while they live, and after that they go to the dead.

4 For to him that is joined to all the living there is hope: for a living dog is better than a dead lion.

5 For the living know that they shall die: but [a] the dead know not any thing, neither have they any more a reward; for [b] the memory of them is forgotten.

6 Also their love and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished; neither have they any more a portion for ever in any thing that is done under the sun.

stumble at the dispensations of Divine providence on these accounts.

Verse 3. The heart of the sons of men is full of evil] No wonder then that the curse of God should be frequent in the earth.

Verse 4. For to him that is joined to all the living there is hope] While a man lives he hopes to amend, and he hopes to have a better lot: and thus life is spent, hoping to grow better, and hoping to get more. The Vulgate has, There is none that shall live always, nor has any, hope of such a thing. Perhaps the best translation is the following:—What, therefore, is to be chosen? In him that is living there is hope. Then choose the eternal life, which thou hopest to possess.

A living dog is better than a dead lion.] I suppose this was a proverb. The smallest measure of animal existence is better than the largest of dead matter. The poorest living peasant is infinitely above Alexander the Great.

Verse 5. The living know that they shall die] This is so self-evident that none can doubt it; and, therefore, all that have this conviction should prepare for death and eternal blessedness.

But the dead know not any thing] Cut off from life, they know nothing of what passes under the sun. Their day of probation is ended; and, therefore, they can have no further reward in living a holy life: nor can they be liable to any further punishment for crimes in a state of probation, that being ended.

Verse 6. Also their love and their hatred] It is evident that he speaks here of the ignorance, want of power, &c. of the dead, in reference only to this life. And though they have no more a portion under the sun, yet he does not intimate that they have none any where else. A man threatens to conquer kingdoms, &c. He dies;—what are his threats!

Verse 7. Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy] Do not vex and perplex yourselves with the dispensations and mysteries of Providence: enjoy the blessings which God has given you, and live to His glory; and then God will accept your works.

Verse 8. Let thy garments be always white] The Jews wore white garments on festal occasions, as emblems of joy and innocence. Be always pure, and always happy.

The Targum says,—"At all times let thy garments be washed and pure from the stain of sin. Acquire a good name which is likened to the oil of anointing, that blessings may be called down upon thy head, and goodness not forsake thee."

Verse 9. Live joyfully with the wife whom thou lovest] Marry prudently, keep faithfully attached to the wife thou hast chosen, and rejoice in the labour of thy hands.

Some understand this, as the words of the libertine objector. Live joyfully with the woman whom thou lovest best. But this does not comport so well with the scope of the place.

Verse 10. Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do] Examine here the WHAT, the HOW, and the WHY.

I. What is necessary to be done in this life, in reference to another? 1. Turn from sin. 2. Repent. 3. Frequent the ordinances of God, and associate with the upright. 4. Read the Scriptures. 5. Pray for pardon. 6. Believe on the Lord Jesus that thou mayest obtain it. 7. Look for the gift of the Holy Spirit. 8. Bring forth in their seasons the fruits of,—1. Repentance. 2. Faith. And, 3. the Holy Spirit. 9. Live to get good. 10. And to do good. 11. And refer every purpose and act to the eternal world.

II. How should these be done? With thy might. 1. Be fully convinced of the necessity of these things. 2. Be determined to act according to this conviction. 3. Then act with all thy strength; put forth all thy power in avoiding evil, repenting for sin, &c. &c.

III. Why should this be done? 1. Because thou art a dying man. 2. Thou art going into the grave. 3. When thou leavest this life, thy state of probation, with all its vice, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest.

11 I returned, [a] and saw under the sun, that the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, neither yet bread to the wise, nor yet riches to men of understanding, nor yet favour to men of skill; but time and chance happeneth to them all.

12 For [b] man also knoweth not his time: as the fishes that are taken in an evil net, and as the birds that are caught in the snare; so are the sons of men [c] snared in an evil time, when it falleth suddenly upon them.

13 This wisdom have I seen also under the sun, and it seemed great unto me:

14 [d] There was a little city, and few men within it; and there came a great king against it, and advantages, is eternally ended. 4. If thou die in sin, where God is thou shalt never come. For, 1. There is no work by which thou mayest profit. 2. No device by which thou mayest escape punishment. 3. No knowledge of any means of help. 4. And no wisdom, restoration of the soul to the favour and image of God, in that grave whither thou goest. Therefore, work while it is called to-day.

My Old MS. Bible translates this nervously. Whateuer thinge may thin hond don, besily wirch: for nouther were, ne resoun, ne wisdom, ne keennyng schuln he a nentis hell, whither thou gost. Properly speaking, every sinner is going to hell, and the wisdom of God calls upon him to turn and live.

Verse 11. The race is not to the swift] It is not by swiftness, nor by strength and valour, that races are gained, and battles won. God causes the lame often to take the prey, the prize; and so works, that the weak overthrow the strong; therefore, no man should confide in himself. All things are under the government, and at the disposal, of God.

But time and chance] עת êt, time or opportunity, and פגע pagâ, incident or occurrence,—

Happeneth to them all.] Every man has what may be called time and space to act in, and opportunity to do a particular work. But in this TIME and OPPORTUNITY there is INCIDENT, what may fall in, and OCCURRENCE, what may meet and frustrate, an attempt. These things should be wisely weighed, and seriously balanced: for those four things belong to every human action. While you have TIME, seek an OPPORTUNITY to do what is right: but let him calculate on hindrances and oppositions, because time and opportunity have their INCIDENT and OCCURRENCE. Coverdale translates this verse well:—"I sawe that in runnynge, it helpeth not to be swift; in batayll, it helpeth not to be stronge; to fedynge, it helpeth not to be wyse; to riches, it helpeth not to be sutyll; to be had in favoure, it helpeth not to be connynge: but that all lyeth in time and fortune."

Verse 12. As the birds that are caught] Man acts so heedlessly, notwithstanding all his wisdom, and all his warnings, that he is often taken, as a fish is, by the baited hook; and the bird by the baited snare. And thus, an evil time, like the snare, gin, trap, hook, falleth suddenly upon them; and they are taken in a moment, and have no means of escaping. How frequently do we see these comparisons illustrated!

Verse 14. There was a little city, and few men within it] Here is another proof of the vanity of sublunary things: the ingratitude of men, and the little compensation that genuine merit receives. The little history mentioned here may have either been a fact, or intended as an instructive fable. A little city, with few to defend it, being besieged by a great king, and a powerful army, was delivered by the cunning and address of a poor wise man: and afterward his townsmen forgot their obligation to him.

Those who spiritualize this passage, making the little city the CHURCH, the few men the APOSTLES, the great king the DEVIL, and the poor wise man JESUS CHRIST, abuse the text.

But the Targum is not less whimsical:—"The little city is the human body; few men in it, few good affections to work righteousness; the great king, evil concupiscence, which, like a strong and powerful king, enters into the body to oppress it, and besieges the heart so as to cause it to err; built great bulwarks against it, evil concupiscence builds his throne in it, wheresoever he wills, and causes it to decline from the ways that are right before God; that it may be taken in the greatest nets of hell, that he may burn it seven times, because of its sins. But there is found in it a poor wise man; a good, wise, and holy affection, which prevails over the evil principle, and snatches the body from the judgment of hell, by the strength of its wisdom. Yet, after this deliverance, the man did not remember what the good principle had done for him: but said in his heart, I am innocent, &c.

What a wonderful text has this been in the hands of many a modern Targumist; and with what force have the Keachonians preached Christ crucified from it.

Such a passage as this receives a fine illustration from the case of Archimedes, saving the city of Syracuse from all the Roman forces besieging it by sea and land. He destroyed their ships by his burning glasses, lifted up their galleys out of the water by his machines, dashing some to pieces, and drowning others. One man's wisdom here prevailed for a long time against the most powerful exertions of a mighty besieged it, and built great bulwarks against it:

15 Now there was found in it a poor wise man, and he by his wisdom delivered the city; yet no man remembered that same poor man.

16 [a] Then said I, Wisdom is better than strength: nevertheless [b] the poor man's wisdom is despised, and his words are not heard.

A. M. cir. 3027 B. C. cir. 977. Ante I. Olymp. cir. 201. Ante U. C. cir. 224.

17 The words of wise men are heard in quiet more than the cry of him that ruleth among fools.

18 [c] Wisdom is better than weapons of war: but [d] one sinner destroyeth much good.

nation. In this case, wisdom far exceeded strength. But was not Syracuse taken, notwithstanding the exertions of this poor wise man? No. But it was betrayed by the baseness of Mericus, a Spaniard, one of the Syracusan generals. He delivered the whole district he commanded into the hands of Marcellus, the Roman consul; Archimedes having defeated every attempt made by the Romans, either by sea or land: yet he commanded no company of men; made no sorties: but confounded and destroyed them by his machines. This happened about 208 years before Christ; and nearly about the time in which those who do not consider Solomon as the author, suppose this book to have been written. This wise man was not remembered; he was slain by a Roman soldier, while deeply engaged in demonstrating a new problem, in order to his further operations against the enemies of his country. See Plutarch, and the historians of this Syracusan war.

When Alexander the Great was about to destroy the city Lampsacus, his old master Anaximenes came out to meet him. Alexander suspecting his design, that he would intercede for the city, being determined to destroy it, he swore that he would not grant him any thing he should ask. Then said Anaximenes,—"I desire that you will destroy this city." Alexander respected his oath, and the city was spared. Thus says Valerius Maximus, the narrator, (lib. vii. c. iii. No. 4. Extern.) by this sudden turn of sagacity, this ancient and noble city was preserved from the destruction by which it was threatened. Hæc velocitas sagacitatis oppidum vetusta nobilitate inclytum, exitio cui destinatum erat, subtraxit.

A stratagem of Jaddua, the high-priest, was the means of preserving Jerusalem from being destroyed by Alexander, who, incensed because they had assisted the inhabitants of Gaza when he besieged it; as soon as he had reduced it, marched against Jerusalem, with the determination to raze it to the ground; but Jaddua and his priests in their sacerdotal robes meeting him on the way, he was so struck with their appearance, that he not only prostrated himself before the high-priest, and spared the city, but also granted it some remarkable privileges. But the case of Archimedes and Syracuse is the most striking and appropriate in all its parts. That of Anaximenes and Lampsacus is also highly illustrative of the maxim of the wise man: Wisdom is better than strength.

Verse 16. The poor man's wisdom is despised, and his words are not heard.] I cannot help pursuing this illustration a little further. The soldier, who found Archimedes busily employed in drawing figures upon the sand, put to him some impertinent question, withal rudely obtruding himself on his operations. To whom this wonderful mathematician replied, —Stand off, soldier, and do not spoil my diagram; on which the bloody savage struck him dead!

Verse 17. The words of wise men are heard in quiet] In the tumult of war the words of Archimedes were not heard; and his life was lost.

Verse 18. Wisdom is better than weapons of war] So proved in the case of Archimedes.

But one sinner] Such as the Roman butcher above mentioned.

Destroyeth much good.] Such as were the life and skill of the Syracusan mathematician. One sinner has often injured the work of God; one stumblingblock has sometimes destroyed a revival of religion. Sin acts like a ferment,—whatever comes in contact with it, it assimilates to itself.

NOTES ON CHAP. X.

Verse 1. Dead flies] Any putrefaction spoils perfume; and so, a foolish act ruins the character of him who has the reputation of being wise and good. Alas! alas! in an unguarded moment how many have tarnished the reputation, which they were many years in acquiring! Hence, no man can be said to be safe, till he is taken to the Paradise of God.

Verse 2. A wise man's heart is at his right hand] As the right hand is ordinarily the best exercised, strongest, and most ready, and the left the contrary, they show,—1. The command which the wise man has over his own mind, feelings, passions, &c. and the prudence with which he acts. And, 2. The want of prudence and management in the fool, who has no restraint on his passions, and no rule or guard upon his tongue. The right hand and the left are used in Scripture to express good and evil. The wise man is always employed in doing good; the fool in nonsense or evil.

Verse 3. When—a fool walketh by the way] In every act of life, and in every company he frequents, the irreligious man shows what he is. Vanity, nonsense, and wickedness, are his themes: so that in effect he saith to every one that he is a fool.

Verse 4. If the spirit of the ruler rise up against thee] If the king get incensed against thee:—

Leave not thy place] Humble thyself before him, that is thy place and duty; for yielding to him, and not standing stoutly in thy defence, pacifieth great offences: and then when his anger is appeased, he will hear any thing in thy justification, if thou have any thing to offer. This is good advice to a child in reference to his parents, and to an inferior of any kind in reference to his superiors.

Several of the Fathers understood this differently. If the spirit of the ruler, the influence of Satan, hath risen up against and prevailed over thee, to bring thee into some sin; leave not thy place; do not despair of God's mercy; humble thyself before Him, and seek pardon through the Son of His love; and this will be מרפא marephé a remedy or cure even for חטאים גדולים chataim gedolim, great errors or sins. All this is true in itself, whether found in this text or not.

Verse 5. An error which proceedeth from the ruler] What this error in the ruler is, the two following verses point out: it is simply this,—an injudicious distribution of offices, and raising people to places of trust and confidence, who are destitute of merit, are neither of name nor family to excite public confidence, and are without property, so that they have no stake in the country; and their only solicitude must naturally be, to enrich themselves, and provide for their poor relatives. This is frequent in the governments of the world; and favouritism has often brought prosperous nations to the brink of ruin. Folly was set in dignity; the man of property, sense, and name, in a low place. Servants, menial men, rode upon horses, carried every thing with a high and proud hand; and princes, the nobles of the people, obliged to walk by their sides, and often from the state of things to become in effect their servants. This was often the case in this country, during the reign of Thomas à Becket and Cardinal Wolsey. These insolent men lorded it over the whole nation; and the people and their gentry were raised or depressed according as their pride and caprice willed. And through these kinds of errors, not only a few sovereigns have had most uncomfortable and troublesome reigns; but some have even lost their lives.

Verse 8. Whoso breaketh a hedge, a serpent shall bite him.] While spoiling his neighbour's property, he himself may come to greater mischief: while pulling out the sticks, he may be bit by a serpent, who has his nest there. Some have supposed that נחש nachash, here means a thorn; perhaps from the similarity of its prick to the serpent's sting. He who forces his way through a hedge, will be pricked by the thorns.

Verse 9. Whoso removeth stones] This verse teaches care and caution. Whoever pulls down an old building, is likely to be hurt by the stones; and in cleaving wood, many accidents occur for want of sufficient caution.

Verse 10. If the iron be blunt] If the axe have lost its edge, then must he put to more strength: but wisdom is profitable to direct.

11 Surely the serpent will bite [a] without enchantment; and a [b] babbler is no better.

12 [c] The words of a wise man's mouth are [d] gracious; but [e] the lips of a fool will swallow up himself.

13 The beginning of the words of his mouth is foolishness; and the end of [f] his talk is mischievous madness.

14 [g] A fool also [b] is full of words: a man cannot tell what shall be; and [i] what shall be after him, who can tell him?

edge, and the owner do not sharpen it, he must apply the more strength to make it cut: but the wisdom that is profitable to direct will teach him, that he should whet his axe, and spare his strength. Thus, without wisdom and understanding, we cannot go profitably through the meanest concerns in life.

Verse 11. The serpent will bite without enchantment] בלא לחש belo lachash, without hissing. As a snake may bite before it hiss, so also will the babbler, talkative person, or calumniator. Without directly speaking evil, he insinuates by inuendoes, things injurious to the reputation of his neighbour. Bif the eddir bite in silence, nothing lasse than he hath that privily backbitith.—Old MS. Bible. "A babbler of his tongue is no better then a serpent that styngeth without hyssynge."—Coverdale. The moral of this saying is simply this:—A calumniator is as dangerous as a poisonous serpent; and from the envenomed tongue of slander and detraction no man is safe. The comparing the serpent נחש nachash to a babbler, has something singular in it. I have already supposed that the creature mentioned, Gen. iii. 1. was of the genus simia. This has been ridiculed: but not disproved.

Verse 12. The words of a wise man's mouth] Every thing that proceeds from him is decent and orderly: creditable to himself, and acceptable to them who hear him. But the lips of the fool which speak every thing at random, and have no understanding to guide them, are not only not pleasant to others, but often destructive to himself.

Verse 14. A man cannot tell what shall be] A foolish babbling man will talk on every subject, though he can say as little on the past, as he can on the future.

Verse 15. He knoweth not how to go to the city] I suppose this to be a proverb: he knows nothing; he does not know his way to the next village. He may labour: but, for want of judgment, he wearies himself to no purpose.

Verse 16. Wo to thee, O land, when thy king is a child] Minorities are, in general, very prejudicial to a state. Regents either disagree, and foment civil wars; or oppress the people. Various discordant interests are raised up in a state during a minority; and the young king, having been under the tutelage of interested men, acts partially and injuriously to the interests of the people when he comes to the throne; and this produces popular discontent, and a troubled reign.

Thy princes eat in the morning!] They do nothing in order; turn night into day, and day into night; sleep when they should wake, and wake when they should sleep; attending more to chamberings and banquetings, than to the concerns of the state.

Verse 17. When thy king is the son of nobles] Υιος ελευθερων, the son of free men; persons well acquainted with the principles of civil liberty, and who rule according to them. Septuagint. Such an one as comes to the throne in a legitimate way, from an ancient regal family, whose right to the throne is incontestable. It requires such a long time to establish a regal right, that the state is in continual danger from pretenders and usurpers, where the king is not the son of nobles.

And thy princes eat in due season] All persons in places of trust for the public weal, from the king to the lowest public functionary, should know that the public are exceedingly scandalized at repeated accounts, of entertainments, where irregularity prevails, much money is expended, and no good done. These things are drawn into precedent, and quoted to countenance debauch in the inferior classes. The natural division of the day for necessary repasts is, Breakfast, eight, or half after; Dinner, one, or half after; and Supper, eight, or half after. And these, or even earlier hours, were formerly observed in these countries. Then we had scarcely any such thing as gout; and no nervous disorders.

In ancient nations the custom was to eat but once; and then about mid-day.

Verse 18. By much slothfulness] This is remarkably the case in some countries. Houses are not repaired till they almost fall about the ears of the inhabitants. We have an adage that applies to all such cases:—"A stitch in time saves nine."

Verse 19. A feast is made for laughter] The object of it is to produce merriment; to banish care, and concern of every kind. But who are they who make and frequent such places? Epicures and drunkards generally; such as those of whom Horace speaks:

Nos numerus sumus, et fruges consumere nati.
Epist. lib. i. ep. 2. ver. 27.

"Those whose names stand as indications of men, the useless many; and who appear to be born only to consume the produce of the soil."

But money answereth all] This saying has prevailed every where.

Scilicet uxorem cum dote, fidemque et amicos,
Et genus, et formam, REGINA PECUNIA donat;
Ac bene nummatum decorat Suadela, Venusque.
Hor. Ep. lib. i. ep. 6. ver. 36.

"For gold, the sovereign QUEEN of all below;
Friends, honour, birth, and beauty, can bestow.
The goddess of persuasion forms his train;
And Venus decks the well bemonied swain."
FRANCIS.

Verse 20. Curse not the king] Do not permit thyself even to think evil of the king; lest thy tongue at some time give vent to thy thoughts, and so thou be chargeable with treason.

For a bird of the air shall carry the voice] Does he refer here to such fowls as the carrier pigeon, which were often used to carry letters under their wings to a great distance, and bring back answers? The Targum turns it curiously: "Do not speak evil of the king in thy conscience, nor in the secret of thy heart; nor in the most hidden place in thy house curse not a wise man: for Raziel calls daily from heaven upon Mount Horeb, and his voice goes through the whole world; and Elijah, the great priest, goes flying through the air like a winged eagle, and publishes the words which are spoken in secret by all the inhabitants of the earth."

Civil government is so peculiarly of God, that He will have it supported for the benefit of mankind; and those who attempt to disturb it are generally marked by His strong disapprobation. And though there have been multitudes of treasons hatched in the deepest secrecy; yet, through the providence of God, they have been discovered in the most singular manner. This shows God's care for government.

NOTES ON CHAP. XI.

Verse 1. Cast thy bread upon the waters] An allusion to the sowing of rice: which was sown upon muddy ground, or ground covered with water, and trodden in by the feet of cattle: it thus took root, and grew, and was found after many days in a plentiful harvest. Give alms to the poor, and it will be as a seed sown in good ground. God will cause thee afterward to receive it with abundant increase. The Targum understands it of giving bread to poor sailors. The Vulgate, and my Old Bible, have the same idea. Send thi brede upon men passing waters.

Verse 2. Give a portion to seven] Never cease giving while thou seest a person in distress, and hast wherewithal to relieve him.

and if the tree fall toward the south, or toward the north, in the place where the tree falleth, there it shall be.

4 He that observeth the wind shall not sow; and he that regardeth the clouds shall not reap.

5 As [a] thou knowest not what is the way of the spirit, [b] nor how the bones do grow in the womb of her that is with child: even so thou knowest not the works of God who maketh all.

6 In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand: for thou knowest not whether [c] shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good.

7 Truly the light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is for the eyes [d] to behold the sun:

[c] Heb. shall be right.——[d] Ch. 7. 11.

Thou knowest not what evil] Such may be the change of times, that thou may yet stand in need of similar help thyself. Do as thou wouldst be done by.

Verse 3. If the clouds be full of rain] Act as the clouds: when they are full, they pour out their water indifferently on the field, and on the desert. By giving charity indiscriminately, it may be that thou wilt often give it to the unworthy: but thou shouldst ever consider that he is an object of thy charity, who appears to be in real want; and better relieve or give to a hundred worthless persons, than pass by one who is in real distress.

Where the tree falleth, there it shall be.] Death is at no great distance; thou hast but a short time to do good. Acquire a heavenly disposition while here; for there will be no change after this life. If thou die in the love of God, and in the love of man; in that state wilt thou be found in the day of judgment. If a tree about to fall, lean to the north, to the north it will fall; if to the south, it will fall to that quarter. In whatever disposition or state of soul thou diest, in that thou wilt be found in the eternal world. Death refines nothing, purifies nothing, kills no sin, helps to no glory. Let thy continual bent and inclination be to God, to holiness, to charity, to mercy, and to heaven: then fall when thou mayest, thou wilt fall well.

Verse 4. He that observeth the wind shall not sow] The man that is too scrupulous is never likely to succeed in any thing. If a man neither plough nor sow till the weather is entirely to his mind, the season will in all probability pass before he will have done any thing: so if thou be too nice in endeavouring to find out who are the impostors among those who profess to be in want; the real object may perish, which otherwise thou mightest have relieved, and whose life might have been thereby saved. The very punctilious and scrupulous people, who will sift every thing to the bottom, in every case; and before they will act, must be fully satisfied in all points, seldom do any good, and are themselves generally good for nothing. While they are observing the clouds and the rain, others have joined hands with God, and made a poor man live.

Verse 5. As thou knowest not—the way of the spirit] Why God should have permitted such and such persons to fall into want, and how they came into all their distresses, thou canst not tell, no more than thou canst how their soul is united to their body, how it came to inform that body, nor how the child was formed in the womb of its mother. Nor canst thou discern the end which God has in view in these things. He maketh all, every thing is open to Him: and take heed lest, while pretending motives of scrupulosity and prudence, in not relieving the distresses of those thou pretendest to suspect to be unworthy, He does not see that a love of money is the motive of thy conduct, and a want of the bowels of mercy the cause why thou drivest this suspected beggar from thy door!

Verse 6. In the morning sow thy seed] Be ready at all times to show mercy; begin in the morning, continue till the evening. Thou knowest not the most worthy object; it is enough God knoweth; and if thy motive be good, He will applaud and reward thee; not according to the worthiness or unworthiness of the object of thy charity, but according to the motive which induced thee to relieve him.

Verse 7. Truly the light is sweet] Life is dear to every man as the light of the sun is to the eye. A man would give all that he has for his life; and it is particularly dear to him, when he is in ease and affluence: but let each remember that,—

Verse 8. If a man live many years] And even have prosperity through the whole; yet the days of darkness, times of affliction, weakness, and perhaps old age, will be many. If he die not a violent death, which no man can wish, he will die a lingering death; and this is ordinarily attended with many pains, and many sorrows: therefore, let him prepare to meet his God; and to carry this thought through life, that all must terminate in death. The writer of Ecclesiasticus, chap. vii. ver. 36. has a good saying similar to this:—"Whatsoever thou takest in hand, remember thy END: and thou shalt never do amiss;" ανεκμαρτησις, thou wilt not sin.

Verse 9. Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth] Youth is devoid of cares; and, consequently, of many perplexities and distresses. Were it not so, we should have no old men; nay, perhaps not one even of middle age. It is in the order of a most gracious God, that the young should rejoice in their youth; but they should make such a moderate use of all their enjoyments, that they may not be confounded in the day of judgment. But, O young man, if thou wilt follow the propensities of thy own heart, the noisy mirth of the fool, and the dissipation of the profligate—go on; take thy full swing: but take this with thee, that for all these things, God will judge thee; and where the righteous are scarcely saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear!

Verse 10. Therefore remove sorrow] כעס caâs, anger; every kind of violent passion, all filthiness of the flesh and spirit. Childhood and youth are vanity; they pass away and come to nothing. Eternity alone is permanent; live for eternity.

NOTES ON CHAP. XII.

Verse 1. Remember thy Creator] בוראיך Boreica, thy CREATORS. The word is most certainly in the plural number in all our common Hebrew Bibles: but it is in the singular number, בוראך Boraca, in one hundred and seventy-six of Dr. Kennicott's MSS., and ninety-six of De Rossi's, and in many ancient editions; and in all the ancient Versions. There is no dependence on the plural form in most of the modern editions; though there are some editions of great worth, which exhibit the word in this form; and among them the Complutensian, Antwerp, Paris, and London Polyglotts.

The evidence, therefore, that this text is supposed to give to the doctrine of the Ever-blessed Trinity is but precarious, and on it little stress can be laid: and no man who loves truth would wish to support it by dubious witnesses. Injudicious men by laying stress on texts dubious in themselves, and which may be interpreted a different way, greatly injure the true faith. Though such in their hearts may be friends to the orthodox faith, they are in fact its worst friends; and their assistance is such as helps their adversaries.

But what does the text say? It addresses the youth of both sexes, throughout the creation; and says in effect,—

I. You are not your own, you have no right to yourselves. God made you—He is your Creator; He made you that you might be happy: but you can be happy only in Him. And as He created you, so He preserves you;—He feeds, clothes, upholds you. He has made you capable of knowing, loving, and serving Him in this world, and of enjoying Him in His own glory for ever. And when ye had undone yourselves by sin, He sent His Son to redeem you by His blood; and He sends His Spirit, to enlighten, convince, and draw you away from childishness, from vain and trifling, as well as from sinful pursuits.

II. Remember Him; consider that He is your Creator—your loving and affectionate Father. In youth memory is strong and tenacious: but, through the perversion of the heart by sin, young people can remember any thing better than GOD. If you get a kindness from a friend, you can remember that, and feel gratitude for it; and the person is therefore endeared to you. Have any ever given you such benefits as your Creator? Your body and soul came from Him; He gave you your eyes, ears, tongue, hands, feet, &c. What blessings are these! how excellent! how useful! how necessary!—and will you forget HIM?

III. Remember Him in thy YOUTH, in order that you may have a long and blessed life, that you may be saved from the corruption and misery into which young people in general run; and the evils they entail upon themselves by giving way to the sinful propensities of their own hearts. As in youth all the powers are more active and vigorous, so they are capable of superior enjoyments. Faith, hope, and love, will be in their best tenor, their greatest vigour, and in their least encumbered state. And it will be easier for you to believe, hope, pray, love, obey, and bear your cross, than it can be in old age and decrepitude.

IV. Remember Him NOW, in this part of your youth—you have no certainty of life;—now is yours; to-morrow may not. You are young: but you may never be old. Now He waits to be gracious; to-morrow may be too late. God now calls; His Spirit now strives; His ministers now exhort. You have now health; sin has not so much dominion over you as it will have, increasing by every future moment, if you do not give up your hearts to your Maker.

V. There is another consideration which should weigh with you, should you live to old age: it is a very disadvantageous time to begin to serve the Lord in. Infirmities press down both body and mind, and the oppressed nature has enough to do to bear its own infirmities; and as there is little time, so there is generally less inclination, to call upon the Lord. Evil habits are strengthened by long continuance; and every desire and appetite in the soul is a strong hold for Satan. There is little time for repentance, little for faith, none for obedience. The evil days are come, and the years, in which you will feelingly be obliged to say, Alas! we have no pleasure in them; and, what is worse, the heart is hardened through the deceitfulness of sin.

Verse 2. While the sun, or the light, or the moon, or the stars, be not darkened] i. e. in the SPRING, prime, and prosperity, of life.

Nor the clouds return] The infirmities of old age, of which WINTER is a proper emblem, as spring is of youth, in the former clause of this verse.

Verse 3. In the day when the keepers of the house] The BODY of man is here compared to a HOUSE:—mark the metaphors, and their propriety.

1. The keepers shall tremble; the hands become paralytic, as is constantly the case, less or more in old age.

2. The strong men shall bow] The legs become feeble, and unable to support the weight of the body.

3. The grinders cease because they are few] The teeth decayed and mostly lost: the few that remain being incapable of properly masticating hard substances, or animal food. And so they cease; for soft or pulpy substances, which are requisite then, require little or no mastication; and these aliments become their ordinary food.

4. Those that look out of the windows] The optic nerves, which receive impressions, through the medium of the different humours of the eye, from surrounding objects; they are darkened; the humours becoming thick, flat, and turbid, are no longer capable of transmitting those images in that clear distinct manner as formerly. There may be an allusion here to the pupil of the eye. Look into it, and you will see your own image in extreme miniature, looking out upon you; and hence it has its name pupillus, a little child, from pupus, a baby, a doll; because the image in the eye resembles such. The optic nerve being seated at the bottom of the eye, has the images of surrounding objects painted upon it: it looks out through the different humours. The different membranes and humours which compose the eye, and serve for vision, are, the tunica conjunctiva, the tunica sclerotica, the cornea, the iris, the pupil, the choroides, and the retina. The iris is perforated to admit the rays of light, and is called the pupil; the retina is a diffusion of the optic nerve, in the bottom of the eye, on which the images are painted or impressed, that give us the sensation we term sight or vision. All these membranes, humours, and nerves, are more or less impaired, thickened, or rendered opaque, by old age, expressed by the metaphor, those that look out of the windows are darkened.

Verse 4. And the doors shall be shut in the streets]

5. The doors; the lips, which are the doors by which the mouth is closed.

6. Be shut in the streets] The cavities of the cheeks and jaws, through which the food may be said to travel, before it is fitted by mastication or chewing to go down the œsophagus into the stomach. The doors or lips are shut to hinder the food in chewing from dropping out; as the teeth, which prevented that before, are now lost.

7. The sound of the grinding is low] Little noise is now grinding is low, and he shall rise up at the voice of the bird, and all [a] the daughters of music shall be brought low;

5 Also when they shall be afraid of that which is high, and fears shall be in the way, and the almond tree shall flourish, and the grasshopper shall be a burden, and desire shall fail: because man goeth to [b] his long home, and [b] the mourners go about the streets:

made in eating, because the teeth are either lost, or become so infirm as not to suffer their being pressed close together; and the mouth being kept shut to hinder the food from dropping out, the sound in eating is scarcely heard. The teeth are divided into three kinds:—1. The dentes incisores, or cutting teeth, in the front of the jaw. 2. The dentes canini, dog teeth, those in the sides of the jaws, for gnawing, or tearing and separating hard or tough substances. And, 3. Dentes molares, or grinding teeth, the posterior or double teeth in both jaws, generally termed the grinders; because their office is to grind down the substances that have been cut by the fore-teeth, separated into their parts or fibres by the dog teeth, and thus prepare it for digestion in the stomach.

8. He shall rise up at the voice of the bird] His sleep is not sound as it used to be: he slumbers rather than sleeps; and the crowing of the cock awakes him. And so much difficulty does he find to respire while in bed, that he is glad of the dawn, to rise up and get some relief. The chirping of the sparrow is sufficient to awake him.

9. All the daughters of music shall be brought low] The VOICE, that wonderful instrument, almost endless in the strength and variety of its tones, becomes feeble and squeaking; and merriment and pleasure are no more. The tones emitted are all of the querulous or mournful kind.

Verse 5. When they shall be afraid of that which is high] 10. Being so feeble, they are afraid to trust themselves to ascend steps, stairs, &c. without help. And when they look upwards, their heads turn giddy, and they are ready to fall.

11. Fears shall be in the way] They dare not walk out, lest they should meet some danger, which they have not strength to repel, nor agility to escape. A second childishness has taken place,—apprehensions, fears, terrors, and weakness.

12. The almond-tree shall flourish] יניאץ yenaats, not flourish, but fall off. The hair begins to change, first gray, then white: it having no longer that supply of nutritive juices which it once had, this animal vegetable withers, and falls off. The almond-tree, having white flowers, is a fit emblem of a hoary head; or, as Hasselquist says, who observed the trees in full flower in Judea, "like an old man with his white locks."

13. The grasshopper shall be a burden] Even such an inconsiderable thing as a locust, or a very small insect, shall be deemed burthensome; their strength is so exceedingly diminished. In cases of the gout, especially in old men, the shadow of a person passing by puts them to acute pain! how much less can they bear the smallest pressure! But probably the words refer to the man himself who bent at the loins, and his arms hanging down, exhibits some caricature of the animal in question. The poor grasshopper is become a burden to himself. Another interpretation has been given of the grasshopper: but I pass it by as impertinent and contemptible; such commentators appear as if they wished to render the text ridiculous.

14. Desire shall fail] Both relish and appetite for food, even the most delicate, that to which they were formerly so much attached, now fails. The teeth are no longer able to masticate the food, or are all dropped out; the stomach no longer able to digest any thing; and, as the body is no longer capable of receiving nourishment, appetite and relish necessarily fail.

15. Because man goeth to his long home] אל בית עולמו el beith ôlamo, "to the house of his age;" the place destined to receive him, when the whole race or course of life shall be finished; for עולם ôlam, takes in the whole course or duration of a thing: if applied to a dispensation, such as the LAW, it takes in its whole duration; to the life of man, it takes in the whole life; to time it includes its whole compass; to eternity, it expresses its infinite duration. So old age terminates the olam, the complete duration of human life: and when food is no longer desired, and nutrition ceases, the olam of man is terminated. My old MS. Bible translates it, the hous of his everlastingness.

16. He is just departing into the invisible world; and this is known by the mourners going about the streets, the long hollow groans and throat-rattlings which proceed from him; the sure prognostications of the extreme debility and speedy cessation of those essential animal functions next mentioned.

Verse 6. Or ever the silver cord be loosed] We have already had all the external evidences of old age, with all its attendant infirmities; next follow what takes place in the body, in order to produce what is called death, or the separation of body and soul.

1. The silver cord—The medulla oblongata, or spinal marrow, from which all the nerves proceed; as itself does from the brain. This is termed a cord from its exact similitude to one; and a silver cord from its colour, as it strikingly exhibits the silver gray. And from its preciousness, this is said to be loosed;—as the nervous system became a little before, and at the article of death, wholly debilitated. The last loosing being the fall of the under jaw, the invariable and never-failing evidence of immediate death; a few struggles more, and the soul is dismissed from its clay tenement.

2. The golden bowl be broken] The brain contained in the cranium or scull, and enveloped with the membranes called the dura and pia mater; here called a bowl from its resemblance to such a vessel, the container being put for the contained; and golden, because of its colour, and because of its exceeding preciousness, as has been noticed in the former case. Broken; be rendered unfit to perform its functions, neither supplying nor distributing any nervous energy.

3. Or the pitcher be broken at the fountain] The vena cava, which brings back the blood to the right ventricle of the heart, here called the fountain, המבוע ha-mebuâ, the spring whence the water gushes up; properly applied here to the heart, which by its systole and diastole (contraction and expansion) sends out, and afterward receives back the blood; for all the blood proceeds from, and returns back to the heart.

4. The wheel broken at the cistern] The great aorta, which receives the blood from the cistern, the left ventricle of the heart, and distributes it to the different parts of the system. These may be said, as in the case of the brain above, to be broken, i. e. rendered useless; when, through the loosening of the silver cord, the total relaxation of the nervous system, the heart becomes incapable of dilatation and contraction; so that the blood on its return to the right ventricle of the heart is not received, nor that already contained in the ventricles propelled into the great aorta. The wheel is used in allusion to the Asiatic wheels, by which they raise water from their wells and tanks, and deep cisterns, for domestic purposes, or to irrigate the grounds. Thus then the blood becomes stagnate, the lungs cease to respire, the blood is no longer oxidized, all motion voluntary and involuntary ceases, the body, the house of the immortal spirit, is no longer tenantable, and the soul takes its flight into the eternal world. The man D—I—E—S! This is expressed in the following verse:—

Verse 7. Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit shall return unto God]

5. Putrefaction and solution take place; the whole mass becomes decomposed, and in process of time is reduced to dust from which it was originally made; while the spirit, הרוח ha-ruach, that spirit, which God at first breathed into the nostrils of man, and he in consequence became a LIVING SOUL, an intelligent, rational, discoursing animal, returns to God who gave it. Here the wise man makes a most evident distinction between the body and the soul:—they are not the same;—they are not both matter. The body, which is matter, returns to dust, its original: but the spirit which is immaterial, returns to God. It is impossible that two natures can be more distinct, or more emphatically distinguished. The author of this book was not a materialist.

Thus ends this affecting, yet elegant and finished picture, of OLD AGE and DEATH.

It has often been remarked, that the circulation of the blood, which has been deemed a modern discovery by our countryman Dr. Harvey, in 1616, was known to Solomon, or whoever was the author of this book; the fountains, cisterns, pitcher, and wheels, giving sufficient countenance to the conclusion.

Verse 8. This affecting and minute description of old age and death is concluded by the author, with the same exclamation by which he began his book: O vanity of vanities, saith Koheleth; all is vanity. Now that man, the masterpiece of God's creation, the delegated sovereign of this lower world, is turned to dust, what is there stable or worthy of contemplation besides! All—ALL is VANITY!

Verse 9. Because the Preacher (Koheleth) was wise, he still taught the people knowledge] And in order to do this, he took good heed; considered what would be most useful. He set in order, collected and arranged many parables; probably alluding to the book over which we have already passed.

Verse 10. He sought to find out acceptable words] דברי חפץ dibrey chaphets, words of desire, words of will, the best, the most suitable words; those which the people could best understand. But these words were not such as might merely please the people; they were words of truth; such as came from God, and might lead them to Him.

Verse 11. The words of the wise] Doctrines of faith, illustrated by suitable language, are as nails fastened by the masters of assemblies, בעלי אספות baâley asuphoth, the master of collections, those who had made the best collections of this kind; the matter of which was of the most excellent nature: every saying sinking as deeply into the mind, by the as nails fastened by the masters of assemblies, which are given from one shepherd.

12 And further, by these, my son, be admonished: of making many books there is no end: and [a] much [b] study is a weariness of the flesh.

13 [c] Let us hear the conclusion of force of the truth contained in it, as a nail well pointed does into a board, when impelled by the hammer's force. These masters of collections have been supposed to be public persons appointed by the prince himself, the sole shepherd, to see that nothing was put into the people's hands but what would be profitable for them to read; and that, when any wise man gave public instructions, a good scribe sat by, to take down the words; and then the master examined what he had written, to see that it was upright, and that the words were doctrines of truth. These were something like our licensers of the press: but the existence of such is little more than conjecture.

After all, masters of assemblies may mean public teachers; that which was written, the oracles of God, out of which they instructed the people; the one Shepherd, God Almighty, from whom they received their authority and unction to preach the truth; and by the energy of whose Spirit the heavenly teaching was fastened in their hearts, as a well driven nail in a sound piece of wood.

Verse 12. And further, by these, my son, be admonished] Hear such teachers, and receive their admonitions; and do not receive the grace of God in vain.

Of making many books there is no end] Two thousand years have elapsed since this was written; and since that time some millions of treatises have been added on all kinds of subjects, to those which have gone before. The press is still groaning under and teeming with books, books innumerable; and no one subject is yet exhausted, notwithstanding all that has been written on it. And we who live in these latter times are no nearer an end, in the investigation of nature and its properties; of God, His attributes, His providence, His justice, and His mercy; of Man, his animal life, his mode of nutrition and existence, and his soul and its powers; of Jesus, and the redemption by Him; of eternity, and what it implies as exhibiting to us the pains of the cursed, and the glories of the blessed. Of several of these we know no more than they who have lived five thousand years before us: nor do we know any thing certainly by the endless books that have been published, except what bears the seal of the God of heaven, as published in that word which was declared by His Spirit.

And much study is a weariness of the flesh.] O how true is this! Let the trembling knees, the palsied hands, the darkened eyes, the aching heart, and the puzzled mind, of every real student declare! And should none be within reach more worthy of the name of student to consult, the writer of this work is a proof in point.

Verse 13. After all, the sum of the great business of human life is comprised in this short sentence, on which some millions of books have been already written.

Fear GOD, and keep His commandments.

1. Know that He is, and that He is a Rewarder of them that diligently seek Him. 2. Reverence Him; pay Him adoration. 3. Love Him that you may be happy.

Keep his commandments] They are contained in two words: 1. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart; 2. And thy neighbour as thyself. Blessed be God, much reading and much study, are not necessary to accomplish this, which is called כל האדם col ha-adam, the whole of Adam; the whole which God required of the first man and of all his posterity. But the Gospel of Jesus Christ must be understood to comprehend the full force of this short saying.

The word duty, added here by our translators, spoils, if not perverts, the sense.

The whole passage is rendered with great simplicity by Coverdale.

"The same preacher was not wyse alone: but taught the people knowledge also. He gave good hede, sought out the grounde, and set forth many parables. His diligence was to fynde out acceptable wordes, right scripture, and the wordes of trueth. For the wordes of the wyse are like prickes and nales that go thorow, wherewith men are kepte together: for they are geven of one Shepherd onely. Therefore bewarre (my sonne) that above these thou make thee not many and innumerable bookes, nor take dyverse doctrynes in hande to weery thy body withall.

"Let us heare the conclucion of all thinges: Feare God, and kepe His comaundementes, for that toucheth all men; for God shall judge all workes and secrete thinges, whether they be good or evell."

I shall give the same from my old MS. Bible.

And wan Ecclesiastes was most wiis he taght the peple, and told out what he had don, and enserchinge maade many parablis. He soght profitable wordis, and wrote most rigt sermons, and ful of trewth. INTRODUCTION

TO THE

CANTICLES,

OR

SONG OF SOLOMON.

THE book before us is called in the Hebrew שיר השירים SHIR HA-SHIRIM, The Song of Songs; or, An ode of the Odes. Which might be understood, an ode taken or selected from others of a similar kind; or an ode, the most excellent of all others, this being an idiom common to the Hebrew language; e. g. The God of gods, is the supreme God.—The Lord of lords, the supreme Lord.—The King of kings, the supreme King.—The heaven of heavens, the supreme or highest heavens. It may therefore be designed to express "a song of the utmost perfection; one of the best that existed, or had ever been penned." Perhaps the title may have a reference to the other poetical compositions of Solomon, which were no less than one thousand and five; and this was considered the most excellent of the whole, and the only one that remains, unless we suppose Solomon, with some of the Jews, to be author of Psalms lxxii. and cxxvii.: but this cannot be proved.

There have been some doubts concerning the author of this book. Some of the Rabbins supposed it to be the work of the prophet Isaiah: but this sentiment never gained much credit. Most have without hesitation attributed it to Solomon, whose name it bears: and if the book of Ecclesiastes be his, this will follow in course, as the style is exactly the same, allowing for the difference of the subject. Both books seem to have been written about the same time, and to have had the same Author.

This book, if written by Solomon, could not have been written in his old age, as some have supposed the book of Ecclesiastes to have been, which sentiment is I think sufficiently disproved; for we find that long before Solomon's old age he had three hundred wives, and seven hundred concubines: but at the time this Song was written, Solomon had only sixty wives and eighty concubines. And the Song most certainly celebrates a marriage; whether between Solomon and the daughter of Pharaoh, or between him and some Jewish princess, has not been fully agreed on among critics and commentators. It is most likely to have been a juvenile or comparatively juvenile production; and indeed the high and glowing colouring, and the strength of the images, are full proofs of this. Though Anacreon made amatory odes when he was bald-headed, yet neither he nor any one else, humanly speaking, could have made such odes as the Canticles, when stricken in years.

But to what denomination of writing do the Canticles belong? Are they mere Odes, or Idyls, or Pastorals; or are they an Epithalamium? Let us define these terms, and examine the Song of Solomon by them. 1. The ODE is generally understood to be a species of poetry containing sublime and important matter, always sung, or accompanied by the harp, or some proper musical instrument. 2. The IDYL implies a short poem, containing some adventure. 3. The PASTORAL contains what belongs to shepherds, and their occupations. 4. The EPITHALAMIUM is the congratulatory song, sung to a new married pair, wishing them abundant blessings, a numerous and happy offspring, &c. Strictly speaking, the book of Canticles falls under neither of these descriptions: it is rather a composition sui generis, and seems to partake more of the nature of what we call a MASK, than any thing else; an entertainment for the guests, which attended a marriage ceremony, with a dramatic cast throughout the whole, though the persons who speak and act are not formally introduced.

As to the persons chiefly concerned, it is generally believed that Solomon and Pharaoh's daughter are the bridegroom and bride; with their proper attendants, viz. companions of the bridegroom, and companions of the bride, with certain mutes, who only appear or are mentioned by others, without taking any particular part in the transactions.

But it is much more easy to satisfy oneself on the species of composition, to which this book belongs, than to the meaning of the book itself. Is it to be understood in the obvious manner in which it presents itself? And are Solomon and his bride, their friends and companions, to be considered as mere dramatis personæ? Or are they typical or representative persons? Does this marriage represent a celestial union? Do the speeches of each contain Divine doctrines? Are the metaphors taken from earthly things to be understood of spiritual matters? In a word, does Solomon here represent Jesus Christ? The daughter of Pharaoh the Christian church? Or, according to some Roman Catholics, the Virgin Mary? Are watchmen, vineyard-keepers, shepherds, &c. the ministers of the Gospel? Wine and various fruits, the influence and graces of the Divine Spirit? &c. &c.—How multitudinous and positive are the affirmative answers to these questions! And yet, though the many agree in the general principle, how various their expositions of the different parts of the piece! And where, all this time, is the proof that the principle is not misunderstood? As to conjectures they are as uncertain as they are endless; and what one pious or learned man may think to be the meaning, is no proof to any other that he should make up his mind in the same way.

Let us for a moment consider the different opinions held on this book, without entering into the discussion of their propriety or impropriety. They are the following:—

I. It is a plain Epithalamium on the marriage of Solomon with the daughter of Pharaoh, king of Egypt; and is to be understood in no other way.

II. It is an allegory relative to the conduct of God towards the Hebrews, in bringing them out of Egypt through the wilderness to the Promised Land.

III. It is intended to represent the incarnation of Jesus Christ, or His marriage with human nature, in reference to its redemption.

IV. It represents Christ's love to the church, or elected souls, and their love to Him.

V. It is an allegorical poem on the glories of Jesus Christ and the Virgin Mary.

VI. It is a collection of sacred idyls; the spiritual meaning of which is not agreed on.

Now each of these opinions has its powerful supporters, and each of these has reasons to offer for the support of the opinion which he espouses; and nothing but a direct revelation from God can show us which of these opinions is the correct one, or whether any of them be correct.

The antiquity of an opinion, if that be not founded on a revelation from God, is no evidence of its truth: for there are many ungodly opinions which are more than a thousand years old. And as to great men, and great names, we find them enrolled and arranged on each side of all controversies. It may be asked, what does Christ or his apostles say of it?

1. If Jesus Christ or any of his apostles had referred to it as an allegory, and told us the subject which it pointed out, the matter would have been plain: we should then have had data, and had only to proceed in the way of elucidation. But we find nothing of this in the New-Testament.

2. If they had referred to it as an allegory, without intimating the meaning; then we should be justified in searching every where for that meaning; and conjecture itself would have been legal, till we had arrived at some self-testifying issue.

3. If they had referred to it at all, in connexion with spiritual subjects, then we should have at once seen that it was to be spiritually understood; and, comparing spiritual things with spiritual, we must have humbly sought for its spiritual interpretation.

4. Had the Supreme Being been introduced, or referred to in any of His essential attributes, or by any of the names which He has been pleased to assume in His revelations to men, we should have then seen, that the writer was a spiritual man, and wrote probably in reference to a spiritual end; and, that we should pass by or through his letter, in order to get to the spirit concealed under it. But none of these things appear in this book: the name of God is not found in it; nor is it quoted in any part of the New-Testament. As to certain references which its allegorical expositors suppose are made to it, either in the Gospels, Epistles, or Apocalypse, they are not express, and do not, by any thing in or connected with them, appear unequivocally to point out this book. And, after all that has been said, I am fully of opinion, it is not once referred to in the New-Testament. But this is no proof of its not being canonical; as there are other books, on which there is no doubt, that are in the same predicament. But still, if it refer so distinctly to Christ and His church, as some suppose, it certainly would not have been passed over by both evangelists and apostles without pointed and especial notice.

From all this, it will appear to the intelligent Reader, that the spiritual meaning of this book cannot easily be made out:—1. Because we do not know that it is an allegory. 2. If one, the principles on which such allegory is to be explained, do no where appear.

Who then, are we to follow in the interpretation of this very singular book? The Targumist, who applies it to God and the Hebrews, in their journeyings from Egypt to the Promised Land? Origen, who made it a Christian allegory? Apponius, who spiritualized it? Gregory the Great, who in the main copied them? The good man who in 1717, at Paris, so illustrated it as "to induce men to devote themselves to Jesus Christ and the Virgin Mary?" Mr. Durham, Mr. Robotham, Mr. Ainsworth, Mr. Romaine, and Dr. Gill, who endeavour to prove that it concerns Christ and the elect? Or Mr. Harmer and others, who acknowledge it to be an inimitable composition, and to be understood only of Solomon and Pharaoh's daughter? Or, finally, Dr. Mason Goode, who considers it a collection of Sacred idyls, the spiritual interpretation of which is not agreed on?

I had for a long time hesitated whether I should say any thing on this book; not because I did not think I understood its chief design and general meaning, for of this I really have no doubt; but because I did not understand it as a spiritual allegory, representing the loves of Christ and His church. I must own, I see no indubitable ground for this opinion. And is it of no moment whether the doctrines drawn from it, by those who allegorize and spiritualize it, be indubitably founded in it or not? The doctrines may be true in themselves, (which is indeed more than can be said of those of most of its interpreters:) but is it not a very solemn, and indeed awful thing to say, this is the voice of Christ to His church. This is the voice of the church to Christ, &c. &c. &c. when there is no proof from God, nor from any other portion of His word, that these things are so!

It is much better therefore, if explained or illustrated at all, to take it in its literal meaning, and explain it in its general sense. I say general sense; because there are many passages in it which should not be explained, if taken literally, the references being too delicate; and Eastern phraseology on such subjects is too vivid for European imaginations. Let any sensible pious medical man read over this book; and, if at all acquainted with Asiatic phraseology, say whether it would be proper, even in medical language, to explain all the descriptions and allusions in this poem.

After what I have said on the difficulty of interpreting this book in a spiritual way, it would not be fair to withhold from the Reader the general arguments on which the theory of its allegorical meaning is founded. The principal part of the commentators on this book, especially those who have made it their separate study, have in general taken for granted, that their mode of interpretation is incontrovertible; and have proceeded to spiritualize every figure, and every verse, as if they had a Divine warrant for all they have said. Their conduct is dangerous; and the result of their well-intentioned labours has been of very little service to the cause of Christianity in general, or to the interests of true morality in particular. By their mode of interpretation an undignified, not to say mean and carnal, language has been propagated among many well-meaning religious people, that has associated itself too much with selfish and animal affections, and created feelings that accorded little with the dignified spirituality of the religion of the Lord Jesus. I speak not from report; I speak from observation and experience, and observation not hastily made. The conviction on my mind, and the conclusion to which I have conscientiously arrived, are the result of frequent examination, careful reading, and close thinking at intervals, for nearly fifty years: and, however I may be blamed by some, and pitied by others, I must say, and I say it as fearlessly as I do conscientiously, that in this inimitably fine elegant Hebrew ode I see nothing of Christ and His church, and nothing that appears to have been intended to be thus understood; and nothing if applied in this way that, per se, can promote the interests of vital godliness; or cause the simple and sincere not to know Christ after the flesh. Here I conscientiously stand:—May God help me!

The most rational view of the subject, that I have seen, is that taken by Mr. Harmer, who has indeed detailed and strengthened the arguments of his predecessors, who have declared for the spiritual meaning. In his outlines of a comment upon Solomon's Song, he supposes that the song refers to Solomon's marriage with the daughter of Pharaoh; and that he had a Jewish queen, who is frequently referred to in the work; and that, unless this be allowed, there are several important passages in the book that cannot be understood; and indeed it is on this principle that he finds his chief ground for a spiritual and allegorical interpretation.

"Whatever was the intention of God," says he, "in bringing about this marriage, and in causing it to be celebrated in such an extraordinary manner, by songs that were directed to be placed among the Sacred Writings, it is certain there never was any resemblance more striking between the circumstances and transactions of any of the remarkable personages of the Old Testament and those of Messiah, than the likeness we may observe between Solomon marrying a Gentile princess, and making her equal in honour and privileges with his former Jewish queen, and in her being frequently mentioned afterward in history, while the other is passed over in total silence; and the conduct of the Messiah towards the Gentile and Jewish churches.

"The two remarkable things in the conduct of the Messiah towards the two churches are, the making the Gentiles fellow-heirs of the same body and partakers of the promises, without any difference; and the giving up to neglect the Jewish church, while that of the Gentiles has long flourished in great honour, and been the subject of many a history. St. Paul takes notice of both these circumstances with particular solemnity: of the first, in the third chapter of Ephesians, and elsewhere; of the other, in the eleventh chapter of Romans. They are points, then, that deserve great attention.

"They are both called mysteries, (Rom. xi. 25. Eph. iii. 3.) that is, things that had been concealed aforetime: but it by no means follows that there were no shadowy representations of these events in the preceding ages; only that they were not clearly and expressly revealed.

"Kingdoms and cities are frequently spoken of in Holy Writ as women. Sacred as well as secular bodies of men are represented under that image. Universal church is spoken of under the notion of a bride, and the Messiah as her Husband, Eph. v. The two churches of Jews and Gentiles, or the church under the Mosaic dispensation, and the church freed from those ceremonies, are represented as two women, (the one formerly treated as the principal wife, and the second as having been for a long time neglected but afterward producing a much more numerous issue than the first) by the prophet Isaiah in his fifty fourth chapter according to the explanation St. Paul has given of that passage in Gal. iv. Particular churches are mentioned after the same manner. So, concerning the church at Corinth, St. Paul says, I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you, as a chaste virgin to Christ. 2 Cor. xi. 2.

"Since then it is common for the Scriptures to represent the church of God under the notion of a woman, and the Messiah under that of a Husband; since the two bodies of men, that which worshipped God according to the Mosaic rites, and that which observed them not, are compared to two women, and since the circumstances of these two churches are such as I have given an account of from St. Paul; it must be acknowledged that there is a lively resemblance betwixt Solomon's espousing the Egyptian princess, and the Messiah's admitting the Gentiles to equal privileges with the Jews, whether it was or was not designed by God as an emblem and type of it: celebrated by His prophets for this cause, in holy songs; and those songs preserved with care to this day among writings of the most sacred kind on that account."

This is the whole of Mr. Harmer's argument; see his Outlines, page 74—77. And what is proved by it? Nothing in reference to this book. We know that the Jewish people, not the church exclusively, are represented under the notion of a woman afflicted, and a wife unfaithful, divorced, and forsaken, &c. And that the Corinthians were represented under the notion of a chaste virgin espoused to Christ. And we know that all this was done to show that as the marriage union was the closest, strictest, and most sacred, among men; the union of the soul to God, and its connexion with Him, might be most fitly represented by that union; and unfaithfulness to Him, by infidelity in the other case. But what has this to do with the Canticles? Where is the intimation that Solomon represents Christ, Pharaoh's daughter the church of the Gentiles, and the Jewish queen the church of the Israelites? No where. Why then assume the thing that should be proved; and then build doctrines on it, and draw inferences from it, as if the assumption had been demonstrated?

Were this mode of interpretation to be applied to the Scriptures in general, (and why not, if legitimate here,) in what a state would religion soon be? Who could see any thing certain, determinate, and fixed, in the meaning of the Divine Oracles, when fancy and imagination must be the standard of interpreters? God has not left His word to man's will in this way.

Every attempt, however well-intentioned, to revive this thriftless, not to say dangerous, Origenian method of seducing the Scriptures to particular creeds and purposes, should be regarded with jealousy; and nothing received as the doctrine of the Lord but that which may be derived from those plain words of the Most High, which lie most on a level with the capacities of mankind. Allegory, metaphor, and figures in general, where the design is clearly indicated, which is the case with all those employed by the Sacred Writers, may come in to illustrate and more forcibly to apply Divine truth: but to extort celestial meanings from a whole book, where no such indication is given, is most certainly not the way to arrive at the knowledge of the true God, and Jesus Christ whom He has sent.

As the Jewish marriages were celebrated for seven days, it has been often observed that this Song divides itself into seven periods, and describes the transactions of each.

I. The FIRST chapter represents the bridegroom and bride as a shepherd and shepherdess. The bride asks her spouse where he takes his flocks at noon, to preserve them from the excessive heat, lest she, in seeking him, should go astray into some strange pastures. After this day, the first night succeeds, which is pointed out chap. ii. 4, 5, 6. The bridegroom rises early in the morning, leaves the bride asleep, and goes hastily to the fields to his necessary occupations, ver. 7.

II. The SECOND night is pointed out chap. ii. ver. 8, 9, &c. The bridegroom comes to the window of his spouse. She opens it, and he enters; and on the morrow he returns to the fields to his flocks, ver. 17.

III. The THIRD night, the bridegroom having delayed his coming, the bride being uneasy, arises from her bed, and goes out and inquires of the guards of the city, whether they had seen her beloved! She had not gone far from them till she met with him; she conducts him to her apartment, chap. iii. ver. 1—4. Very early in the morning, he retires to the country, leaving the bride asleep, ver. 5. Afterward she arises, and goes also to the fields, ver. 6.

The FOURTH chapter is an eulogium on the bride's beauty; and seems to be a conversation between the parties in the country. She invites the bridegroom to visit her, chap. v. ver. 1. He leaves his friends, with whom he was feasting, and comes to the door of his spouse, ver. 2. She hesitating to let him in, he withdraws and goes to his garden. The bride follows: but, not knowing whither he was retired, asks the guards of the city, by whom she is maltreated; thence goes to the daughters of Jerusalem, and inquires of them, ver. 3, &c. At last she meets with him, chap. vi. ver. 1, &c. and having spent some time with him returns.

IV. Chapter vi. 9. points out the FOURTH night of the marriage.

V. The FIFTH night is pointed out, chap. vii. 1, &c. The bridegroom gives his bride nearly the same praise and commendations which he had received from her in the preceding chapters; and early in the morning they go out together to the fields, ver. 11—13.

VI. The SIXTH night they pass at a village in the country, at the house of a person who is termed the bride's mother, chap. vii. 13. viii. 1—3. She invites her spouse thither, and promises to regale him with excellent fruits and choice wine; and early in the morning the bridegroom arises, leaves the bride asleep as formerly, and retires to the country, chap. viii. 4.

VII. The SEVENTH night is passed in the gardens.—From chap. viii. 5. we have a series of dialogues between the bride and bridegroom. In the morning the bridegroom, having perceived that they were overheard, begs the bride to permit him to retire. She assents, ver. 13, 14, and exhorts him to make haste and be like a roe or a young hart on the mountains of spices.

This is the division, which is, in the main, most followed, especially by the best critics. But besides this, several others have been proposed: and the Reader, who wishes to enter more particularly into the subject, may consult Bishop Bossuet, Calmet, and Bishop Lowth. For my own part I doubt the propriety of this technical arrangement, and do not think that any thing of the kind was intended by the author. The division is not obvious; and therefore, in my apprehension, not natural. Of Dr. Goode's division I shall speak below.

The dramatis personæ have been marked by some of the ancient interpreters, and the different portions of the whole song appointed to several persons who are specified: and this division served for the basis of a Commentary. The most regular division of this kind with which I have met is in a MS. of my own; the Bible which I have often quoted in my Comment.

This attributed by some to Wiclif, and by others to an older translator, I have carefully transcribed, with all the distinction of parts and speeches. The translation is very simple; and in many cases is much more faithful to the meaning of the Hebrew text, though in the main taken from the Vulgate, than our own Version. It is a great curiosity, and certainly was never before printed; and is a fine specimen of our mother tongue as spoken in these countries in M.CCCLX. which may be about the date of this translation. On the common mode of interpretation I venture to assert that my Readers will understand this Song ten times better from this translation and its rubricks, than they have ever done from all the forms in which it has been presented to them, to the present time. For this addition, I anticipate the thanks of every intelligent Reader. The indications of the speakers printed here in black letter are all rubrick, in the beautiful original. I have added a short glossary on some of the more difficult or obsolete words, which will assist the less experienced Reader, under whose notice such remote specimens of his own tongue seldom fall.

Between twenty and thirty years ago I received from India a part of the Gitagovinda, or Songs of Jayadeva. This poet, the finest lyric poet of India, flourished before the Christian æra; and the poem above, which makes the tenth book of the Bhagavet, was written professedly to celebrate the loves of Chrishna and Rhada, or the reciprocal attraction between the divine goodness and the human soul. The author leaves us in no doubt concerning the design of this little pastoral drama; for in the conclusion he thus speaks:—"Whatever is delightful in the modes of music, whatever is DIVINE in MEDITATIONS on VISHNU, whatever is exquisite in the sweet art of love, whatever is graceful in the fine strains of poetry; all that, let the happy and wise learn from the Songs of Jayadeva, whose soul is united with the foot of Narayan." Vishnu and Narayan are epithets of Crishna, or the supreme incarnated god of the Hindoos. I found the general phraseology of this work, and its imagery as well as its subject, to correspond so much with those of the Canticles, that in the short Notes which I wrote on this book in 1798, I proposed the illustration of many of its passages from the Gitagovinda; and was pleased to find, several years after, that my view of the subject had been confirmed by that encyclopædia of learning and science, Dr. Mason Goode, who in his translation of the Song of Songs, with critical notes, published 1803, 8vo. has illustrated many passages from the Gitagovinda.

After having made a selection from this ancient poet for the illustration of the Canticles, I changed in some measure my purpose, and determined to give the whole work, and leave it to my Readers to apply those passages which they might think best calculated to throw light upon a book which professedly has the wisest of men for its author, and according to the opinion of many, the most important doctrines of the Christian religion for its subject. I have not followed the metrical version which I received from India, but rather the prose translation of Sir William Jones; dividing it into parts and verses, after the model of the metrical version above-mentioned; and adding verbal interpretations of the principal proper names and difficult terms which are contained in the work.

Having been long convinced that the Chaldee Targum is at once the oldest and most valuable comment upon this book, I have also added this. And here I might say that I have not only followed my own judgment, but that also of a very learned divine, Dr. John Gill, who having preached one hundred and twenty-two sermons on the Song of Solomon, to the Baptist Congregation at Horsleydown, near London, embodied them all in what he calls "An Exposition" of this book, to which he added a translation of the Targum, with short explanatory notes, fol. 1728. This was, however, suppressed in all the later editions of this exposition; but why, I cannot tell. This piece I give to my Readers, and for the same reasons alleged by this very learned and excellent man himself:—

"At the end of this Exposition I have given," says he, "a version of the Targum or Chaldee paraphrase upon the whole book, with some notes thereon, induced hereunto by the following reasons:

"First, to gratify the curiosity of some who, observing frequent mention and use made of it in my Exposition, might be desirous of perusing the whole.

"Secondly, for the profitableness thereof. Our learned countryman Mr. Broughton says, this paraphrase is worth our study both for delight and profit. It expounds several passages of Scripture, and some in the New Testament, which I have directed to in my notes upon it; and I am persuaded that the writings of the Jews, the ancient Jews especially, would give us much light into the phraseology and sense of abundance of texts in the New Testament."

It is certain that this paraphrase does very often direct us, or at least confirm us, as to the persons speaking in this Song, to know which is of very great use in the explication of it. I shall add another reason: I believe the Book of Canticles refers more to the Jewish than to the Christian church, and I think the Targumist has made a more rational use of it than any of his successors.

I have thus placed within the reach of all my Readers THREE especial helps towards a good understanding of this book.—1. The ancient English translation with its curious dramatis personæ. 2. The Gitagovinda, a most curious poem of the spiritual and allegorical kind. 3. The Chaldee Targum, the oldest comment on this Song. And I add my prayers, May God guide the Reader into all truth through Christ Jesus. Amen.

On this part of the subject it would be almost criminal not to mention, still more particularly, Dr. Mason Goode's translation and notes on the Song of Songs. He has done much to elucidate its phraseology, and his notes are a treasury of critical learning. He considers the Book to be a collection of Sacred Idyls, twelve in number; and his division is as follows:—

IDYL I.

Royal Bride,	Chap. I. Verses 2, 3, 4.
Attendant Virgins,	—— Part of the fourth verse, beginning, "We will exult."
Royal Bride,	—— Verses 5, 6, 7.
Attendant Virgins,	—— —— 8.

Virgins,	Chap. VIII. Verse 5.
King Solomon,	—— Part of verse 5, beginning "I excited thee."
Royal Bride,	—— Verse 6.
King Solomon,	—— —— 7.

IDYL XII.

Royal Bride,	Chap. VIII. Verse 8.
King Solomon,	—— —— 9.
Royal Bride,	—— —— 10, 11, 12.
King Solomon,	—— —— 13.
Royal Bride,	—— —— 14.

There have been various opinions on this division; and many will still think that much remains yet to be done. Dr. Goode considers it a spiritual allegory: but he does not attempt a spiritual application of any part of it. This perhaps is no mean proof of his good sense and judgment. I have acted in the same way, though not so convinced of its spirituality as Dr. Goode appears to be. If I took it up in this way, I should explain it according to my own creed, as others have done according to theirs; and could I lay it down as a maxim, that it is to be spiritually interpreted, in reference to the Christian Revelation, I might soon show my Reader that it points out the infinite love of God to every human soul, in the incarnation of Christ; the means He uses to bring all mankind to an acquaintance with Himself; the redemption of true believers from all unrighteousness through the inspiration of God's Holy Spirit; their consequent holy life and godly conversation; the calling of the Gentiles; the restoration of the Jews; and the final judgment! And my comment on this plan would have just as solid a foundation as those of my predecessors, from Origen to the present day.

To conclude, I advise all young ministers to avoid preaching on Solomon's Song. If they take a text out of it, to proclaim salvation to lost sinners; they must borrow their doctrines from other portions of Scripture, where all is plain and pointed. And why then leave such, and go out of their way to find allegorical meanings, taking a whole book by storm, and leaving the word of God to serve tables!

It is curious to see the manner in which many preachers and commentators attempt to expound this Book. They first assume that the book refers to Christ and His Church; His union with human nature; His adoption of the Gentiles; and his everlasting love to elect souls, gathered out of both people: then take the words bride, bridegroom, spouse, love, watchmen, shepherds, tents, door, lock, &c. &c. and finding some words either similar or parallel, in other parts of the Sacred Writings, which have there an allegorical meaning, contend that those here are to be similarly understood; and what is spoken of those apply to these; and thus, in fact, are explaining other passages in Scripture their own way, while professing to explain the Canticles! What eminent talents, precious time, great pains and industry, have been wasted in this way! One eminent scholar preaches to his congregation one hundred and twenty-two sermons upon the Song of Solomon; while all this time the evangelists and apostles have been comparatively forgotten, but as far as they may be referred to in illustration of the particular creed which such writers and preachers found on this Book. How can they account to God for so much time spent on a tract, which requires all their ingenuity and skill to make edifying, even on their own plan; a text of which they are not permitted to allege, in controversy, to prove the truth of any disputed doctrine! This, however, is not the fault of any particular class of ministers exclusively; several of all classes, though of some more than of others, have been found, less or more labouring at this thriftless craft. Some having preached on it, during the whole of their ministry, have carried it, in a certain way, beyond the grave. An aged minister once told me, in a very solemn manner, that as God had been exceedingly merciful to him in saving his soul, and putting him in the ministry, thus accounting him faithful, he hoped that when called to the church above, if any funeral-sermon were preached for him, it should be from Canticles, chap. i. ver. 8. Go thy way forth by the footsteps of the flock, and feed thy kids beside the shepherds' tents. That he could have applied these words to his own state, and the use which should be made of his life and death, I have no doubt: but who, from this text, would have chosen to pronounce the funeral oration.

I repeat it, and I wish to be heard by young ministers in particular; take the plainest texts, when you attempt to convince men of sin, and build up believers on their most holy faith; and thus show rather your love for their souls, than your dexterity in finding out spiritual meanings for obscure passages, on the true signification of which few either among the learned or pious are agreed.

I now, according to my promise, lay before my readers a transcript from my own MS. Bible, which is most probably the first translation of this Song, that was ever made into the English language. I have added for the sake of reference the figures for the present division into verses, in the margin: these are not in the MS. The dramatis personæ, here in black letter, are in red in the MS. The orthography is scrupulously followed.

THE

[CAREFULLY TRANSCRIBED FROM A MS. OF THE FOURTEENTH CENTURY IN THE EDITOR'S POSSESSION.]

Here begynnyth the Boke that is clepid Songis of Songis, of the Bridulis of Crist and of the Chirche.

10. a fer loking thurg the latises. Loo my lemman spekith to me: Riis go thou my leef,
11. my culver my schappli and cum. Now forsothe wynter passide, wedir geed fro, and
12. is gon awei. Floures appeereden in oure lond—tyme of cutting is cummen; the voice
13. of the turtur is herd in oure londe. The fiige tree brogt forth his first fiigs: The vynes flouryng geven their smell.

The voice of Crist to the Chirche.

14. Riis, go my leef, my schaply and cum thou my culver, in the hoolis of the stoon wal. Schewe thou to me thi face, and soun thi voice in my eris; thi voice forsoth is sweet, and thi face seemli.

The voice of Crist to the Chirche agein herytikis.

15. Take gee to us litil foxis that distruyen vynes: for oure vyne flourede.

The voice of the Chirche, of Crist.

16. My loved to me, and I to him, that is fed among lilies, to the tyme that the daye
17. springe, and schadewis ben bowed in. Turne agein; liic be thou O my lemman to a capret, and to the hert, calf of hertis, upon the mounteynes of Bether.

CAP. III.

The voice of the Chirche gedred togyder of Gentilis.

1. In my litil bed bi nigtis, I sougt whom lovede my soule: I sogte him, and I founde not.
2. I schal riisen and gon about the cytee, by tounes and streetis: I schal sechen whom loveth my soule. I sogt him and found not. There founden me the wacheris that kepen the cytee.

The Chirche seith of Crist, to the Apostlis.

4. Wheyther whom loveth my soule, gee seegen? A litil whann I hadde passid hem, I foond whom lovith my soule; I heeld him and I schal not leven to the tyme that I

The voice of Crist, of the Chirche.

5. I adjure gou ge dogtris of Jerusalim, by capretis and hertis of feeldis, ne reire gee, ne make gee my leef to waken to the tyme that sche wille.

The Synagoge, of the Chirche.

6. What is sche this that stiegith up by desert, as a litil gerde of smoke of the swote spyces of mirre and of cense, and of al pymentarie poudre?

The voice of the Chirche, of Crist.

7. Loo the litil bed of Salomon; sixti stronge men compassen, of the most strong men of
8. Israel; the whiche alle ben holdinge swerdis; and to bataile best tagt. Of eche oon the swerd upon his hip, for the nigt dredis.

Of Crist, and of the Chirche chosen of Gentilis.

9. A chaier king Salomon maad to him of the
10. trees of Liban. His pileers, he maade sylveren; the lenyng place, golden; the steiging up, purpure; the myddis he enournede with charite, for the dogteris of Jerusalem.

The voice of the Chirche, of Crist.

11. Goth out and seeth gee dogtris of Syon, Kyng Salomon, in the dyademe in the whiche crowned him his modir, in the dai of spousing of him; and in the dai of gladnesse of his herte.

CAP. IV.

The voice of Crist to the Chirche.

1. Hou fair art thou my leef, hou fair ert thou! Thyn eegen of culveris, with out it that with ine forth is hid. Thin heris as the flockis of Got, that steigiden up fro the hill of Galaad.
2. Thi teeth as the flockis of clipped scheep that steigeden up fro the wasching place. Alle with double lombis in the wombe; and

5. strong men. Thi two tetis as two yunge capretis twynglingis of the capret, that ben
6. fed in lilies: to the tyme that the day brethe out, and the schadewis ben in bowid. I schal gou to the mount of mirre, and to the
7. hill of cens. Al fair thou art my leef, and
8. wemm is not in thee. Cumm thou fro Libane my spouse, cumm fro Liban; cum thou schalt ben crowned fro the heued of Amana; fro the frount of Sannir, and of Ermon: fro the couchis liouns, and the hill of Paradise.
9. Thou hast woundid myn herte myn suster, my spouse, thou hast woundide myn herte in oon of thin eegen: and in oon here of thi
10. neck. Hou fair ben thi tetis my suster, my spouse, fairer ben thi tetis than wyne: and the smell of thin oynmentis, over alle spices.
11. A dropping honycomb thi lippis, spouse: honey and mylc undir thi tunge; and the smell of thi clothing is, as the smell of cens.
12. A closid gardyn my suster, spouse; a closid
13. gardyn, a welle selid. Thyn out sendingis is paradis of paumgarnetis: with thi fruytis
14. of applis. Of cypre tree with narde; and narde with safrun, and fystula and canel, with alle the trees of Liban, mirre and
15. aloes, with alle the first oynmentis. The welle of gardynes, the pit of lyvyng wateris that flowen with burre fro Liban. Riis North, and cum South, blow thurg my gardyn, and thei schul flowen swote spyces of it.

CAP. V.

The Chirche seith of Crist.

1. Cum my leef into his gardyn; and ete he the fruyt of his applis.

Crist seith to the Chirche.

1. Cum into my gardyn, my sistir, my spouse; I have gadered my mirre with my swote spices; I eete myn hony comb with myn hony. I dranke my wyne with my mylc.

The voice of the Chirche, of Crist.

The voice of my Lemman knockyng, open thou to me my sustir, my leef, my culver, my unwemmyd, for my heued is full of dewe, and my temple heris of the droopis of nigtis.
3. I spoylide me my coote; hou schal I be clothid it? I waschide my feet, hou schal I
4. befoulen hem? My lemman putte his hond bi the hool; my wombe inwardly trembled
5. at the touching of him. I rose that I scholde openen to my lemman. My hondis droppiden mirre; and my fingris ful of best
6. proved mirre. The lacche of my dore, I opened to my lemman; and he hadde bowid asyde and passide. My soule is moltyn as my lemman spac. I sogte and founde not him. I clepid and he answerd not to me.
7. There founden me keperis that gon about the cytee. Thei smyten me, and woundiden me; takin my mantill the keperis of the
8. wallis. I adjure gou ye dogtris of Jerusalem, gif gee schul fynden my lemman that gee telle to him, for I languisch for love.

The voice of freendis seith to the Chirche.

9. Whiche is thi lemman of the loved, O thou most fair of wymmen? Whiche is thi lemman of the loved? Forsoth thou hast adjured us.

The voice of the Chirche of Crist seith to the freendis.

10. My lemman whiit and roodi chosen of
11. thousandis. His heued, best gold; his her as bunchis of palmys, thick leved blac as a
12. crowe. His eegen as culveris upon litil ryvers. Of wateris that ben waschid with mylk; and sitte by the most full flowing of
13. wateris. The cheekis of litil flouris of swote spices plaunted of pimentaries. His lippis
14. dropping the first myrre; the hondis of him able to turnen about, golden and full of jacynctis. His wombe is yvren depertid by

16. of Lyban, and chosen as of cedre. The throot of him most swote; and he al desirable. Siche is my loved, and this is my lemman, gee dogtris of Jerusalem.

CAP. VI.

The voice of holi soulis of the Chirche.

1. Whider grede awei thi lemman? O thou most fair of wymmen? Whither bowiden doun thi leef, and we schul sechen him with thee?

The voice of the Chirche, of Crist.

2. My leef went doun into his gardyne to the floore of swote spices: that there he fed in
3. the gardynes, and lilies he gadired. I tomy leef, and my self, and my leef to me, that is fed among lilies.

The voice of Crist to the Chirche.

4. Fair thou art my leef; swote and fair as Jerusalem; ferful as the scheltrum of tentis
5. ordeyned. Turne awei thin eegen fro me; for thei maden me to fleen awei. Thin heris as the flockis of sche got, that apeereden fro Galaad. Thi teeth as a floc of
6. scheep that steigeden up fro the wasching place; al with double fruyt of wombe and
7. bareyn there is not in hem. As the rynde of powmgarnet; so thi cheekis without thin
8. hid thingis. Sixty ben queenes, and eigty ben secundane wiives; and of yunge waxe wym-
9. men there is no noumbre. Oon is my culver, my perfite: oon is to hir modir, chosen of hir modir, chosen of hir that gat hir. There seegen hir the dogtris of Syon, and most blisful preisiden hir: the queenes and
10. secundarie wiives preisiden hir. What is sche this that goth forth as the morewtide, riising fair as the mone, chosen as the sunne; ferful as of tentis scheltrun ordeyned.

The voice of the Chirche, of the Synagoge.

11. I wente doun into my gardyne that I schulde seen the applis of valeys; and beholden gif the vynes hadden flouride, and the poum-

6. joyned to watir pipis. Hou faire thou art, and hou seemli thou most derworthe in de-
7. licis? Thi stature is lickened to a palme tree; and thi tetis to clusteris.

Crist, of the holi crosse seith.

8. I seide I schal steigen into a palme tree; and I schal taken the fruytis of it.

The voice of Crist to the Chirche.

And thi tetis schul ben as the clusteris of a vyne, and the smel of thi mouth as the smel of applis; and thi throot as best wyne.

The Chirche seith of Crist.

9. Worthi to my leef to drinken; to the lippis,
10. and to the teeth of him to chewen. I to my leef and to me the turnynge of him.

The voice of the Chirche to Crist.

CAP. VIII.

The voice of Patriarkis, of Crist.

1. Who to me gevith thee my brother, souking the tetis of my modir, that I fynde thee aloon without forth and kysse thee, and
2. now, me, no man dispises. I schal taken thee and leiden into the hous of my modir, and into the bed place of hir that gat me. There thou schalt tecken me, and I schal geven to thee drinken of spycid wyne, and
3. of the must of my poumgarnetis. The left hond of him undir my heued, and the rigt hond of him schal clippen me.

The voice of Crist, of the Chirche.

4. I adjure you, gee dogtris of Jerusalem, ne rere gee, ne makith to wake my leef, to the tyme that sche will.

The voice of the Synagoge, of the Chirche.

5. What is sche this that steigith up fro desert, flowing delices, fast clevyng upon hir leef?

The voice of Crist to the Synagoge, of the holi Crosse.

Undir an apple tree I rered thee; there schent is thi modir: there defoulid is sche
6. that gat thee. Putte me as a brooche upon thi herte; putte me as a brooche upon thin arme; for strong as deth, love: hard as helle, gelousnesse: the lampis of it, the
7. lampis of fiir: and of flammes. Many wateris schal not mown quenchen oute charite: ne floodis schal not throwen it doun. Gif a man gif al the substaunce of his hous for love, as nogt he dispisith it.

The voice of Crist, to the lynage of holi Chirche.

Ver.

8. Our sustir a litil child; and tetis sche hath not. What schal we done to oure sustir, in the day whann sche is to be spoken to?
9. Gif a wal she is, bilden we upon it sylveren pynnaclis. Gif a dore sche is, joyn we it with cedre tables.

The voice of the Chirche answeeringe.

10. I, a wal; and my tetis as a tour; sythen I am maad be fore thee as pese receyvynge.

The Synagoge of the Chirche seith.

11. Vyne sche was to pesyble, in hir that hath peplis; sche toke it to the keperis: a man takith awei for the fruyte of it, a thousand sylveren platis.

Crist to the Chirche seith.

12. My vyne before me is; a thousand thi pesiblis; and two hundrith to hem that kepen
13. the fruytis of it. The whiche dwellest in gardyness freendis herkenen thee: make me to heeren thi voice.

The voice of the Chirche to Crist.

14. Flee thou my leef, be thou lickened to a capret, and to an hert, calf of hertis, upon the mounteynes of swote spices.

NOTES ON CHAP. I.

Verse 1. The song of songs] A song of peculiar excellence.—See the Introduction. The Rabbins consider this superior to all songs: Ten songs, says the Targum, have been sung: but this excels them all. 1. The first was sung by Adam when his sin was pardoned.—2. The second was sung by Moses and the Israelites at the Red Sea.—3. The third was sung by the Israelites when they drank of the rock in the wilderness.—4. The fourth was sung by Moses when summoned to depart from this world.—5. The fifth was sung by Joshua when the sun and moon stood still.—6. The sixth was sung by Deborah and Barak after the defeat of Sisera.—7. The seventh was sung by Hannah when the Lord promised her a son.—8. The eighth was sung by David for all the mercies given him by God.—9. The ninth is the present, sung in the spirit of prophecy by Solomon.—10. The tenth is that which shall be sung by the children of Israel when restored from their captivities.—See the Targum.

Verse 2. Let him kiss me, &c.] She speaks of the bridegroom in the third person, to testify her own modesty, and to show him the greater respect.

Thy love is better than wine.] The Versions in general translate דדיך dodeyca, thy breasts; and they are said, spiritually, to represent the Old and New Testaments.

Verse 3. Thy name is as ointment poured forth] Ointments and perfumes were, and still are, in great request king [a] hath brought me into his chambers: we will be glad and rejoice in thee, we will remember thy love more than wine: [b] the upright love thee.

5 I am black, but comely, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, as the tents of Kedar, as the curtains of Solomon.

6 Look not upon me, because I am black, because the sun hath looked upon me: my mother's children were angry with me; they made me keeper of the vineyards; but mine own vineyard have I not kept.

7 Tell me, O thou whom my soul loveth, where thou feedest, where thou makest thy flock to rest at noon: for why should I be [c] as one that turneth aside by the flocks of thy companions?

8 If thou know not, [d] O thou fairest among women, go thy way forth by the footsteps of the flock, and feed thy kids beside the shepherds' tents.

[a] Psa. 45. 14, 15. John 14. 2. Eph. 2. 6.——[b] Or, they love thee uprightly.

among the Asiatics. They occur constantly in their entertainments. Thy name is as refreshing to my heart, as the best perfumes diffused through a chamber are to the senses of the guests.

Therefore do the virgins love thee.] She means herself: but uses this periphrasis through modesty.

Verse 4. Draw me] let me have the full assurance of thy affection.

We will run after thee] Speaking in the plural through modesty, while still herself is meant.

The king hath brought me] My spouse is a potentate, a mighty king, no ordinary person.

Into his chambers] He has favoured me with his utmost confidence.

The upright love thee.] The most perfect and accomplished find thee worthy of their highest esteem.

Verse 5. I am black, but comely] This is literally true of many of the Asiatic women; though black or brown, they are exquisitely beautiful. Many of the Egyptian women are still fine: but their complexion is much inferior to that of the Palestine females. Though black or swarthy in my complexion, yet am I comely, well proportioned in every part.

As the tents of Kedar] I am tawny, like the tents of the Arabians, and like the pavilions of Solomon,—probably covered by a kind of tanned cloth. The daughters of Jerusalem are said to represent the synagogue: the bride the church of Christ. It is easy to find spiritual meanings: every creed will furnish them.

Verse 6. Because the sun hath looked upon me] The bride gives here certain reasons why she was dark complexioned. The sun hath looked upon me—I am sun-burnt, tanned by the sun; being obliged, perhaps, through some domestic jealousy or uneasiness, to keep much without. My mother's children were angry; they made me keeper of the vineyards. Here the brown complexion of the Egyptians is attributed to the influence of the sun or climate.

My mother's children were angry with me] Acted severely. The bringing of a foreigner to the throne would no doubt excite jealousy among the Jewish females; who, from their own superior complexion, national and religious advantages, might well suppose, that Solomon should not have gone to Egypt for a wife and queen, while Judea could have furnished him with every kind of superior excellence.

Verse 7. Tell me—where thou feedest] This is spoken as if the parties were shepherds, or employed in the pastoral life. But how this would apply either to Solomon, or the princess of Egypt, is not easy to ascertain. Probably in the marriage festival there was something like our masks, in which persons of quality assumed rural characters and their employments.—See that fine one composed by Milton, called COMUS.

To rest at noon] In hot countries the shepherds and their flocks are obliged to retire to shelter during the burning heats of the noon-day sun. This is common in all countries in the summer heats, where shelter can be had.

One that turneth aside] As a wanderer; one who, not knowing where to find her companions, wanders fruitlessly in seeking them. It was customary for shepherds to drive their flocks together for the purpose of conversing, playing on the pipe, or having trials of skill in poetry or music.—So VIRGIL.

Forte sub argutâ consederat ilice Daphnis,
Compulerantque greges Corydon et Thyrsis in unum:
Thyrsis oves, Corydon distentas lacte capellas.
Ambo florentes ætatibus, Arcades ambo,
Et cantare pares, et respondere parati. ÆCL. vii. v. 1.

Beneath a holm repaired two jolly swains:
Their sheep and goats together grazed the plains;
Both young Arcadians, both alike inspired
To sing and answer as the song required. DRYDEN.

This does not express the sense of the original: from the different pastures in which they have been accustomed to feed their flocks, they drove their sheep and goats together for the purpose mentioned in the pastoral; and in course, returned to their respective pasturages, when their business was over.

Verse 8. If thou know not] This appears to be the reply of the virgins.—They know not exactly; and, therefore,

10 [c] Thy cheeks are comely with rows of jewels, thy neck with chains of gold.

11 We will make thee borders of gold with studs of silver.

12 While the king sitteth at his table, my spikenard sendeth forth the smell thereof.

13 A bundle of myrrh is my well-beloved unto me; he shall lie all night betwixt my breasts.

14 My beloved is unto me as a cluster of [d] camphire in the vineyards of En-gedi.

direct the bride to the shepherds who would give information.

Verse 9. I have compared thee—to a company of horses] This may be translated more literally, "I have compared thee לססתי le susati, to my mare, in the chariots or courses of Pharaoh:" and so the Versions understood it. Mares, in preference to horses, were used both for riding and chariots in the East. They are much swifter, endure more hardship, and will go longer without food, than either the stallion or the gelding. There is perhaps no brute creature in the world so beautiful as a fine well bred horse or mare; and the finest woman in the universe, Helen, has been compared to a horse in a Thessalian chariot by Theocritus. "The golden Helen, tall and graceful, appears as distinguished among us as the furrow in the field, the cypress in the garden, or the Thessalian horse in the chariot."

This one passage amply justifies the Hebrew bard, in the simile before us. See Jer. vi. 2.

Verse 10. Thy cheeks are comely] D'Arvieux has remarked that "the Arabian ladies wear a great many pearls about their necks and caps. They have gold chains about their necks which hang down upon their bosoms with strings of coloured gauze; the gauze itself bordered with zechins and other pieces of gold coin, which hang upon their foreheads and both cheeks. The ordinary women wear small silver coins with which they cover their forehead-piece like fish scales, as this is one of the principal ornaments of their faces." I have seen their essence bottles ornamented with festoons of aspers, and small pieces of silver, pearls, beads, &c.

Verse 11. Borders of gold] I have observed several of the handkerchiefs, shawls, and head attire, of the eastern women, curiously and expensively worked in the borders, with gold and silver, and various coloured silk; which has a splendid effect.

Verse 12. While the king sitteth at his table] במסבו bemisabo, in his circle; probably meaning the circle of his friends, at the marriage festivals; or a round table.

Verse 13. He shall lie all night betwixt my breasts.] Mr. Harmer contends that it is the bundle of myrrh which the bride says shall lie all night betwixt her breasts, to which she compares the bridegroom, his name being as pleasing and refreshing to her mind, as the myrrh or stacte was to her senses, by its continual fragrance.

Verse 14. A cluster of camphire] Mr. Hasselquist supposes this to mean a bunch of the Cyprus grape: but this is supposed to mean a shrub so called, not any production of the isle of Cyprus; the best kinds of which were found at En-gaddi. This place belonged to the tribe of Judah.

Verse 15. Thou hast doves' eyes] The large and beautiful dove of Syria is supposed to be here referred to; the eyes of which are remarkably fine.

Verse 16. Also our bed is green] ערש âras, from its use in several places of the Hebrew Bible, generally signifies a mattress; and here probably a green bank is meant, on which they sat down, being now on a walk in the country. Or it may mean a bower in a garden; or the nuptial bed.

Verse 17. The beams of our house are cedar] Perhaps it was under a cedar tree whose vast limbs were interwoven with the ברות berot, a tree of the cypress kind, where they now sat. And this natural bower recommended itself to the poet's attention by its strength, loftiness, and its affording them a shady cover, and cool retreat. How natural to break out into the praise of a bower, by whose branches and foliage we are shielded from the intense heat of the sun! Even the shelter of a great rock in a weary land is celebrated by the pen of the first of prophets, and greatest of poets. Isa. xxxii. 2.

With this chapter the first day of the marriage ceremonies is supposed to end.

NOTES ON CHAP. II.

Verse 1. I am the rose of Sharon] Sharon was a very fruitful place, where David's cattle were fed. 1 Chron. xxvii. 29. It is mentioned as a place of excellence, Isa. xxxv. 2. and as a place of flocks, Isa. lxv. 10. Perhaps it would be better, with almost all the Versions, to translate, I am the rose of the field. The bridegroom had just before called her fair: she, with a becoming modesty, represents her beauty as nothing extraordinary, and compares herself to a common flower of the field. This in the warmth of his affection he denies, insisting that she as much surpasses all other maidens as the flower of the lily does the bramble, ver. 2.

Verse 3. As the apple tree] The bride returns the compliment; and says, as the apple, or citron tree is among the trees of the wood, so is the bridegroom among all other men.

I sat down under his shadow] I am become his spouse, and my union with him makes me indescribably happy.

Verse 4. He brought me to the banqueting house] Literally, the house of wine. The ancients preserved their wine not in barrels or dark cellars under ground as we do; but in large pitchers, ranged against the wall in some upper apartment of the house; the place where they kept their most precious effects. We have a proof of this in HOMER:—

Ως φαν' ὁ δ' ὑψοροφον θαλαμον κατεβησατο πατρος

POPE.

Verse 5. Stay me with flagons] I believe the original words mean some kind of cordials with which we are unacquainted. The Versions in general understand some kind of ointments or perfumes by the first term. I suppose the good man was perfectly sincere who took this for his text; and, after having repeated, stay me with flagons, comfort me with apples, for I am sick of love, sat down, perfectly overwhelmed with his own feelings; and was not able to proceed? But while we admit such a person's sincerity, who can help questioning his judgment?

Verse 7. I charge you—by the roes] This was probably some rustic mode of adjuration. The verses themselves require little comment.

With this verse the first night of the first day is supposed to end.

Verse 8. Behold, he cometh leaping] This appears to be highly characteristic of the gambols of the shepherds; and leaping upon the mountains, skipping upon the hills.

9 [a] My beloved is like a roe, or a young hart: behold, he standeth behind our wall, he looketh forth at the windows, [b] showing himself through the lattice.

10 My beloved spake, and said unto me, [c] Rise up, my love, my fair one, and come away.

11 For, lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone;

12 The flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land.

[c] Ver. 13.

points out the ecstasy with which those who were enamoured ran to their mates. It is supposed that the second day's eclogue begins at this verse. The author of what was then called A new translation of Solomon's Song observes,—1. The bride relates how the bridegroom, attended by his companions, had come under her window, and called upon her to come forth and enjoy the beauties of the spring, ver. 9, 10, 11, &c. 2. She then returns to her narration, chap. iii. 1. the bridegroom did not come according to her wishes. Night came on; she did not find him in her bed; she went out to seek him—found him and brought him to her mother's pavilion, ver. 4. and then, as before, conjures the virgins not to disturb his repose, ver. 5.

Verse 9. He standeth behind our wall] This may refer to the wall by which the house was surrounded, the space between which and the house constituted the court; He was seen first behind the wall, and then in the court; and lastly came to the window of his bride's chamber.

Verse 11. The winter is past] Mr. Harmer has made some good collections on this part, from Drs. Shaw and Russel, which I shall transcribe. One part of the winter is distinguished from the rest of it by the people of the East, on account of the severity of the cold. At Aleppo it lasts about forty days, and is called by the natives maurbanie. I would propose it to the consideration of the learned, whether the word here used, and translated winter, may not be understood to mean what the Aleppines express by the term maurbanie. It occurs no where else in the Old Testament; and another word is used for the rainy part of the year in general. If this thought be admitted, it will greatly illustrate the words of the bridegroom. Lo! the winter is past; the rain is over, is gone. For then the last clause will not be explanatory of the first, and signify that the moist part of the year was entirely past; with which, Dr. Russel assures us, all pleasantness withdraws at Aleppo: but the words will import,—"The maurbanie is past and over; the weather become agreeably warm; the rain too is just ceased, and consequently hath left us the prospect of several days of serenity and undisturbed pleasantness."

The weather of Judea was, in this respect, I presume, like that at Algiers; where, after two or three days of rain, there is usually, according to Dr. Shaw, "a week, a fortnight, or more of fair and good weather. Of such a sort of cessation of rain alone, the bridegroom, methinks, is here to be understood; not of the absolute termination of the rainy season, and the summer droughts being come on. And if so, —what can the time that is past mean, but the maurbanie? Indeed, Dr. Russel, in giving us an account of the excursions of the English merchants at Aleppo, had undesignedly furnished us with a good comment on this and the two following verses. These gentlemen, it seems, dine abroad under a tent, in spring and autumn, on Saturdays, and often on Wednesdays. They do the same during the good weather in winter: but they live at the gardens in April, and part of May. In the heat of the summer they dine at the gardens, as once or twice a week they dine under a tent in autumn and spring." The cold weather is not supposed by Solomon to have been long over, since it is distinctly mentioned; and the Aleppines make these incursions very early: the narcissus flowers during the whole of the maurbanie; hyacinths, and violets at least before it is quite over. The appearing of flowers then doth not mean the appearing of the first and earliest flowers, but must rather be understood of the earth's being covered with them; which at Aleppo is not till after the middle of February; a small crane's bill appearing on the banks of the river there about the middle of February, quickly after which comes a profusion of flowers. The nightingales too, which are there in abundance, not only afford much pleasure by their songs in the gardens, but are also kept tame in the houses, and let out at a small rate to divert such as choose it in the city; so that no entertainments are made in the spring without a concert of these birds. No wonder then that Solomon makes the bridegroom speak of the singing of birds; and it teaches us what these birds are, which are expressly distinguished from turtle doves.

Verse 13. The fig tree putteth forth her green figs] The fig tree in Judea bears double crops; the first of which is ripe in spring. But the tree, as I have elsewhere observed, bears figs all the year through, in the climes congenial to it. That is, the fig tree has always ripe or unripe fruit on it. I never saw a healthy tree naked. But in the beginning of spring they grow fast, and become turgid.

The vines with the tender grape] The Versions understand this of the flowers of the vine. These were formerly put into the new wine (2lbs to every cask) to give it a fine flavour.

smell. [a] Arise, my love, my fair one, and come away.

Verse 14. My dove—in the clefts of the rock] He compares his bride hiding herself in her secret chambers and closets, to a dove in the clefts of the rock.

Verse 15. Take us the foxes] That these were ruinous to vines all authors allow. They love the vines; and are eaten in autumn in some countries, according to Galen, when they are very fat with eating the grapes. They abounded in Judea; and did most damage, when the clusters were young and tender. It is likely that these are the words of the bridegroom to his companions, just as he was entering the apartment of his spouse. "Take care of the vineyard: set the traps for the foxes, which are spoiling the vines; and destroy their young, as far as possible."

Verse 16. My beloved is mine] The words of the bride on his entering: "I am thy own;—Thou art wholly mine."

He feedeth among the lilies.] The odour with which he is surrounded is as fine as if he passed the night among the sweetest scented flowers.

Verse 17. Until the day break] Literally, until the day breathe; until the first dawn, which is usually accompanied with the most refreshing breezes.

The shadows flee away] Referring to the evening or setting of the sun, at which all shadows vanish.

The mountains of Bether.] Translated also mountains of division, supposed to mean the mountains of Beth-horon.

There was a place called Bethron, 2 Sam. ii. 29. on the other side of Jordan; and, as the name signifies PARTITION, it might have had its name from the circumstance of its being divided or separated from Judea by the river Jordan.

With this chapter the second night is supposed to end.

NOTES ON CHAP. III.

Verse 1. By night on my bed I sought him] It appears that the bridegroom only saw the bride by night: that on the night referred to here he did not come as usual. The bride, troubled on the account, rose and sought him; inquired at the city guards; and continued to seek till at last she found him, and brought him to her apartment, ver. 2—4.

bringing Rebecca into his mother's tent, when he made her his wife, Gen. xxiv. 67. What is here related appears to refer to the third night of these nuptials.

Verse 5. I charge you] The same adjuration as before, chap. ii. 7.

Verse 6. Who is this that cometh out of the wilderness] Going to Egypt was called descending or going down, coming from it was termed coming up. The bride having risen goes after her spouse to the country; and the clouds of incense arising from her palaquee seemed like pillars of smoke; and the appearance was altogether so splendid, as to attract the admiration of her own women, who converse about her splendour, excellence, &c. and then take occasion to describe Solomon's nuptial bed and chariot. Some think that it is the bridegroom who is spoken of here.

With this verse the third night is supposed to end.

Verse 7. Threescore valiant men] These were the guards about the pavilion of the bridegroom; who were placed there because of fear in the night. The security and state of the prince required such a guard as this; and the passage is to be literally understood.

Verse 8. They all hold swords] They are swordsmen. Every man has a sword, and is well instructed how to use it.

Verse 9. Of the wood of Lebanon.] Of the cedar that grew on that mount. It is very likely that a nuptial bed, not a chariot, is intended by the original word אפריון apherion. Montanus properly translates it Sponsarum Thalamum, a nuptial bed. It may, however, mean a palaquee.

Verse 10. The pillars—of silver] The bedposts were made of silver, or cased with wrought silver plates, like the king's chairs brought from Hanover, now in one of the state rooms in Windsor Castle.

The bottom thereof of gold] This may refer to cords made of gold thread; or to the mattress which was made of cloth, ornamented with gold.

The covering—of purple] Most probably the canopy.

The midst—paved with love] The counterpane, a superb piece of embroidery, wrought by some of the noble maids of Jerusalem; and as a proof of their affection, respect, and love, presented to the bride and bridegroom on their nuptial day. This is most likely to be the sense of the passage, though some suppose it to refer to the whole court.

A Turkish couch is made of wooden lattices, painted and gilded: the inside is painted with baskets of flowers and nosegays, intermixed with little mottos, according to the fancy of the artist. Solomon's couch may have been of the same kind, and decorated in the same way; and the paving with love may refer to the amatory verses worked either on the counterpane, hangings, or embroidered carpet. And as this was done by the daughters of Jerusalem, they might have expressed the most striking parts of such a chaste history of love, as Halaly's Leely and Mejnoon on the different parts. I see that Dr. Goode is of this opinion. It is sufficiently probable.

Verse 11. Go forth, O ye daughters of Zion] This is the exhortation of the companions of the bride, to the females of the city, to examine the superb appearance of the bridegroom, and especially the nuptial crown, which appears to have been made by Bathsheba, who, it is supposed, might have lived till the time of Solomon's marriage with the daughter of Pharaoh. It is conjectured that the prophet refers to a nuptial crown, Isa. lxi. 10. But a crown, both on the bride and bridegroom, was common among most people on such occasions. The nuptial crown among the Greeks and Romans was only a chaplet or wreath of flowers.

In the day of the gladness of his heart.] The day in which all his wishes were crowned by being united to that female, whom beyond all others he loved.

Here the third day is supposed to end.

NOTES ON CHAP. IV.

Verse 1. Thou hast doves' eyes within thy locks] Perhaps this refers rather to a sort of vail worn by many of the Eastern women, but especially in Egypt. It is a species of black cloth, made of the hair of some animal, probably the black goat; is suspended from the head by silken cords, one of which comes from the crown of the head, down the forehead, to the upper part of the nose, just under the eyes, at which place the vail begins; for the forehead and the eyes are uncovered, (except the cord above-mentioned, which is ornamented with gold, silver, and precious stones, according to the circumstances of the wearer.) This partial vail not only covers all the face, the eyes and forehead excepted, but the neck also; and hangs loosely down over the bosom. One of them, lately brought from Egypt, now lies before me. But the clause within thy locks מבעד לצמתך mib-buâd le-tsematec, is perhaps not well translated, either by ourselves, or by the Versions. Jerom's translation is an indication of the meaning, absque eo quod intrinsecus latet—without that, or independently of that which lies hidden within. The Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic, have besides thy silence. Calmet contends that none of these gives the true meaning; and that the word צמת tsemath, has not the meaning of hair or locks, wherever it occurs, and has a quite different meaning in Isa. xlvii. 2. St. Jerom on this place expresses himself thus: Nolentibus qui interpretati sunt transferre nomen quod in Sancta Scripturâ sonat turpitudinem.—Ergo צמתך tsematech, quod Aquila posuit, verenda mulieris appellantur, cujus ethymologia apud eos sonat sitiens tuus. Calmet translates, Vous êtes toute belle, mon amie, vous êtes toute belle, vos yeux sont des yieux de colombe: sans ce que la pudeur et la modestie tiennent caché. I leave the translations of these to the learned reader. See another description under verse 7.

Like a flock of goats] Because it was black and sleek as the hair of the goats of Arabia and Palestine is known to be; which, with its fine undulation, is supposed to bear some resemblance to the curls or plaits of a woman's tresses. The mountains of Gilead were beyond Jordan, on the frontiers of Arabia Deserta.

Verse 2. Thy teeth are like a flock] This comparison appears to be founded on the evenness, neatness, and whiteness, of the newly shorn and newly washed sheep.

Verse 3. Thy lips are like a thread of scarlet] Both lips and cheeks were ruddy; sicut fragmen mali punici—Vulgate. Like the section of a pomegranate; that side cut off on which is the finest blush. This is a good and apt metaphor. But the inside may be referred to, as it is finely streaked with red and white, melting into each other. She had beautiful hair, beautiful eyes, beautiful cheeks and lips, and a most pleasing and dulcet voice.

Within thy locks.] See on ver. 1. and on ver. 7.

Verse 4. Thy neck is like the tower of David] It is certain that bucklers were frequently hung about towers, both for their ornaments, and to have them at hand when their use was required; see Ezek. xxvii. 10. But the allusion here may be to those pillars which are often seen in armouries, on which weapons of various kinds are hung, formed into a great variety of shapes, and very splendid. Whoever has seen the armoury in the tower of London, or such like places, has most probably seen something very similar to that of which the poet speaks.

Verse 5. Thy two breasts are like two young roes] I have met with many attempts to support this similitude, or rather to show that there is a similitude; but I judge them unworthy of citation. The poet speaks the language of nature; and in a case of this kind, where the impassioned lover attempts to describe the different perfections of his bride, language often fails him; and his comparisons and similitudes are often without strict correctness. In love songs, we have heard the ladies' necks compared to that of the swan, not only for its whiteness, but also for its length! The description here shows more of nature than of art, which I consider a high recommendation.

Feed among the lilies] It may be the nipples especially, which the poet compares to the two young roes; and the lilies may refer to the whiteness of the breasts themselves.

Verse 6. Until the day break] Until the morning breeze. See chap. ii. ver. 17.

The shadows flee away] Till the sun sets.

Mountains of myrrh] Probably the same as the mountains of Bether, chap. ii. 17. Mountains, where the trees grew, from which myrrh and incense were extracted.

Verse 7. Thou art all fair—there is no spot in thee.] "My beloved, every part of thee is beautiful: thou hast not a single defect."

The description given of the beauties of Daphne, by Ovid, Metam. lib. i. ver. 497., has some similarity to the above verses:—

Spectat inornatos collo pendere capillos.
Et, Quid si comantur? ait. Videt igne micantes.
Sideribus similes oculos; videt oscula, quæ non
Est vidisse satis. Laudat digitosque, manusque, Brachiaque, et nudos mediâ plùs parte lacertos.
Si qua latent meliora putat.

Her well turned neck he viewed, (her neck was bare)
And on her shoulders her dishevelled hair.
O, were it combed, said he, with what a grace
Would every waving curl become her face!
He viewed her eyes, like heavenly lamps that shone,
He view'd her lips, too sweet to view alone;
Her taper fingers, and her panting breast.
He praises all he sees, and for the rest
Believes the beauties yet unseen the best.

Dryden.

Jayadeva describes the beauty of Radha in nearly the same imagery:—"Thy lips, O thou most beautiful among women, are a bandhujiva flower; the lustre of the madhuca beams upon thy cheek; thine eye outshines the blue lotus; thy nose is a bud of the tila; the cunda blossom yields to thy teeth. Surely thou descendest from heaven, O slender damsel! attended by a company of youthful goddesses; and all their beauties are collected in thee." See these poems and the short notes at the end.

The same poet has a parallel thought to that in ver. 5.—Thy two breasts, &c. The companions of Radha thus address her:—"Ask those two round hillocks which receive pure dew drops from the garland playing on thy neck, and the buds on whose tops start aloft with the thought of thy beloved."

Verse 8. My spouse] The כלה callah, which we translate spouse, seems to have a peculiar meaning. Mr. Harmer thinks the Jewish princess is intended by it: and this seems to receive confirmation from the bridegroom calling her sister, ver. 9. that is, one of the same stock and country; and thus different from the Egyptian bride.

Mr. Harmer's opinion is very probable, that two queens are mentioned in this song: one Pharaoh's daughter, the other a Jewess. See his Outlines. But I contend for no system relative to this song.

Look from the top of Amana, &c.] Solomon, says Calmet, by an admirable poetic fiction, represents his beloved as a mountain nymph, wholly occupied in hunting the lion and the leopard on the mountains of Lebanon, Amana, Shenir, and Hermon. As a bold and undisciplined virgin, who is unwilling to leave her wild and rural retreats, he invites her to come from those hills; and promises to deck her with a crown, and to make her his bride. Thus the poets represent their goddess Diana, and even Venus herself:—

Per juga, per sylvas, dumosaque saxa vagatur
Nuda genu, vestem ritu succincta Dianæ;
Hortaturque canes; tutæque animalia prædæ,
Aut pronos lepores, aut celsum in cornua cervum,
Aut agitat damas: a fortibus abstinet apris.
Met. lib. x. ver. 535.

Now buskin'd like the virgin huntress goes
Through woods and pathless wilds, and mountain snows.
With her own tuneful voice she joys to cheer
The panting hounds that chase the flying deer,
She runs the lab'rynth of the fearful hares,
But fearless beasts and dangerous prey forbears.

Mount Libanus separates Phœnicia from Syria. Amanus between Syria and Cilicia. Shenir and Hermon are beyond Jordan, to the south of Damascus and Mount Libanus.

and northward of the mountains of Gilead. Hermon and Shenir are but different parts of the same chain of mountains which separates Trachonitis, or the country of Manasses from Arabia Deserta. For these places see 2 Kings v. 12. and Deut. iii. 9. where they are probably meant.

Verse 9. Thou hast ravished my heart] לבבתני libabtani, Thou hast hearted me, i. e. taken away my heart, as we say, he has barked the tree, i. e. he has stripped it of its bark; he has fleeced the flock, deprived them of their wool.

With one of thine eyes] באחד מעיניך be-ached me-eyneyka. This has been thought a harsh expression, and various emendations have been sought. The Masoretes have put באחת be-achath, "at once," in the margin; and this is confirmed by twenty of Kennicott's MSS.: but De Rossi does not notice it. It is scarcely necessary; the sense to me is clear and good without it. "Even one of thine eyes, or one glance of thine eyes, has been sufficient to deprive me of all power; it has completely overcome me:" for glance may be understood, and such forms of speech are common in all languages when speaking on such subjects. If even taken literally, the sense is good; for the poet may refer to a side glance, shot in passing by, or turning away, where only one eye could be seen. I think this a better sense than that which is obtained from the Masoretic emendation.

With one chain of thy neck] Probably referring to the play of the cervical muscles, rather than to necklaces, or ringlets of hair.

Verse 10. How much better is thy love] דדיך dodeycha.—Hebrew. Μαστοι σου.—Septuagint. Ubera tua.—Vulgate—Thy breasts. And so all the Versions, except the Chaldee.

Smell of thy ointments] Perfumes.

Verse 11. Thy lips—drop as the honey-comb] Thy words are as delicious to my heart as the first droppings of the honey-comb are to the palate.

Honey and milk are under thy tongue] Eloquence and persuasive speech were compared among the ancients to honey and milk.

Thus Homer, Iliad, lib. 1. ver. 247.

Τοισι δε Νεστωρ
Η δυεπης ανορουσε, λιγυς πυλιων αγορητης,
Του και απο γλωσσης μελιτος γλυκιων ρεεν αυδη.

Experienced Nestor, in persuasion skill'd,
Words sweet as honey from his lips distill'd.

But the figure is common in all writers and languages. A similar expression will be seen in the Gitagovinda.

Verse 12. A garden inclosed—a spring shut up—a fountain sealed.] Different expressions to point out the fidelity of the bride, or of the Jewish queen.—See the Outlines. She is unsullied, a chaste pure virgin. None has ever entered into this garden; none has yet tasted of this spring; the seal of this fountain has never been broken. All this is plain: but how many will make metaphors out of metaphors!

Verse 13. Thy plants are an orchard of pomegranates] This seems to refer to the fecundity of the bride, or Jewish queen: to the former, it would be a prediction; to the latter, a statement of what had already taken place. The word פרדס paredes, which we translate an orchard, is the same which has given birth to our paradise, a garden of pleasure. The other expressions in this and the following verse seem to refer wholly to matters of a connubial nature.

Verse 15. A fountain of gardens] Perhaps גנים ganim, gardens, was originally חיים chayim, lives—a living fountain, a continual spring.—See Houbigant. But this is expressed afterward, though there would be nothing improper in saying a living fountain, a well of living waters, and streams from Mount Lebanon. A fountain of gardens, may mean one so abundant as to be sufficient to supply many gardens, to water many plots of ground; an exuberant fountain. This is the allusion; the reference is plain enough.

Verse 16. Awake, O north wind, and come thou south] It is granted that the south wind in Palestine, in the summer, is extremely hot and troublesome; therefore, another interpretation of this passage has been proposed by Mr. Harmer; who thinks "בוא booi, which we render come, signifies enter into thy repositories; and, therefore, supposes the true interpretation of the words to be as follows:—Arise, thou north wind, (and retire, thou south,) blow upon my garden: let the spices thereof flow forth, that my beloved may come into his garden invited by the coolness and fragrancy of the air, and may eat his pleasant fruits; for, if the south wind blow, the excessive heat will forbid his taking the air, and oblige him to shut close the doors and windows of his apartments." Others think that he wishes the winds from all directions to carry throughout the land the fume of his spices, virtue, and perfections.

Let my beloved come into his garden] This is the invitation of the bride: and if we look not for far fetched meanings, the sense is sufficiently evident. But commentators on this Song sometimes take a literal sense where the metaphor is evident; at other times they build an allegory upon a metaphor. The Gitagovinda has an elegant passage similar to this. See the place, Part VII. beginning with Enter, sweet Radha.

The whole of this chapter is considered to be unconnected with any particular time of the marriage ceremonies.

NOTES ON CHAP. V.

Verse 1. I am come into my garden] באתי boati, I came, or have come; this should be translated in the past tense, as the other preterite verbs in this clause. I think the latter clause of the preceding verse should come in here: Let my beloved come into his garden, and eat his pleasant fruits. I have come into my garden, my sister, callah, or spouse; I have gathered my myrrh, &c. I have taken thee for my spouse, and am perfectly satisfied that thou art pure and immaculate.

Eat, O friends; drink abundantly] These are generally supposed to be the words of the bridegroom, after he returned from the nuptial chamber, and exhibited those signs of his wife's purity which the customs of those times required. This being a cause of universal joy, the entertainment is served up; and he invites his companions, and the friends of both parties to eat and drink abundantly, as there was such a universal cause of rejoicing. Others think that these are the words of the bride to her spouse: but the original will not bear this meaning; the verbs are all plural.

Verse 2. I sleep, but my heart waketh] This is a new part; and some suppose that the fifth day's solemnity begins here. Though I sleep; yet so impressed is my heart with the excellencies of my beloved, that my imagination presents him to me in the most pleasing dreams throughout the night. I doubt whether the whole, from this verse to the end of the seventh, be not a dream: several parts of it bear this resemblance; and I confess there are some parts of it, such as her hesitating to rise, his sudden disappearance, &c. which would be easier of solution on this supposition. Or part of the transactions mentioned might be the effects of the dream she had, as rising up suddenly, and going out into the street, meeting with the watchmen, &c. before she was well awake. And her being in so much disorder and dishabille might have induced them to treat her as a suspicious person, or one of questionable character. But it is most likely the whole was a dream.

For my head is filled with dew.] She supposed he had come in the night; and was standing without wet, and exposed to the inclemency of the weather.

Verse 3. I have put off my coat] The bride must have been in a dream, or in much disorder of mind, to have made the frivolous excuses here mentioned. The words relate to the case of a person who had gone to take rest on his bed. As they wore nothing but sandals, they were obliged to wash their feet previously to their lying down. I have washed my feet, taken off my clothes, and am gone to bed; I cannot therefore be disturbed.

Verse 4. My beloved put in his hand] If it were a real scene, which is mentioned in this and the two following verses, it must refer, from the well known use of the metaphors, to matrimonial endearments. Or, it may refer to his attempts to open the door, when she hesitated to arise, on the grounds mentioned, ver. 3. But this also bears every evidence of a dream.

Verse 5. My hands dropped with myrrh] It was a custom among the Romans, as Brissonius, Isidore, and others relate, to conduct the bride to the house of the bridegroom with lighted torches; and those who brought her anointed the door-post with fragrant oils, whence the name uxor, or, as it was formerly written unxor, for a wife or married woman, because of the anointing which took place on the occasion; for sometimes the bride herself anointed the door-posts, and sometimes those who brought her; probably both at the same time. The same custom might have existed among the Jews.—See Vossius' Etymologicon.

Verse 7. Took away my vail] They tore it off rudely, to discover who she was. See on ver. 2. To tear the vail signifies, in Eastern phrase, to deflour or dishonour a woman.

Verse 8. I am sick of love.] "I am exceedingly concerned for his absence; and am distressed on account of my thoughtless carriage towards him." The latter clause may be well translated, What should ye tell him? Why, that I am sick of love. This ends the transactions of the third day and night.

Verse 9. What is thy beloved more than another beloved?] This question gives the bride an opportunity to break out into a highly wrought description of the beauty and perfections of her spouse.

Verse 10. My beloved is white and ruddy] Red and white, properly mixed, are essential to a fine complexion; and this is what is intimated; he has the finest complexion among ten thousand persons; not one in that number is equal to him Literally, he bears the standard among ten thousand men; or he is one before whom a standard is borne, i. e. he is captain or chief of the whole.

Verse 11. His head is as the most fine gold] He has the most beautiful head, fine and majestic. Gold is here used to express excellence.

His locks are bushy] Crisped or curled. This may refer to his mustachios.

Black as a raven.] His hair is black and glossy.

Verse 12. His eyes are as the eyes of doves] See on chap. iv. ver. 1.

Washed with milk] The white of the eye, exceedingly white. By the use of stibium, in the East, the eye is rendered very beautiful; and receives such a lustre from the use of this article, that, to borrow the expression of a late traveller "their eyes appear to be swimming in bliss." I believe this expression to be the meaning of the text.

Fitly set] Or, as the margin very properly, sitting in fulness; not sunk, not contracted.

Verse 13. His cheeks are as a bed of spices] Possibly meaning a bed in the garden, where odoriferous herbs grew. But it has been supposed to refer to his beard, which in a young well made man is exceedingly beautiful. I have seen young Turks, who had taken much care of their beards, mustachios, &c. look majestic. Scarcely any thing serves to set out the human face to greater advantage than the beard, when kept in proper order. Females admire it in their suitors and husbands. I have known cases, where they not only despised but execrated Europeans, whose faces were close shaved. The men perfume their beards often; and this may be what is intended by spices and sweet-smelling myrrh.

His lips like lilies] The שושנים shoshanim may mean any flower of the lily kind, such as the rubens lilium, mentioned by Pliny, or something of the tulip kind. There are tints in such flowers that bear a very near resemblance to a fine ruby lip.

Verse 14. His hands—gold rings set with the beryl] This really seems to refer to gold rings set with precious stones on the fingers, and perhaps to circlets or bracelets about the wrists. Some suppose it to refer to the roundness and exquisite symmetry of the hand and fingers. תרשיש tarshish, which we translate beryl, a gem of a sea green tincture, had better be translated chrysolite, which is of a gold colour.

His belly—bright ivory overlaid with sapphires] This must refer to some garment set with precious stones, which went round his waist, and was peculiarly remarkable. If we take it literally, the sense is plain enough. His belly was beautifully white, and the blue veins appearing under the skin resembled the sapphire stone. But one can hardly think that this was intended.

Verse 15. His legs are as pillars of marble] Exquisitely turned and well-shaped; the sockets of gold may refer to his slippers. On these a profusion of gold and ornaments are still lavished in Asiatic countries.

His countenance is as Lebanon] As Lebanon exalts its head beyond all the other mountains near Jerusalem; so my beloved is tall and majestic, and surpasses in stature and majesty all other men. He is also as straight and as firm as the cedars.

Verse 16. His mouth is most sweet] His eloquence is great, and his voice is charming. Every word he speaks is sweetness, mildness, and benevolence itself. Then her powers of description failing, and metaphor exhausted, she cries out,—The whole of him is loveliness. This is my beloved, and this is my companion, O ye daughters of Jerusalem.

Verse 4. Beautiful—as Tirzah] This is supposed to be the address of Solomon to the bride. Tirzah was a city in the tribe of Ephraim (Josh. xi. 24.) and the capital of that district. It appears to have been beautiful in itself, and beautifully situated, for Jeroboam made it his residence before Samaria was built; and it seems to have been the ordinary residence of the kings of Israel, 1 Kings xiv. 17. xv. 53. beauty, Psal. xlviii. 2, 3.; l. 2. And thus the poet compares the bride's beauty to the two finest places in the land of Palestine, and the capitals of the two kingdoms of Israel and Judah.

Terrible as an army with banners.] This has been supposed to carry an allusion to the caravans in the East; and the manner in which they are conducted in their travels by night. The caravans are divided into companies, called cottors, according to Thevenot; and each company is distinguished by the form of the brazier in which they carry their lights. After night, these braziers are placed on the ends of long poles, and carried by a person who walks at the head of the company. Some have ten or twelve lights, and are of different forms; some triangular, or like an N. some like an M. by which each pilgrim readily knows his own company, both by night and day. A whole caravan, composed of many thousands of hadgees or pilgrims, divided into various cottors or companies, each having its own distinguishing brazier or light, must necessarily produce a very splendid, if not a terrible, appearance.

Verse 5. Turn away thine eyes] As the sight of so many fires after night was extremely dazzling, and the eye could not bear the sight; so the look of the bride was such as pierced the heart, and quite overwhelmed the person who met it. Hence the bridegroom naturally cries out, Turn away thine eyes from me, for they have overcome me.

Thy hair is as a flock of goats] See on chap. iv. 1.

Verse 6. Thy teeth] See on chap. iv. 2.

Verse 7. As a piece of a pomegranate] See on chap. iv. 3.

Verse 8. There are threescore queens] Though there be sixty queens, and eighty concubines, or secondary wives, and virgins innumerable, in my harem; yet thou, my dove, my undefiled, art אחת achath, ONE, the ONLY ONE, she in whom I delight beyond all.

Verse 9. The daughters saw her, and blessed her] Not only the Jewish women in general spoke well of her on her arrival; but the queens and concubines praised her as the most accomplished of her sex.

With this verse the fourth night of the marriage week is supposed to end.

Verse 10. Looketh forth as the morning] The bride is as lovely as the dawn of day, the Aurora, or perhaps the morning star, VENUS. She is even more resplendent, she is as beautiful as the MOON. She even surpasses her, for she is as clear and bright as the SUN; and dangerous withal to look on, for she is as formidable as the vast collection of lights that burn by night at the head of every company in a numerous caravan. See the note on ver. 4. The comparison of a fine woman to the splendour of an unclouded full moon is continually recurring in the writings of the Asiatic poets.

Verse 11. I went down into the garden of nuts] I believe this and the following verse refer at least to the preparations for a further consummation of the marriage, or examination of the advancement of the bride's pregnancy. But many circumstances of this kind are so interwoven, and often anticipated, and also postponed, that it is exceedingly difficult to arrange the whole so as to ascertain the several parts, and who are the actors and speakers. But other writers find no difficulty here; because they have their system, and that explains all things.

It is probably not the hazel, but the almond nut, that is referred to here.

Verse 12. The chariots of Ammi-nadib.] Probably for their great speed these chariots became proverbial. The passage marks a strong agitation of mind, and something like what we term palpitation of the heart. As I am not aware of any spiritual meaning here, I must be excused from commenting on that which is literal. Ammi-nadib signifies my noble or princely people: but it may here be a proper name, and Ammi-nadib might be celebrated for his skill and rapidity in driving, as Jehu was.

Verse 13. Return, O Shulamite] This appears to be addressed to the bride, as now the confirmed acknowledged wife of Solomon: for שולמית shulamith, appears to be a feminine formed from שלמה shelemoh, or שלמון shelemon, as we form Charlotte from Charles; Henrietta from Henry; Jannette from John, &c.

The company of two armies] Or the musicians of the camps. She is as terrible as hosts of armed men, on the ground of what is said on verses 4, 5. The two armies may refer to the choirs of the bride's virgins, and the bridegroom's companions: but the similitude is not very perceptible. The Targum explains it of "the camps of Israel and Judah;" as if the bridegroom should say, My beloved possesses all the perfections both of the Israelitish and Jewish women. But how little satisfaction do the best conjectures afford.

With this chapter the fifth night is supposed to end.

NOTES ON CHAP. VII.

Verse 1. How beautiful are thy feet with shoes] "How graceful is thy walking." In the sixth chapter, the bridegroom praises the Shulamite, as we might express it, from head to foot. Here he begins a new description, taking her from foot to head.

The shoes, sandals, or slippers of the Eastern ladies are most beautifully formed, and richly embroidered. The majestic walk of a beautiful woman in such shoes is peculiarly grand. And to show that such a walk is intended, he calls her a prince's daughter.

The joints of thy thighs] Must refer to the ornaments on the beautiful drawers, which are in general use among ladies of quality in most parts of the east.

Verse 2. Thy navel is like a round goblet] This may also refer to some ornamental dress about the loins. These suppositions are rendered very probable from hundreds of the best finished and highly decorated drawings of Asiatic ladies, in my own collection, where every thing appears in the drawings, as in nature.

A heap of wheat set about with lilies.] This is another instance of the same kind. The richly embroidered dresses in the above drawings may amply illustrate this also. Ainsworth supposes the metaphor is taken from a pregnant woman; the child in the womb being nourished by means of the umbilical cord or navel string, till it is brought into the world. After which it is fed by means of the mother's breasts, which are immediately mentioned. Possibly the whole may allude to the bride's pregnancy.

Verse 3. Thy two breasts] Where the hair and breasts are fine, they are the highest ornaments of the person of a female.

Verse 4. Thy neck—as a tower of ivory] High, white, and ornamented with jewelry, as the tower of David was with bucklers. See on chap. iv. 4.

The fishpools in Heshbon] Clear, bright, and serene. These must have been very beautiful to have been introduced here in comparison. These two fountains appear to have been situated at the gate that led from Heshbon to Rabba, or Rabboth Ammon. There is a propriety in this metaphor, because fountains are considered to be the eyes of the earth.

Thy nose—as the tower of Lebanon] There was doubtless a propriety in this similitude also which cannot now be discerned. If we are to understand the similitude as taken from the projecting form of the nose, even here I see nothing striking in the metaphor; for surely the tower of Lebanon did not project from the mountain, as the human nose does from the face. It is better to acknowledge that there was undoubtedly some fit resemblance: but in what circumstance we know not. But some commentators are always extolling the correctness of the imagery in those very difficult places, where no soul sees the similitude but themselves.

Verse 5. Thine head—like Carmel] Rising majestically the hair of thine head like purple; the king is [a] held in the galleries.

6 How fair and how pleasant art thou, O love, for delights;

7 This thy stature is like to a palm-tree, and thy breasts to clusters of grapes.

8 I said, I will go up to the palm-tree, I will take hold of the boughs thereof: now also thy breasts shall be as clusters of the vine, and the smell of thy nose like apples;

9 And the roof of thy mouth like the best wine for my beloved, that goeth down [b] sweetly, causing the lips [c] of those that are asleep to speak.

10 [d] I am my beloved's, and [e] his desire is toward me.

upon thy neck, and above thy shoulders, as mount Carmel does in its district. Carmel was the name of the mountain where Elijah had his contest with the prophets of Baal, see 1 Kings xviii. 19, &c.

The hair of thine head like purple] Ornamented with ribbands and jewelry of this tint.

The king is held in the galleries] Or is detained in the antichamber. His heart is captivated by thy person and conduct. Some understand the ringlets of the bride's hair.

Verse 6. How fair and how pleasant] Thou art every way beautiful, and in every respect calculated to inspire pleasure and delight.

Verse 7. Like to a palm-tree] Which is remarkably straight, taper, and elegant.

And thy breasts to clusters of grapes] Dates are the fruit of the palm-tree, they grow in clusters; and it is these, not grapes which are intended.

Verse 8. I will go up to the palm-tree] I will take hold on the boughs of this tree, and climb up by them, in order to gather the clusters of dates at the top. The rubric here in the Old MS. interprets this of the cross of Christ.

Verse 9. The roof of thy mouth like the best wine] The voice or conversation of the spouse is most probably what is meant.

Causing the lips of those that are asleep to speak.] As good wine has a tendency to cause the most backward to speak fluently, when taken in moderation; so a sight of thee, and hearing the charms of thy conversation, is sufficient to excite the most taciturn to speak, and even to become eloquent in thy praises.

Verse 10. I am my beloved's, and his desire is towards me.] It is worthy of remark that the word which we translate his desire, is the very same used Gen. iii. 16. thy desire thy ruling appetite, תשוקתך teshukatec, shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee. This was a part of the woman's curse. Now here it seems to be reversed; for the bride says, I am my beloved's, and his desire or ruling appetite and affection, תשוקתו teshukato is על âli, UPON ME. The old MS. translates this with considerable force, I to my left, and to me the turnynge of him.

Verse 11. Let us go forth into the field] It has been conjectured that the bridegroom arose early every morning, and left the bride's apartments, and withdrew to the country; often leaving her asleep, and commanding her companions not to disturb her till she should awake of herself. Here, the bride wishes to accompany her spouse to the country, and spend a night at his country-house.

Verse 12. Let us get up early to the vineyards] When in the country, we shall have the better opportunity to contemplate the progress of the spring vegetation; and there she promises to be peculiarly affectionate to him.

Verse 13. The mandrakes give a smell] See the Note on Gen. xxx. 14. where the mandrake is particularly described; from which this passage will receive considerable light. The reader is requested to consult it.

All manner of pleasant fruits] Fruits new and old; flowers and herbs of every kind which the season could yield. The literal sense, allowing for the concealing metaphors, is I believe, of a widely different nature from what is generally given. But this must be left to the reader's sagacity and prudence.

NOTES ON CHAP. VIII.

Verse 1. O that thou wert as my brother] The bride fearing that her fondness for her spouse might be construed into too great a familiarity, wishes that he were her little brother; and then she might treat him in the most affectionate manner, and kiss him even in the streets, without suspicion, and without giving offence to any one.

Verse 2. Would—bring thee into my mother's house, who would instruct me] She would teach me how to conduct myself towards thee; as she would how to nurse a young child.

To drink of spiced wine] Wine rendered peculiarly strong and invigorating. The bride and bridegroom on the wedding day both drank out of the same cup, to show that they were to enjoy, and equally bear together, the comforts and adversities of life.

Verse 3. His left hand] See on chap. ii. ver. 6.

With the fourth verse, the SIXTH night of the marriage week is supposed to end.

Verse 5. That cometh up from the wilderness] Perhaps the words of the daughters of Jerusalem—seeing the bride returning from the country, leaning on the arm of her beloved,—who are filled with admiration at her excellent carriage and beauty.

I raised thee up under the apple-tree] The original of this clause is obscure, and has given birth to various translations. The following is nearly literal:—"Under the apple-tree I excited thee (to espouse me:) there, thy mother contracted thee;—there, she that brought thee forth contracted thee (to me.) Or, it may be understood of the following circumstance:—The bridegroom found her once asleep under an apple-tree, and awoke her; and this happened to be the very place where her mother, taken in untimely labour, had brought her into the world." And here the bridegroom, in his fondness and familiarity, recals these little adventures to her memory.

The Vulgate gives this an abominable meaning.

Sub arbore malo suscitavi te: ibi corrupta est mater tua; ibi violata est genetrix tua. "I raised thee up under the apple-tree: it was there, that thy mother was corrupted; it was there, that she who brought thee forth was violated." Spiritually, all this is applied to Eve losing her purity by sin; and Jesus as the promised Seed raising her up by the promise of mercy, through the blood of His cross. But the text says nothing of this.

Verse 6. Set me as a seal upon thine heart] It was customary in the Levant and other places to make impressions of various kinds upon the arms, the breast, and other parts. I have seen these often: some slight punctures are made; and the place rubbed over with a sort of blue powder that, getting between the cuticle and cutis is never discharged; it continues in all its distinctness throughout life. The figures of young women are frequently thus impressed on the arms and on the breasts. If the bride alludes to any thing of this kind, which is very probable, the interpretation is easy. Let me be thus depicted upon thine arm, which being constantly before thy eyes, thou wilt never forget me: and let me be thus depicted upon thy breast, the emblem of the share I have in thy heart and affections. Do this as a proof of the love I bear to thee, which is such that nothing but death can destroy: and do it to prevent any jealousy I might feel, which is as cruel as the grave; and as deadly as fiery arrows, or poisoned darts shot into the body.

A most vehement flame.] שלהבתיה shalhebetiah, the flame of God; for the word is divided שלהבת יה shalhebeth yah, the flame of Jehovah, by one hundred and sixteen of Dr. Kennicott's MSS. and by one hundred and fourteen of those of De Rossi. It may mean the lightning, or, as our text understands it, a most vehement or intense fire.

Verse 7. Many waters] Neither common, nor uncommon adversities, even of the most ruinous nature, can destroy love, when it is pure; and pure love is such that nothing can procure it. If it be not excited naturally, no money can purchase it, no property can procure it, no arts can persuade it. How vain is the thought of old rich men hoping to procure the affections of young women, by loading them with presents and wealth. No woman can command her affections; they are not in her power. Where they do not rise spontane-all the substance of his house for love, it would be utterly contemned.

8 [a] We have a little sister, and she hath no breasts: what shall we do for our sister in the day when she shall be spoken for?

9 If she be a wall, we will build upon her a palace of silver: and if she be a door, we will inclose her with boards of cedar.

10 I am a wall, and my breasts like towers: then was I in his eyes as one that found [b] favour.

11 Solomon had a vineyard at Baal-hamon; [c] he let out the vineyard unto keepers; every one for the fruit thereof was to bring a thousand pieces of silver.

12 My vineyard which is mine, is before me: thou, O Solomon, must have a thousand, and those that keep the fruit thereof two hundred.

13 Thou that dwellest in the gardens, the companions hearken to thy voice: [d] cause me to hear it.

14 [e] Make [f] haste, my beloved, and [g] be thou like to a roe or to a young hart upon the mountains of spices.

ously, they can never exist. If a man would give all the substance of his house for love, it would be utterly contemned. Let the old, as well as the gay and the giddy, think of this.

Verse 8. We have a little sister] This young girl belonged most probably to the bride.

She hath no breasts] She is not yet marriageable.

What shall we do for our sister] How shall we secure her comfort and welfare.

In the day when she shall be spoken for?] When any person shall demand her in marriage.

Verse 9. If she be a wall.] All these expressions, says Calmet, show that it was necessary to provide a husband for this young sister. For a woman without a husband is like a wall without towers, and without defence; is like a gate or door without bar or lock; and like a city without walls. They must, therefore, provide for their sister, a rich, powerful, and illustrious man; qualities here figured by towers or palaces of silver, and doors of cedar. As it is customary to build towers upon a wall, and to put bolts and bars upon a door, in order to secure it: so the expressions may point out the defence, protection, and guardianship, which they imagined this young woman to require.

Verse 10. I am a wall, and my breasts like towers] I am become marriageable, and I stood in need of the defence I have now in my beloved; and as soon as I was so, and became pleasing in the eyes of my beloved, I was given to him in marriage, and have ever since found favour in his sight. As soon then as my sister is in my state, let a proper match be sought out for her. These expressions show the solicitude which the bride felt for her sister; and in her favour she wishes to interest her spouse.

Verse 11. Solomon had a vineyard] Calmet translates and paraphrases the Hebrew of these two verses thus:—"Ver. 11. Solomon has a vineyard at Baal-hamon; he has let it out to keepers, each of whom for the fruit of it was to bring a thousand pieces of silver. Ver. 12. As for me my vineyard is before me; that is, it is my own. I am its proprietor; keep thyself, O Solomon, thy thousand pieces of silver, and let those who dress (thy vineyard) have two hundred for their trouble. I neither envy thee of thy vineyard, nor them of their profits. I am satisfied with my own. My beloved is my vineyard—my heritage; I would not change him for all the riches of the universe."

Some suppose that there is a reference here to some property which Pharaoh had given to Solomon with his daughter. See Harmer's Outlines, where this subject is considered at large.

Verse 13. Thou that dwellest in the gardens] This is supposed to refer to the bridegroom asking permission of his spouse early in the morning to retire, as was his usual custom. He intimates the companions were waiting to hear, and he wished to hear it in the way of permission to depart.

Verse 14. Make haste, my beloved] These appear to be the words of the bride giving permission, but entreating him to speed his return. What these mountains of spices were we cannot particularly tell; but they must have been thus named from their producing the trees on which the spices grew. They might have been the same as the mountains of Bether, chap. ii. 17., or the mountains of myrrh, chap. iv. 6. where see the Notes.

Thus ends this most singular book; the oldest pastoral in the world, if it rank among this species of writing. And to whatever species of composition it belongs, it is beyond all controversy, the finest, the most sublime for imagery and colouring, that ever came from the pen of man.

Here ends the seventh night of the marriage week.

In the preceding Notes I have carefully avoided all attempts to spiritualize this song. My reasons I have already given in the Introduction; and in the course of writing these short notes I have seen no cause to alter my opinion. Any man may allegorize it; that is an easy matter; for when he once considers it to be an allegory, his own creed will furnish him with enough to say, write, or preach, upon the spiritual meanings of every part which will be an exhibition of his own confession of faith! But when he has finished his work, the question will recur, By what authority do you give it these meanings? And till the day of judgment none shall be able to say, "I have the authority of God for my exposition."

OR

CHALDEE PARAPHRASE

ON THE

SONG OF SONGS.

CHAPTER I.

Verse 1. The song of songs, &c.] The songs and hymns which Solomon the prophet, king of Israel, delivered by the spirit (b) of prophecy, before Jehovah, the Lord of the whole world. Ten songs are sung in this world: but this is the most excellent of them all. The first song Adam sung, at the time when his sins were forgiven him; and when the sabbath day came, he put a covering upon his lips, and sung (c) a psalm or song for the sabbath day. The second song sung Moses with the children of Israel, at the time when the Lord of the world divided the Red Sea for them; then they all of them opened their mouths, and sung as one song, as it is written, (d) "Then sang Moses and the children of Israel." The third song the children of Israel sung, at the time that the well of water was given to them, as it is written, (e) "Then sung Israel." The fourth song Moses the prophet sung, when his time was come to depart (f) out of the world, and in which he reproved the people of the house of Israel, as it is written, (g) "Give hear, O heavens, and I will

(a) The word תרגום signifies an exposition, or interpretation, or a translation of one language into another; and here of the Hebrew text into the Chaldee language, with an explanation. The first use of these translations was after the return of the Jews from Babylon, where they had almost lost the Hebrew language; and, therefore, were necessary for the understanding the law and the prophets. The translation of the five books of Moses was done by Onkelos, and that of the prophets by Jonathan Ben Uzziel, the former of which lived a little after Christ, and the latter a little before Him: but the translation of the Hagiographa, among which is this book of Canticles, is generally thought to be done by R. Joseph Cæcus. The paraphrase on this book could not be written till after the finishing of the Talmud, seeing express mention is made of it in it.

(b) Which is the Holy Spirit, as is afterward explained. What the Targum says of this book is the mind of Jewish writers in general. Vide Mishna, Tract. Yadaim, c. 3. s. 5. 'tis said that Adam never composed any song; and that the song which Moses and the children of Israel sung at the Red Sea, was the first that ever was sung in the world; and, indeed, it is the first that is mentioned in Scripture.

speak." The fifth song Joshua, the son of Nun, sung, when he fought in Gibeon, and the sun and moon stood still for him (h) thirty and six hours; when they ceased from singing, he himself opened his mouth, and sung this song, as it is written, (i) "Then sung Joshua before the Lord." The sixth song Barak and Deborah sung, in the day that the Lord delivered Sisera and his army into the hands of the children of Israel, as it is written, (k) "Then sang Deborah and Barak, the son of Abinoam." The seventh song Hannah sung, at the time when a son was given her by the Lord, as it is written, (l) "And Hannah prayed by the spirit of prophecy, and said." The eighth song, David the king of Israel sung, on the account of all the wonders which the Lord did for him. He opened his mouth, and sung this song, as it is written, (m) "And David sang by the spirit of prophecy before the Lord." The ninth song, Solomon the king of Israel sung, by the Holy Spirit before Jehovah, the Lord of the whole world. And the tenth song the children of the captivity shall sing at the time when they shall come out of captivity; as it is written and explained by Isaiah the prophet. (n) This song shall be unto you for joy in the night, that the feast of the pass-over is kept holy, and gladness of heart; as when the people go to appear before the Lord, three times in a year, with all kinds of music, and sound of the pipe, when they go up to the mountain of the Lord, to worship before the Lord, the mighty one of Israel.

Verse 2. Let him kiss me, &c.] Solomon, the prophet, said, Blessed be the name of the Lord, who hath given us the law by the hands of Moses, (o) the great scribe, written upon two tables of stone, and the six parts of the (p) Mishna and Talmud (q) to study in; and he was speaking to us face to face, as a man kisseth his friend, because of the greatness of the love with which he loved us more than (r) the seventy nations.

Verse 3. Because of the savour, &c.] At the report of thy wonders and of thy power, which thou wroughtest for thy people the house of Israel. All the nations trembled who heard of the fame of thy greatness, and of thy favours, and thy holy name was heard in all the earth, which is more excellent than the anointing oil that was poured upon the heads of the kings and priests: and, therefore, the righteous love to walk in thy good way, that they may possess (s) this world, and the world to come.

Verse 4. Draw me, &c.] When the people of the house of Israel came out of Egypt, the Shechinah of the Lord of the world went before them (t) in a pillar of cloud by day, and in a pillar of fire by night. The righteous of that generation said, "Lord of all the world, draw us after Thee, and we will run in Thy good way; and bring us to the foot of mount Sinai, and give us the law out of Thy treasure house, the firmament; and we will rejoice and be glad, in the (u) twenty-two letters with which it is written; and we will remember them, and love Thy Deity; and will withdraw ourselves from the idols of the nations; and all the righteous which do what is right before Thee shall fear Thee, and love Thy commandments.

Verse 5. I am black, &c.] When the house of Israel made the calf, their faces became black, like the sons of Cush, (v) which dwell in the tents of Kedar: but when they returned by repentance, and were forgiven, the brightness of the glory of their faces, was increased, like the angels, because they made curtains for the tabernacle; therefore the Shechinah of the Lord dwelt among them: and Moses, their master, went up into the (w) firmament, and made peace between them and their King.

Verse 6. Look not upon me, &c.] The congregation of Israel said before the nations, Do not despise me, because I am blacker than you, for I have done according to your works, and have (x) worshipped the sun and moon; for false prophets have been the cause that fierce anger of the Lord

(h) In Josh. x. 13. it is said, that "the sun stood still in the midst of heaven, and hasted not to go down, כיום תמים about a whole day," or a complete day, which, if we understand of an artificial day, was but twelve hours; and if of a natural day, twenty-four hours. Kimchi on Josh. x. 13. says that this miracle was wrought in the summer solstice, and on the longest day in the year, which in the land of Canaan consists but of fourteen hours; whereas the Targum here says, the sun stood still thirty-six hours, which makes three artificial days, or one natural day and a half. Vide Ecclus. xlvi. 5.

(p) The Mishna, which consists of six parts, is a collection of the traditions of Jews, or their oral law, compiled by R. Judah about the year of Christ 150.

(q) Or the Gemara, as it is read in Targum Triplex, printed with the Pentateuch. Of this Gemara, or Talmud, there are two sorts; the one is called the Jerusalem Talmud, which R. Jochanan collected together, about the year of Christ 230; the other is called the Babylonian Talmud, which was begun by R. Ase, in the year 367, who was succeeded in it by Maremar, in the year 427, and at last was finished by Avina, in the year 500. The former was written for the use of the Jerusalem Jews; the latter for those in Babylon, and other parts, and is most esteemed. It contains the disputations and decisions of the Jewish doctors upon the Mishna. Vide Buxtorf. Biblioth. Rab. p. 425.

(r) It is a generally received opinion among the Jews that seventy angels descended and confounded the language at Babel, from which time the earth was divided into seventy different nations, speaking seventy different languages. Vide Targum Jon. in Gen. xi. 7, 8.

(w) It is a received opinion among the Jews, that Moses went up into the firmament of heaven; though the Scriptures only signify that he went up into Mount Sinai, and was in the midst of the cloud with God there. So the Targum on ver. 11, 12, 14. and on Psa. lxviii. 18.

hath come down upon me; and they taught me to worship your idols, and to walk in your laws: but the Lord of the world, who is my God, I have not served, nor walked in his commandments, nor have I kept His statutes and His law.

Verse 7. Tell me, O thou, &c.] When the time of Moses the prophet was come, to (y) depart out of the world, he said before the Lord, It is revealed unto me, that this people will sin, and go into captivity; now show me how they shall be governed and dwell among the nations, whose decrees are grievous as the heat, and as the scorchings of the sun at noon, in the (z) summer solstice; and, wherefore it is that they shall wander among the flocks of the sons of Esau and Ishmael, who join to Thee their idols, for companions.

Verse 8. If thou know not, &c.] The holy blessed God said to Moses the prophet, It is their desire to smite the captivity of the congregation of Israel, which is like to a fair damsel: but my soul loveth her, therefore let her walk in the ways of the righteous, and let her order her prayer according to the direction of her governors, and let her lead her posterity, and teach her children, which are like to the kids of the goats, to go to the synagogue, and the school; and by that righteousness they shall be governed in the captivity, until the time that I send the king Messiah, and he shall lead them quietly to their habitations; yea, he shall bring them to the house of the sanctuary, which David and Solomon, the shepherds of Israel, built for them.

Verse 9. To a company of horses, &c.] When Israel went out of Egypt, Pharaoh and his host pursued after them, with chariots and horsemen, and their way was shut up on the four sides of them; on the right hand and on the left were wildernesses full of fiery serpents, and behind them was wicked Pharaoh, and his army, and before them was the Red Sea. What did the holy blessed God do? He was manifested in the power of His might upon the Red Sea, and dried the sea up: but the mud he did not dry up. The wicked and the mixed multitude, and the strangers which were among them, said, The waters of the sea He is able to dry up: but the mud He is not able to dry up. In that very hour the fierce anger of the Lord came upon them; and He sought to drown them in the waters of the sea, as Pharaoh and his army, his chariots and his horsemen, and his horses, were drowned; had it not been for Moses the prophet, who spread his hands in prayer before the Lord, and turned away the anger of the Lord from them. Then he and the righteous of that generation opened their mouths, and sang a song, and passed through the Red Sea on dry land, because of the righteousness of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, the beloved of the Lord.

Verse 10. Thy cheeks are comely, &c.] When they went out into the wilderness, the Lord said to Moses, How fair is this people; that the words of the Law should be given unto them; and they shall be as bridles in their jaws, that they may not depart out of the good way, as a horse turneth not aside that has a bridle in his jaw: and how fair is their neck to bear (a) the yoke of my commandments; and it shall be upon them, as a yoke upon the neck of a bullock, which plougheth in the field, and feeds both itself and its master.

Verse 11. We will make thee borders of gold, &c.] Then was it said to Moses, Go up into the firmament, and I will give thee the two tables of stone, hewed out of the (b) sapphire of the throne of my glory, shining as the best gold, disposed in rows, written with my finger, in which are engraven the (c) ten words, purer than silver that is purified seven times seven, which is the number of the things explained in them, (d) forty-nine ways; and they shall be given by thine hand unto the people of the house of Israel.

Verse 12. While the king sitteth, &c.] Whilst Moses their master was in the firmament, to receive the two tables of stone, and the law, and the commandments, the wicked of that generation and the mixed multitude that was among them rose up, and made a golden calf, and caused their works to stink; and there went out an evil report of them in the world, for before this time a fragrant odour of them was diffused in the world: but afterward they stank like (e) nard, whose smell is very bad; and the plague of leprosy came down upon their flesh.

Verse 13. A bundle of myrrh, &c.] At that time the Lord said unto Moses, Go down, for the people have corrupted themselves; desist from speaking to me, and I will destroy them. Then Moses returned and asked mercy of the Lord; and the Lord remembered for them the (f) binding of Isaac, (z) The Jews, as here and elsewhere, call it, תקופת תמוז tekuphath Tammuz, "the revolution of Tammuz." The sun is so called, Ezek. viii. 14. which was worshipped under this name; it answers in part to our June, when the sun enters into the tropic of Cancer, and is what is meant by this revolution, Maimon. Hilch. Kiddush Hachodesh, c. 9. s. 2. Vide Targum, Jon. in Gen. viii. 22.

(a) It is very common in Jewish writings to compare the Law to a yoke; so Targum, in Lam. iii. 27. Mishna, Tract. Berac. c. 2. s. 2. Pirk. Aboth. c. 3. s. 5. Midrash Echa Rabbati, fol. 56. 3. Bereshith Rabba, Parash. 98. Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 13. See Matt. xi. 29. and Acts xv. 10.

(d) In Psa. xii. 6. the place here referred to, the "words of the Lord" are said to be "as silver purified seven times;" where by שבעתים shebaatim some of the Jewish Rabbins, agreeable to the Targum, here understand seven times seven, which makes forty-nine; and so many ways they say the Law is capable of being interpreted, and that he is a wise man who is acquainted with them. (e) In Buxtorf's Bible it is read כגויא ke-gida, "like wormwood," which indeed well agrees with what is said of it; though Matthiolus says of nard that when it has lost its sweet smell it stinks exceedingly. His words are these:—Plerumque accidit dum per Indicum et Arabicum mare in Alexandriam defertur, et unde Venetias, ut ascito sibi maris humore (id namque facile sit quod nardus sit siccissima) vel situm contrahat, vel suputrescat: unde postea amissa suaveolentia, graviter oleat. Matthiolus in Dioscor. l. 1. c. 6.

whom his father bound on mount Moriah, (g) upon the altar, and the Lord turned from His fierce anger, and caused His Shechinah to dwell among them as before.

Verse 14. A cluster of camphire, &c.] Lo, then went Moses down with the two tables of stone in his hands; and because of the sins of Israel, his hands grew heavy, and they fell and were broken. Then went Moses, and ground (h) the calf to powder, and scattered the dust of it upon the river, and made the children of Israel drink it, and slew all that deserved to die, and went up a second time into the firmament, and prayed before the Lord, and made atonement for the children of Israel; then was he commanded to make a tabernacle and an ark. Immediately Moses hastened, and made the tabernacle, and all its furniture, and the ark; and he put in the ark the two other tables, and appointed the sons of Aaron the priests to offer the offerings upon the altar, and to pour the wine upon the offerings;—but from whence had they wine to pour? For in the wilderness they had no proper place for sowing, neither had they fig-trees, nor vines, nor pomegranates: but they went to the vineyards of Engedi, and took clusters of grapes from thence, and pressed wine out of them, and poured it upon the altar, the fourth part of an hin to one lamb.

Verse 15. Behold thou art fair, &c.] When the children of Israel performed the will of their King, He (i) Himself praised them in the (k) family of the holy angels, and says, How fair are thy works, my daughter, my beloved, O congregation of Israel, in the time that thou doest my will, and studiest in the words of my law? and how well ordered are thy works and thy affairs, as young doves that are fit to be offered up upon the altar.

Verse 16. Behold thou art fair, &c.] The congregation of Israel answered before the Lord of the world, and thus she said, how fair is the Shechinah of Thy holiness, when Thou dwellest among us, and receivest our prayers with acceptance, and when Thou dwellest in our beloved bed, and our children are multiplied in the world, and we increase and multiply like a tree that is planted by a fountain of water, whose leaf is fair, and whose fruit is plenteous.

Verse 17. The beams of our house, &c.] Solomon the prophet said, How beautiful is the house of the sanctuary of the Lord which is built by my hands of wood of Gulmish: (l) but far more beautiful will be the house of the sanctuary, which shall be built (m) in the days of the king Messiah, whose beams will be of the cedars of the garden of Eden, and whose rafters will be of brutine, fir, and box.

CHAPTER II.

Verse 1. I am the rose of Sharon, &c.] The congregation of Israel said, When the Lord of the world causes His (a) Shechinah to dwell in the midst of me, I am like the green daffodil of the garden of Eden, and my works are fair as the rose which is in the plain of the garden of Eden.

Verse 2. As the lily among thorns, &c.] But when I turn aside out of the way that is right before me, and he removes the Shechinah of His holiness from me, I am like to a rose which flourishes among thorns, by which its leaves are pricked through and torn, even so am I pricked through and torn with wicked edicts, in the captivity among the (b) kings of the nations.

Verse 3. As the apple-tree among the trees, &c.] As the pomecitron tree is beautiful, and to be praised among the unfruitful trees, and all the world knows it; so the Lord of the world was praised among the angels, when He was revealed on mount Sinai, and gave the law unto his people; in that very hour I desired to sit under the shadow of His

(a) The word Shechinah comes from שכן shakan, which signifies to dwell, and Elias Levita in his Methurgeman says, that their wise men called the Holy Spirit so, because it dwelt upon the prophets: though perhaps, he says, there may be another sense of it among the Cabalistic doctors, of which he declares himself ignorant. It seems to intend the glorious majesty and presence of God with His church and people, and is the same with St. John's σκηνη τ̃ Θεȣ̃, Tabernacle, or Habitation of God, which is said to be with men, Rev. xxi. 3. and may very well be applied to the Messiah, Jesus, who was made flesh, και εσκηνωσεν, and dwelt among us, John i. 14.

(b) In Buxtorf's Bible it is read פלכי pilakey, the provinces of the nations.

Shechinah, and the words of His law were (c) fixed upon the roof of my mouth, and the reward of His commands is reserved for me in the world to come.

Verse 4. He brought me, &c.] The congregation of Israel said, the Lord brought me to the school which is in (d) Sinai, to learn the law from the mouth of Moses the great scribe; and the banner of his commandments I took upon me in love, and said, All that the Lord commandeth I will do, and will obey.

Verse 5. Stay me with flagons, &c.] But when I heard His voice which spake out of the midst of the flame of fire, I trembled, and went backwards because of fear. Then I drew near to Moses and Aaron, and said unto them, Receive ye the voice of the words of the Lord, out of the midst of the fire, and bring me to the school, and sustain me with the words of the law on which the world is founded, and put vails upon my neck; for the interpretation of the holy words, which are sweet to my palate, are as the apples of the garden of Eden, and I will study in them; perhaps I may be healed by them, for I am sick of love.

Verse 6. His left hand is under my head, &c.] When the people of the house of Israel were travelling in the wilderness, they had (e) four clouds of glory at the four winds of the world round about them, that the (f) evil eye might not rule over them. There was one above them, that the heat and sun, as also the rain and hail, might not have power over them; and one below them, which carried them as a nurse carrieth her sucking child in her bosom; and another ran before them, at the distance of three days' journey, (g) to level the mountains, and to elevate the plains; and it slew all the fiery serpents and scorpions which were in the wilderness; and it spied out a convenient place for them to lodge in, that they might study in the doctrine of the law, which was given them by the right hand of the Lord.

Verse 7. I charge you, O ye daughters, &c.] After that it was commanded Moses, by the spirit of prophecy from the Lord, to send spies to spy the land, and when they returned from spying it, they brought an evil report upon the land of Israel, wherefore they tarried forty years in the wilderness. Moses opened his mouth, and thus he said, I adjure you, O congregation of Israel, by the Lord of hosts, and by the fortresses of the land of Israel, that ye presume not to go up to the land of Canaan until it is the will of the Lord, lest the whole generation of warlike men perish from the camp, even as your brethren, the children of Ephraim, (h) who went out thirty years from Egypt, before the time came, and they fell into the hand of the Philistines, which dwell in Gath, and they slew them: but tarry ye unto the end of forty years, and your children shall go up and inherit it.

Verse 8. The voice of my beloved, &c.] Solomon the king said, When the people of the house of Israel, dwelt in Egypt, their cry went up to the highest heavens. Lo, then was the glory of the Lord revealed to Moses on mount Horeb; and He sent him into Egypt to deliver them, and to bring them out of the oppression of the tyranny of Egypt; and he leaped over the appointed season through the righteousness of their fathers, who are like to mountains; and he skipped over the time of an hundred and ninety years' (i) servitude, through the righteousness of their mothers, who are like to hills.

Verse 9. My beloved is like a roe, &c.] The congregation of Israel said, When the glory of the Lord was revealed in Egypt, in the night of the pass-over, and slew all the first-born, He rode upon a swift cloud, and ran like a roe or a young hart, and protected the houses in which we were, and stood behind our wall, and looked out of the windows, and beheld through the lattices, and saw the blood of the sacrifice of the pass-over, and the blood of circumcision which was fixed upon our gates; and he hastened from the highest

(c) In Buxtorf's Bible it is read, מם ממ "were sweet to my palate, or taste."

(d) The same sense is given of those words in Shirhashirim Rabba in loc. and in Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 2.

(e) The Jews are divided about the number of those clouds which they say attended the Israelites in their travels. R. Josiah says, there were five of them, four at the four winds, and one went before them. R. Hoshea thinks there were seven, four at the four winds, one above, and one below, and another which went before them: Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 1.

(f) i. e. Envy or malice.

(g) The same is ascribed to this cloud in Bemidbar Rabba, ubi supra, and in Jarchi in Cant. iii. 6.

(h) The same story is reported in Targum Jon. in Exod. xiii. 17. where it is said that the number of the slain in this expedition was two hundred thousand mighty men, and that these are the dry bones Ezekiel saw in the valley, which upon his prophesying lived, and became an exceeding great army, Ezekiel xxxvii. Something of this story is also hinted at in Shirhashirim Rabba, and Aben Ezra in loc. Vide 1 Chron. vii. 21, 22. and Kimchi in ibid.

(i) The Jews unanimously agree, that from the time of Jacob's going down to Egypt to the coming up of the Israelites from thence, were just two hundred and ten years: Targum Jon. in Exod. xii. 40. Shirhashirim Rabba, in c. 2. ver. 11, 17. Shemoth Rabba, Parash. 18. Jarchi in Gen. xv. 13. and in Exod. xii. 40. which some of them collect from the word ירד redu, "get you down," used by Jacob, Gen. xlii. 2. when he ordered his sons to go down to Egypt, and buy corn, the letters of which word numerically make up 210. Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 13. Jarchi in Gen. xlii. 2. R. Abendana not. in Miclol Yophi in Exod. xii. 40. to which two hundred and ten years, if we add the one hundred and ninety, which the Targumist here says were skipped over, in order to hasten the deliverance of the Israelites from their bondage, will be just the four hundred years God spake of to Abraham, Gen. xv. 13. and mentioned by Stephen, Acts vii. 6. in which his seed should be a stranger, serve, be afflicted and evilly intreated, which four hundred years may be reckoned after this manner; from the birth of Isaac to the birth of Jacob sixty years, Gen. xxv. 26.; from thence to the coming of Jacob into Egypt one hundred and thirty years, Gen. xlvii. 9.; and from thence to the coming of the children of Israel out of Egypt two hundred and ten years; which completes the number. And if we begin the date from Abraham's going out from Ur of the Chaldees, and allow five years for his dwelling in Haran, as the Jews do, see Aben Ezra in Exod. xii. 40. from whose departure from thence to the birth of Isaac were twenty-five years, Gen. xii. 4. and xxi. 5. which thirty years being added to the abovesaid four hundred, make up the number given by Moses, Exod. xii. 40. and by the apostle Paul, Gal. iii. 17.

heavens, and saw His people, who eat of the sacrifice of the feast which was roasted with fire, with (k) Tamca and Ulshin, and unleavened bread; and He spared us, and did not give power to the destroying angel to destroy us.

Verse 10. My beloved spake, and said unto me, &c.] And in the morning my beloved answered, and said unto me, Arise, O congregation of Israel, my love, who wast so of old, and who art fair in good works; go, get thee out from the bondage of the Egyptians.

Verse 11. For, lo, the winter is past, &c.] For behold the time of bondage, which is like to winter, is ceased; and the years (l) which I spake of to Abraham between the pieces are at an end; and the tyranny of the Egyptians, which is like to a violent rain, is over and gone; neither shall ye see them any more for ever.

Verse 12. The flowers appear on the earth, &c.] And Moses and Aaron, (m) who are like to branches of palm-trees, appeared to do wonders in the land of Egypt; and the time of cutting the first-fruits is come, and the voice of the Holy Spirit of redemption, which I spake of to Abraham your father. Now ye hear what I said unto him; yea, the people whom ye shall serve I will judge, and after that ye shall come forth with great substance; and now it is my pleasure to do what I sware to him by my word.

Verse 13. The fig-tree putteth forth, &c.] The congregation of Israel, which is like to the first-fruits of figs, opened her mouth, and sung a song at the Red Sea; yea, the babes and sucklings praised the Lord of the world with their tongues. Immediately the Lord of the world said unto them, Arise, O congregation of Israel, my love, and my fair one, and go from hence into the land which I have sworn unto thy fathers.

Verse 14. O my dove, that art in the clefts of the rock, &c.] And when wicked Pharaoh (n) pursued after the children of Israel, the congregation of Israel was like to a dove, that is shut up in the clefts of the rock, whom the serpent afflicts within, and the hawk oppresses without: even so the congregation of Israel was shut up on the four sides of the world, for before them was the sea, and behind them enmity (o) pursued; and on the two sides of them were the wildernesses, which were full of fiery serpents, which bite and kill the sons of men with their poison. And immediately she opened her mouth in prayer before the Lord, and Bath Kol (p) went out from the highest heavens, and thus it said, O thou congregation of Israel, who art like to a clean dove, and which is hid in the closure of the clefts of the rock, and in the secret places of the stairs, show me thy countenance, and thy works which are right; cause me to hear thy voice, for thy voice is sweet in prayer in the house of the little sanctuary, and thy countenance is fair in good works.

Verse 15. Take us the foxes, &c.] After that they had passed through the sea, they murmured for water; then came wicked Amalek against them, who hated them on the account of the birthright and blessing which Jacob our father took away from Esau, and he came to make war with Israel, for they had made void the words of the law; and wicked Amalek (q) stole from under the wings of the clouds of glory several persons from the tribe of Dan, and slew them, because the idol of Micah was in their hand. In that very hour the house of Israel, which is like to a vineyard, was condemned to be destroyed, except the righteous of that generation, who were like to the best spice.

Verse 16. My beloved is mine, &c.] In that very hour they returned by repentance: then stood Moses the prophet, and prayed before the Lord; and Joshua, his minister, girded himself, and went out from under the (r) wings of the clouds of the glory of the Lord, and with him mighty men that were righteous, who in their works are like to the rose; and they made war with Amalek, and they broke Amalek and his people with the anathema of the Lord, and with slaughter, and with breach, and with the edge of the sword.

Verse 17. Until the day break, &c.] But in a very few days the children of Israel made the golden calf, and the clouds of glory which covered them removed; and they were left open, and were spoiled of the apparatus of their armour, on which was engraven the Great Name, (s) that is (o) i. e. The enemy; compare with this Rom. viii. 7.

(p) Frequent mention is made of this in the writings of the Jews. It was a voice from heaven which revealed secrets, foretold future events, decided controversies, and directed in difficult matters; it was used in the second temple in the room of prophecy, which the Jews say then ceased, Talmud Sota fol. 48. col. 2. and sanhedrim, fol. 2. col. 4. R. Saadiah Gaon in Dan. ix. 24. Shirhashirim Rabba in c. 8, 9. It is thought by R. Levi Ben. Gerson in 2 Sam. i. s. 27. to be a more excellent and complete kind of divination; and indeed I am inclined to think that most of those voices which go under this name were the mere illusions of Satan, designed to deceive the people, and lessen the credit of those voices which were heard from heaven in the times of Christ. See Matt. iii. 17. and xvii. 5. John xii. 28.

(q) In Targ. Jon. in Exod. xvii. 8. where the same story is mentioned, it is said that those men of the tribe of Dan, whom Amalek took and slew, were such whom the cloud did not receive and protect because of their idolatry.

(r) So Targum Jon. and Jarchi in Exod. xvii. 9. and Shemoth Rabba, Parash. 26.

(s) This is the name Jehovah, which the Jews think unlawful to pronounce; and, therefore, explain it by other names, usually by Adonai, or Elohim. Here it is said to be explained by seventy names, sometimes by seventy-two; of which see Galatinus de Arcanis Cath. ver. l. 2. c. 17. and Schindler Lex. Pentaglot. p. 1492.

explained by seventy names. And the Lord sought to destroy them out of the world: but that He remembered before Him the oath which He sware to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, who were swift in their service, as a roe or a young hart, and the offering which Abraham offered up, even Isaac, his own son, on mount Moriah, and where, before then, he had offered his offering, and divided them equally.

CHAPTER III.

Verse 1. By night on my bed, &c.] And when the people of the house of Israel saw that the clouds of glory were removed from them, and the holy crown (a) that was given to them at Sinai was taken from them, and they were left dark as the night; then they sought the holy crown, which was removed from them, but they found it not.

Verse 2. I will rise now, &c.] The children of Israel said one to another, Let us arise, and go, and surround the tabernacle of the congregation, which Moses fixed without the camp; and let us seek instruction from the Lord, and the holy Shechinah, which is removed from us. And they went about the cities, and in the streets, and in the broad places: but they found it not.

Verse 3. The watchmen that go about the city, &c.] The congregation of Israel said, (b) Moses and Aaron, and the Levites, which keep the charge of the word of the tabernacle of the congregation, who go round about it, found me, and I inquired of them concerning the Shechinah of the glory of the Lord, which was removed from me. Moses, the great scribe of Israel, answered, and thus he said, I will go up to the highest heavens, and I will pray before the Lord; perhaps, atonement may be made for your transgressions, so that He may cause His Shechinah to dwell among you as before.

Verse 4. It was but a little that I passed, &c.] It was but a very little time, and the Lord turned from the fierceness of His anger, and commanded Moses, the prophet, to make the tabernacle of the congregation, and the ark, and caused His Shechinah to dwell in it, and the people of the house of Israel offered their offerings, and studied in the words of the law in the chamber (c) of the school of Moses, their master, and in the chamber of Joshua, the son of Nun, his minister.

Verse 5. I charge you, &c.] When the seven nations (d) heard that the children of Israel were about to possess their land, they arose as one man, and cut down the trees, and stopped up the fountains of water, and destroyed their cities, and fled. The holy blessed God said to Moses the prophet, I have sworn to their fathers, that I will bring their children to inherit a land flowing with milk and honey:—but how shall I bring them to a land that is desolate and empty? Now, therefore, I will cause them to stay forty years in the wilderness, and my law shall be mixed with them, and after that those wicked nations shall build what they have destroyed. And then said Moses to the children of Israel, I charge you, O congregation of Israel, by the Lord of hosts, and by the fortresses of the land of Israel, that ye presume not to go up to the land of Canaan, until the forty years are ended. When it shall be the good pleasure of the Lord to deliver the inhabitants of the land into your hands, then shall ye pass over Jordan, and the land shall be subdued before you.

Verse 6. Who is this that cometh out of the wilderness, &c.] When the Israelites came up out of the wilderness, and passed over Jordan, with Joshua, the son of Nun; the people of the land said, Who is this choice nation which comes up out of the wilderness, perfumed with the sweet incense, and supported through the righteousness of Abraham, who worshipped and prayed before the Lord on mount Moriah, and is anointed with the anointing oil, through the righteousness of Isaac, who was bound in that place of the sanctuary, which is called the mountain of frankincense, for whom wonders are also wrought through the holiness of Jacob who wrestled with Him, until the morning ascended, and prevailed over Him, and was delivered, he and the twelve tribes?

Verse 7. Behold his bed, which is Solomon's, &c.] When Solomon, the king of Israel, built the house of the sanctuary of the Lord in Jerusalem, the Lord said by His word, How beautiful is the house of this sanctuary, which is built for me by the hands of king Solomon, the son of David! and how beautiful are the priests, when they spread their hands, and stand upon their desks, and bless the people of the house of Israel, by the sixty letters (e) which were delivered to Moses,

(a) The same is mentioned in the Targums of Jon. and Jerus. in Exod. xxxii. 25. By this holy crown seems to be meant the Shechinah, or presence of God; and so it is explained in Shirhashirim Rabba in chap. iv. 12. or else the law, which is very frequently called so, Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 4. Midrash Kohelet in c. 7. 1. Pirk. Abboth. c. 4. s. 13.

(b) These are also supposed to be intended by the watchmen in Shirhashirim Rabba, and by Jarchi, and R. Aben Ezra in loc.

(c) It was a common practice with the Jewish doctors to teach, dispute and converse about religion in chambers or upper rooms. See Mishna Tract. Shabbath. c. 1. s. 4.

(d) The Hittites, the Girgashites, the Amorites, the Canaanites, the Perizzites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites, Deut. vii. 1.

(e) The same is mentioned in Shirhashirim Rabba in loc. and in Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 11. There being just this number of letters in their master, and with that blessing which surrounds them like an high and strong wall, and by which all the mighty men of Israel prevail and prosper.

Verse 8. They all hold swords, &c.] And the priests and the Levites, and all the tribes of Israel, all of them take hold of the words of the law, which are like to a (f) sword, in which they employ themselves as men that are expert in war, and every one of them has the (g) seal of circumcision sealed upon their flesh, even as it was sealed upon the flesh of Abraham; and by it they prevail as a man that has his sword girt upon his thigh; wherefore they are not afraid of noxious spirits, (h) and apparitions, which walk in the night.

Verse 9. King Solomon made himself a chariot, &c.] King Solomon built for himself (i) a holy temple of the trees of (k) Zangebila, fir trees, and cedars, which came from Lebanon; and covered it with pure gold.

Verse 10. He made the pillars thereof, &c.] And after that he had finished it he put in the midst of it the ark of the testimony, which is the pillar of the world; and in it the two tables of stone, which Moses placed there in Horeb, which are more precious than silver purified, and more beautiful than the best gold; and he spread and covered over it (l) the vail of blue and purple, and between the cherubims which are over the mercy seat the Shechinah of the Lord abode, whose name dwelleth in Jerusalem, above all the cities of the land of Israel.

Verse 11. Go forth, O ye daughters of Zion, &c.] When king Solomon came to make the dedication of the house of the sanctuary, a crier went forth in strength; and thus he said, Go forth and see, ye inhabitants of the provinces of the land of Israel, and ye people of Zion, the crown and diadem wherewith the people of the house of Israel crowned king Solomon in the (m) day of the dedication of the house of the sanctuary, when he rejoiced with the joy of the feast of tabernacles; for king Solomon kept, at that time, the feast of tabernacles (n) fourteen days.

the forms of blessings with which the priests were to bless the people of Israel, in Numb. vi. 24, 25, 26.

(f) The law is likewise compared to a sword, in Bereshith Rabba, Parash. 21. See Eph. vi. 17. Heb. iv. 12.

(g) The apostle Paul calls circumcision σημειον περιτομης σφραγιδα της δικαιοσυνης της πιστεως, "the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith," Rom. iv. 11.

(h) So this "fear in the night" is interpreted by some of the Rabbins in Shirhashirim Rabba in loc. and in Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 11. Though others of them in the said places explain it of the fear of hell, which is like to the night; as they do also in Gemara Bab. Tract. Sanhed. c. 1. fol. 7. col. 1.

(i) By this chariot R. Aben Ezra also understands the house of the Lord; and in Shirhashirim Rabba, and by Jarchi in loc. it is interpreted of the tabernacle, as it is by some of the Jews, in Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 12. though others think the ark is intended; and others in the same place would have the world meant, which way they explain it in Zohar in Gen. fol. 2. 1. The word אפריון very properly signifies "the marriage bed," so called from פרה which signifies "to fructify," or "to be fruitful." Hence לבנות אפריון is a very usual phrase with the Rabbins to express the celebration of marriage. Vide Buxtorf. epist. Heb. lib. 2. ep. 7.

(h) Elias Levita, in his Methurgeman on this word, says, that this is cinnabar. He seems to mean a kind of red wood, which dyers use, but observes, that some say it is the spice we call ginger. So David de Pomis renders it in his Lex. Heb. fol. 54. 4. and indeed it is joined with pepper in Maimon. Tract. Shebitat Asur, c. 2. s. 6. Biath. Hamikdash, c. 7. s. 13. and Beracoth, c. 8. s. 7. It is most likely to be a kind of cedar.

(l) Vide Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 12. Shirhashirim Rabba, and Jarchi in loc.

(m) Most of the Jewish writers refer this to the time of the giving of the law on Mount Sinai, and the setting up of the tabernacle by Moses; so Jarchi and Shirhashirim Rabba in loc. Shemoth Rabba, Parash. 52. Vajikra Rabba, Parash. 20. Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 2. and 12. Præfat. Echa Rabbati, fol. 21. 2.

(n) In 1 Kings viii. 65. it is said that "Solomon held a feast seven days and seven days, even fourteen days;" the reason of which distinction is because the first seven days were kept for the dedication of the altar, and the other for the feast of tabernacles; see 2 Chron. vii. 8, 9.: whereas our Targumist would have the feast of tabernacles kept the whole fourteen days, contrary to the command in Lev. xxiii. 34. Vide R. Levi Ben Gerson, and R. David Kimchi in 1 Reg. viii. 65.

CHAPTER IV.

Verse 1. Behold, thou art fair, &c.] And in that day king Solomon offered up a (a) thousand burnt-offerings upon the altar, and his offerings were graciously accepted by the Lord. Bath Kol (b) went forth from heaven; and thus it said, How fair art thou, O congregation of Israel, and how fair are the princes of the congregation and the wise men, (c) who sit in the sanhedrim, who enlighten (d) the world; the people of the house of Israel, and are like to young doves: yea, even the rest of the children of thy congregation; and the people of the earth are righteous, as the sons of Jacob, (e) who gathered stones, and made a heap thereof, on the mount of Gilead.

(a) In 1 Kings viii. 63. the sacrifice of peace-offerings which Solomon offered was two and twenty thousand oxen, and an hundred and twenty thousand sheep: but the number of burnt-offerings is not mentioned.

(b) See note on Chap. ii. 14.

(c) So the words are explained in Shirhashirim Rabba in loc.

(d) So Christ calls his disciples the "light of the world," Matt. v. 14.

(e) This refers to the account that is given of what passed between Jacob and Laban, in Gen. xxxi. 46, 47. See Jarchi in loc.

Verse 2. Thy teeth are like, &c.] How fair are the priests and Levites, who offer up Thine offerings, and eat the holy flesh, and the tithes, and the offering of fruits, and are pure from all oppression and rapine, even as clean as Jacob's flocks of sheep, when they were shorn, and came up from the brook (f) Jabok, among whom there was no oppression or rapine, and they are all of them like to one another, and always bear twins; neither is any barren or that miscarrieth among them.

Verse 3. Thy lips are like a thread, &c.] And the lips of the high-priest inquire in prayer, on the day of atonement before the Lord; and his words turn the transgressions of Israel, which are like to a thread of scarlet, and make them white (g) as pure wool; and the king, who is their head, is full of the commandments, as a pomegranate; besides, the (h) Amarcalin and (i) Archonin, who are next the king, who are righteous; neither is there any iniquity in them.

Verse 4. Thy neck is like the tower, &c.] And the head of the school, who is thy master, is powerful in righteousness, and mighty in good works, as David king of Israel, by the word of whose mouth the world is restored, who, in the doctrine of the law, employs himself; in which the people of the house of Israel placing their confidence, overcome in war; as if they held in their hands all kind of warlike instruments of mighty men.

Verse 5. Thy two breasts, &c.] Thy two Redeemers which shall redeem thee; (k) Messiah, the son of David; and Messiah, the son of Ephraim, are like to Moses and Aaron the sons of Jochebed, who may be compared to young roes that are twins; who by their righteousness fed the people of the house of Israel forty years in the wilderness with manna, and with fatted fowls, and water of (l) the well of Miriam.

Verse 6. Until the day break, &c.] And all the time that the house of Israel held fast, in their hands, the religion of their righteous fathers, they drove away those noxious spirits that walk in the night time, or in the morning, or at noon day; because that the Shechinah of the glory of the Lord dwelt in the house of the sanctuary, which was built on mount Moriah; for all the noxious and destroying spirits fled at the smell of the sweet incense.

Verse 7. Thou art all fair, &c.] And when thy people, the house of Israel, do the will of the Lord of the world, He praises them in the highest heavens; and thus He saith, Thou art all fair, O congregation of Israel, and there is no (m) spot in thee.

Verse 8. Come with me from Lebanon, &c.] The Lord said by His word, Dwell with me, O congregation of Israel, who art like to a modest (n) damsel, and go up with me to the house of the sanctuary, where the heads of the people which dwell by the river of (o) Amana, and the inhabitants that reside on the top of mount (p) Talga, and the people, which are in Hermon, shall bring gifts unto thee, and they that inhabit the strong fortified cities, which are as powerful as lions, shall pay tribute to thee; yea, an offering shall be brought from the cities of the mountains, which are mightier than the leopards.

Verse 9. Thou hast ravished my heart, &c.] Fixed upon the (q) table of my heart is thy love, O my sister, the congregation of Israel, who art like to a modest damsel; fixed upon the table of my heart is the love of the least of thy children, who is righteous as one of the great men of the (f) This is the ford Jacob passed over with his wives and children, when he went out to meet his brother Esau, Gen xxxii. 22. Mention is made of it in several other places of Scripture, Deut. ii. 37. and iii. 16. Josh. xii. 2.

(g) The Jews say, that when the scape goat was sent into the wilderness, a scarlet thread was tied to the temple door, which, as soon as the goat was arrived in the wilderness, turned white, which was not only a token to them of its arrival there, but was also an indication of their sins being forgiven; as it is said, "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow," Isa. i. 18. See Mishna, Tract. Yoma, c. 6. s. 8. and Ez Chayim in ibid. This scarlet thread, they say, ceased turning white forty years before the destruction of the temple, which was about the time Jesus Christ, who was typified by the scape goat, made atonement for sin; Talmud Yoma, fol. 39. col. 2. This tradition the Targumist seems to have in view here.

(h) These officers were of the tribe of Levi, Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 3. Their number was never less than seven; their work was to take the care and charge of the keys of the court; and one might not open the door, unless all seven were present, Mishna, Tract. Shekalim, c. 5. s. 2. Maimon. Hilch. Cele Hamikdash, c. 4. s. 17. Jarchi in 2 Reg. xii. 9. though Kimchi in 2 Reg. xii. 9. and xxii. 4. thinks that they were treasurers, who had the charge of the public money. The etymology given of this word is very different. Baal Aruch says, this officer was so called because he was מר על הכל mar al ha-col, "Lord over all:" the same is given in Vajikra Rabba, Parash. 5. where Shebna the treasurer, Isa. xxii. 15. is said to be one of those officers. Elias Levita, in his Methurgeman, says, he was so called because he was אומר כל omar col, "he said," or "prescribed," all things.

(i) This is from the Greek word Αρχων, and signifies princes, rulers, or governors.

(k) The Jews observing different characters given of the Messiah, which they think irreconcilable in one person, have feigned two Messiahs; the one they call Messiah, the son of David, who shall be a potent, prosperous and victorious prince; the other Messiah the son of Ephraim, or Joseph, as he is sometimes called, who shall be exposed to many hardships and sufferings, and at last die in the war of Gog and Magog. Of those two Messiahs, see Talmud, Succah, fol. 52. col. 1. Zohar in Numb. fol. 68. 3. and 82. 2. and 99. 4. and 101. 2. Jarchi in Isa. xxiv. 18. Kimchi, Jarchi, and Eben Ezra in Zech. xii. 10.

(l) It is an opinion which obtains among the Jews, that on the account of the merits of Moses, the manna was given; and on the account of those of Aaron, the clouds of glory; and for the sake of Miriam, the well of water, which they say they enjoyed all the forty years they were in the wilderness. Shirhashirim Rabba in loc. Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 1. and 13. Targum, Jon. and Jarchi in Numb. xx. 2.

(m) Or plague.

(n) Here the Greek word νυμφη is used, as it is also in verses 9, 10, 11, 12, and chap. 5. 1.

(o) This was one of the rivers of Damascus; see 2 Kings v. 12. where it is read Abana: but both the Masora and Targum read it Amana; and Kimchi thinks it was called by both names.

(p) Or "the mountain of snow." Elias Levita, in his Methurgeman says, that mount Shenir was called so: perhaps mount Salmon may be meant, which had snow continually upon it; see Psa. lxviii. 14. and R. Aben Ezra in ibid.

(q) Compare with this 2 Cor. iii. 3.

sanhedrim, as one of the kings (r) of the house of Judah, on whose neck the crown of the kingdom is put.

Verse 10. How fair is thy love, &c.] How fair is thy love to me, my sister, the congregation of Israel, who art like to a modest damsel. How excellent is thy love to me, more than the (s) seventy nations; and the good (t) report of thy righteous ones is more excellent than all spices.

Verse 11. Thy lips, O my spouse, &c.] And when the priests pray in the holy court, their lips drop as the honeycomb; and so does thy tongue, O thou modest damsel, when thou deliverest songs and hymns, sweet as milk and honey; and the smell of the (u) priests' garments is as the smell of Lebanon.

Verse 12. A garden inclosed, &c.] Thy women, which are married to modest men, are as a modest damsel, and as the garden of Eden, into which no man hath power to enter, except the righteous, whose souls are by angels (x) carried into it; and thy virgins are hid and concealed (y) in private chambers, and are sealed up because they are as a fountain of living water, which comes forth from under the tree, and is parted to the four heads (z) of the rivers: but if it is sealed with the great and holy name, it goes forth and flows, and overflows all the world.

Verse 13. Thy plants are an orchard, &c.] And thy young men are full of thy commands, as pomegranates, and love their wives, and beget children as righteous as themselves; and their smell, therefore, is as the excellent spices of the garden of Eden, even camphires with nards.

Verse 14. Spikenard with saffron, &c.] Nard and saffron, and calamus, and cinnamon, with all trees of frankincense, pure myrrh, and lign aloes, with all kind of spices.

Verse 15. A fountain of gardens, &c.] And the waters of Siloah (a) go softly, with the rest of the waters, which flow from Lebanon, to water the land of Israel, for the sake of those who study in the words of the law, which are like to a well of living water, and on the account of the righteousness (b) of pouring of water, which they pour upon the altar, in the house of the sanctuary, that is built in Jerusalem, which is called (c) Lebanon.

Verse 16. Awake, O north wind, &c.] And at the north side (d) was a table, and upon it (e) twelve loaves of showbread, and at the south side (f) was the lamp to give light; and upon the altar the priests offered up the offerings, and caused the sweet incense to ascend from thence. The congregation of Israel said, Let the merciful God come into the house of the sanctuary, and graciously accept the offerings of His people.

(r) Many of the kings of the house of Judah were holy and good men; so Aben Ezra in loc.

(s) See note in chap. i. 2.

(t) So Jarchi in loc.

(u) Vide Jarchi in loc.

(x) It was an ancient opinion of the Jews that the ministry of angels was used in carrying the souls of saints to heaven. Thus in Debarim Rabba, Parash. 11. several angels are ordered by God to bring the soul of Moses to Him. Agreeable to this notion, it is said in Luke xvi. 22. that "the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom."

(y) It was very usual with the Eastern people to keep their virgins, especially those of note and esteem, very recluse, and not admit them to public or common conversation: but oblige them to abide much within doors. Hence they are called in the Hebrew language, עלמות from the word עלם which signifies to hide or cover, because they were not exposed to public view; wherefore the author of the second book of Maccabees calls them κατακλεισας παρθενους, "virgins that were shut up," i. e. in the houses of their parents, in private chambers, as the Targumist here says. See 2 Macc. iii. 19.

(z) Regard seems to be had to the river which went out of Eden, mentioned in Gen. ii. 10. and was parted into four heads or rivers, the names of which were Pison, Gihon, Hiddekel, and Euphrates. The cabbalists suppose a great many mysteries to be contained therein; see Zohar in Gen. fol. 85. 2., and in Exod. fol. 34. 3. and 37. 2., and in Lev. fol. 24. 3. where the name of this river is said to be Jobel, according to Jer. xvii. 3. and so it is in Vajikra Rabba, Parash. 22. and in Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 21.

(a) See Isa. viii. 6. and Aben Ezra upon it, who expounds the text in Isaiah by this in Canticles. Jarchi in Isa. viii. 6. says, the name of this fountain was Gihon. In the New Testament it is called Siloam, John ix. 7, 11. it was a fountain near Jerusalem, Neh. iii. 15.

(b) The paraphrast refers here to a ceremony used at the feast of tabernacles, when the people fetched water from Siloam, and brought it to the priest, who poured it upon the altar with the wine of the daily sacrifice; this they say Moses received from God at mount Sinai, though it is not written. This ceremony of drawing and pouring water at those times was attended with all the demonstrations of joy imaginable, as shouting, leaping, dancing, singing, blowing of trumpets, throwing of citrons, illumination of houses, &c. insomuch that they say that those who never saw the rejoicing of drawing water, never saw rejoicing in their lives, Mishna, Tract. Succa, c. 4. s. 9, 10. and c. 5. s. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. and Jarchi, and Ez Chayim in ibid. Maimon. Tract. Tamidin, c. 10. s. 6, 7, 8. and Cele Hamikdash. c. 7. s. 8. and c. 8. s. 6. They fancied the Holy Ghost was much delighted with this vain joy of theirs; nay, that in drawing water they drew Him, i. e. procured His descent upon them, and abode with them as a Spirit of prophecy, which they say Jonah obtained at this time, and in this way; and therefore, whilst they were performing this ceremony, frequently used those words in Isa. xii. 3. "With joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation," which they understand of the Holy Ghost, Bereshith Rabba, Parash. 70. Midrash Ruth, fol. 32. 2. Jarchi and Ez Chayim in Mishna, ubi supra. To this ceremony Christ is thought to allude, "when in the last day, the great day of this feast of tabernacles, he stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink: he that believeth on me, as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water: but this spake He of the Spirit," &c. John vii. 37, 38, 39. Vide Tremell. in ibid.

(c) So the temple is called in Zech. xi. 1. "Open thy doors, O Lebanon, that the fire may devour thy cedars," according to the mind of several Jewish interpreters, who, out of Talmud Yoma, fol. 39. 2. relate, that forty years before the destruction of the temple the doors thereof opened of themselves; at which Jochanan Ben Zaccai being affrighted, said, O temple, temple, now know I that thy destruction is at hand; for so prophesied Zechariah, the son of Iddo, of thee, Open thy doors, &c. Vide R. Abendam. Not. in Miclol Yophi, Jarchi and Kimchi in Zech. xi. 1.

(d) That is, of the sanctuary; see Exod. xl. 22, 23.

(e) Lev. xxiv. 5, 6.

(f) Exod. xl. 24, 25.

CHAPTER V.

Verse 1. I am come into my garden, &c.] The holy blessed God said unto His people, the house of Israel, I am come into the house of my sanctuary, which thou hast built for me, O my sister, the congregation of Israel, who art like to a modest damsel: I have caused my Shechinah to dwell with thee, (a) I have received thy sweet incense, which thou hast made on my account; I have sent fire from heaven, and it hath devoured the burnt-offerings, and the holy drink-offerings; the libation of the red and white wine is graciously received by me, which the priests pour out upon mine altar. Now, therefore, come, ye priests that love my commandments, and eat what is left of the offerings, and delight yourselves with those good things which are prepared for you.

Verse 2. I sleep, but my heart waketh, &c.] After all these words the people of the house of Israel sinned, and He delivered them into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, who carried them into captivity; and they were in the captivity like a man asleep, that cannot be awaked out of his sleep; wherefore the voice of the Holy Ghost warned them by the prophets, and awaked them out of the sleep of their hearts. Then answered the Lord of the whole world, and thus He said, Return by repentance, open thy mouth, rejoice and show forth my praise, my sister, my love, O congregation of Israel, who art like to a dove for the perfection of thy works; for the hair of my head is filled with thy tears, as a man the hair of whose head is wet with the dew of heaven; and my Nazaritical locks are filled with the drops of thine eyes, as a man whose Nazaritical locks are full of the drops of rain which descend in the night.

Verse 3. I have put off my coat, &c.] The congregation of Israel answered in the presence of the prophets, Behold, now have I removed from me the (b) yoke of His commandments, and have served the idols of the nations; wherefore, how can I have the face to return to him again? The Lord of the world answered them by the prophets, saying, And behold, now I also have removed my Shechinah from thee; and how shall I return again, seeing thou hast done evil works? for I have washed my feet from thine uncleanness, and how shall I defile them in the midst of thee with thy evil works?

Verse 4. My beloved put in his hand, &c.] When it appeared manifest before the Lord that the people of the house of Israel would not repent and turn unto Him, He stretched forth (c) His mighty arm against the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half-tribe of Manasseh, on the other side of Jordan; and he delivered them into the hand of Senacharib, the king of Assyria, who carried them into captivity, (d) to Lachlach, and Chabor, and to the rivers of Gozan, and cities of Media; and he took out of their hands the molten calf, which Jeroboam, the wicked, set, in Lesham-Dan, which was called (e) Pamias, in the days of Pekah, the son of Remaliah; and when I heard it, my bowels were moved towards them.

Verse 5. I rose up to open to my beloved, &c.] And when the mighty stroke of the Lord lay heavy upon me, I repented of my works; and the priests offered up offerings, and burnt the sweet incense: but it was not graciously received, for the Lord of the world shut the doors (f) of repentance to my face.

Verse 6. I opened to my beloved, &c.] The congregation of Israel said, I was willing to seek instruction from the Lord: but He removed His Shechinah from me, and my soul desired the voice of His words. I sought the Shechinah of His glory: but I found it not. I prayed before Him: but He covered the heavens with (g) clouds, and did not receive my prayer.

Verse 7. The watchmen that went about the city, &c.] The Chaldeans, (h) which kept the ways, and besieged the city of Jerusalem all around, joined themselves to me. Some they slew with the sword, and others they carried into captivity. They took the crown royal from off the neck of Zede-

(c) Chald. The stroke of his might.

(e) Leshem being taken by the tribe of Dan, Josh. xix. 47. they called it Dan, after the name of their father; and it seems it was also called Pamias. Both Baal Aruch, and David de Pomis, say, that פמיאס Pamias, was a cave at the head of the river Jordan: and it is asserted by several of the Rabbins, that Jordan took its rise from hence, and therefore say, that that river was so called, שיורד מדן shored mi-dan, "because it descended from Dan," i. e. from Leshem, Dan, or Pamias, Talmud Baba Bathra, fol. 74. col. 2. and Bechoroth, fol. 55. col. 1. Jarchi in Deut. xxxiii. 22. Kimchi in Jos. xix. 47. This in Bereshith Rabba, Parash. 63. is called פניאס Paniás, as it is also by Josephus; and no doubt is the same which Pliny, in Nat. Hist. l. 5. c. 18. calls Paneas, who also makes mention in c. 15. of a fountain of the same name, from whence he says the river Jordan sprung. The same is observed by Solinus, in his Polyhistor. c. 48. who calls it by the name of Peneas. Eusebius in his Eccl. Hist. l. 7. c. 17. says, that the Phœnicians called Cæsarea Philippi, Paneas, and speaks of a mountain called Paneius, from whence the river Jordan has its origin.

(f) In Shirhashirim Rabba, in Chap. 5. 2. mention is made of פתח של תשובה "the gate of repentance," which the Lord desired the Israelites to open to Him. Agreeable to this phrase, it is observed, in Acts xiv. 27. that "God had opened unto the Gentiles θυραν πιστεως, the door of faith."

kiah king of Judah, and carried him away to Ribla, (i) where the people of Babylon, who besieged the city and kept the walls, put out his eyes.

Verse 8. I charge you, O daughters of Jerusalem, &c.] The congregation of Israel said, I charge you, O ye prophets, by the decree of the word of the Lord, that if your love manifests himself unto you, that you tell him that I, who love him, am sick of love.

Verse 9. What is thy beloved, &c.] The prophets answered and said, unto the house of Israel, (k) Who is this God thou art seeking to worship, O congregation of Israel, who art fairer than all the nations? Who is this thou art desirous to fear, that thou dost so charge us?

Verse 10. My beloved is white and ruddy, &c.] Wherefore the congregation of Israel began to speak in the praise of the Lord of the world, and thus she said, That God I desire to serve, who in the day is covered with a garment (l) white as snow, (m) and the brightness of the glory of the Lord, whose face shines as fire, because of the greatness of wisdom and knowledge, for He is making new things every day, and will manifest them to His people in the (n) great day, and His banner is over ten thousand times ten thousand angels, who minister before Him.

Verse 11. His head is as the most fine gold, &c.] His law (o) which is more desirable than the best gold, and the interpretation of the words thereof, in which are senses, (p) heaps upon heaps, and the commandments to them that keep them are white as snow: but to those that do not keep them are black as the wings of a raven.

Verse 12. His eyes are as the eyes of doves, &c.] His eyes look continually (q) upon Jerusalem, to do good unto it, and to bless it from the beginning of the year unto the end of the year, as doves which stand and look upon the water-courses, because of the righteousness of those who sit in the sanhedrim, who study in the law, and give light to a cause, that it may be smooth as milk; and they sit in the house of the school, and wait (r) in judgment until they have finished either for absolution or condemnation.

Verse 13. His cheeks are as a bed of spices, &c.] The (s) two tables of stone which He gave unto His people are written in (t) ten lines, like to the rows of a spice garden, producing acute meanings and senses, even as a garden produces spices; and the lips of His wise men which study in the law, drop senses on every side, and the speech of their mouths is as the choice myrrh.

Verse 14. His hands are as gold rings, &c.] The twelve tribes of Jacob His servant are included in the plate of the holy crown of gold, and are engraven upon the twelve (u)

(i) See Jer. lii. 7, 9, 11.

(k) Vide Jarchi, and Shirhashirim Rabba in loc.

(l) So the Ancient of days is represented in Dan. vii. 9.

(m) In some exemplars these following words are inserted:—"And studies in the twenty-four books of the law, and in the words of prophecy, and in the Holy Writings, and in the night-time employs himself in the six parts of the Mishna," which Buxtorf has omitted in his Bible, though he makes mention of them in his Recensio operis Talmud. p. 232. and indeed they greatly lessen the glory of the Divine Being, though they are designed to extol and magnify the Mishna or oral law.

(n) i. e. The day of judgment, which in Jude, ver. 6. is called κριστς μεγαλης ημερας, "the judgment of the great day," when not only the hidden things of darkness and the counsels of the hearts will be made manifest, 1 Cor. iv. 5., but the judgments of God also, Rev. xv. 4.

(o) The same way the words are explained in Shirhashirim Rabba, and by Jarchi in loc. and in Vajikra Rabba, Parash. 19. By this head R. Aben Ezra understands the throne of glory.

(p) i. e. A variety, or great multitude of them; for the Jews suppose the law may be interpreted various ways, and that there is not the least thing in it but what contains a great many mysteries. See notes on Chap. i. 11.

(q) Vide Shirhashirim Rabba in loc.

(r) i. e. They proceeded in trying causes slowly and gradually, and not rashly and precipitately, being willing to search thoroughly into them, that they might do justice and pass a right sentence; this is one of the three things the men of the great congregation advised to in Pirke Aboth, c. 1. s. 1. where they say, הוו מתונין בדין havu mi-tonin be-din, "Be slow in judgment, settle many disciples, and make a hedge for the law."

(s) So Jarchi by his cheeks understands the words of mount Sinai.

(t) Every commandment was wrote in a distinct line by itself, five on one table and five on the other.

(u) In the same order are the names of the twelve tribes, as engraven on so many precious stones, mentioned in Targum Jerus. in Exod. xxviii. 17, 18, 19, 20. in Shemoth Rabba, Parash. 38. and in Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 2. Though different names are given of the precious stones, the names of them in the Rabboth are the same with those in Exod. xxviii. in the T'argum Jer. are Chaldee names, and in this paraphrase they are different from them. Reuben's stone was the sardius, Heb. odem, Onk. samkan, Jon. semuktha, Jerus. samkatha. It is so called by all those names from the redness of its colour; here it is called achmad, perhaps from חמד chamad, because it is very desirable. Simeon's stone was the topaz, Heb. pitdah, Onk. yarkan, Jon. and Jerus. yarketha, because of its green colour; here it is called akik, but what gem is intended by it is not certain. Levi's stone was the carbuncle, Heb. barketh, Jon. and Jerus. barketha, and here barkan, and so in Onk. and is so called because of its bright and glistering light. Judah's stone was the emerald, Heb. nophec, Onk. ismaragdin, Jon. ismorad, both seem to mean the smaragd, Jerus. cadcedana, or the chalcedony; here it is called cachale; it is thought to be the smaragd. See Eliæ Levitæ Methurgeman, Buxtorf and Schindler in voce. Issachar's stone was the sapphire, Heb. saphir, Onk. shabzez, Jon. sapphirinon, Jerus. sampuryana; all intend the sapphire; here it is called ismorad, or the smaragd. Zebulon's stone was the diamond, Heb. yahalom, Onk. sabhalom; it bears those names from the hardness of it, Jon. cadcodin or chalcedony, Jerus. en egla, the calves eye; here it is called gihar, which some think to be the jasper. See Buxtorf in voce. Dan's stone was the ligure, Heb. leshem, Onk. kankire, Jon. kankirinun, Jerus. zuzin; here it is called birla, which seems to be the beryl. Napthali's stone was the agate, Heb. shebo, Onk. yarkia, Jon. arkin, Jerus. birzalin; and here it is called esphor, which may be thought to be the sapphire. Gad's stone was the amethyst, Heb. achlamah, Onk. and Jon. en egla, the calves eye, Jerus. smaragdin, the smaragd; and here it is called yabeag: but what is meant by it I know not. Asher's stone was the beryl, Heb. tarshish, Onk. Jon. and Jerus. crum yamma; here it is called frozag. Elias in his Methurgeman says, that a topaz, in the German language, is called frozam. Joseph's stone was the onyx, Heb. shoham, Onk. burla, Jon. berlevath; both seem to intend the beryl, Jerus. bdolcha or bdellium; here it is called meribag, which some take to be the onyx. See Buxtorf in voce. Benjamin's stone was the jasper, Heb. jashpeh, Jerus. margalita, a pearl, Onk. pantere, Jon. apanturin; and here apantor, which Elias in his Methurgeman says is so called be-precious stones with the three fathers of the world, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Reuben is engraven on achmad, Simeon is engraven upon akik, Levi is engraven on barkan and affran, Judah is engraven on cachale, Issacher is engraven on ismorad, Zebulon is engraven on gihar, Dan is engraven on birla, Naphtali is engraven on esphor, Gad is engraven on tabeag, Asher is engraven on frozag, Joseph is engraven on meribag, Benjamin is engraven on apantor ; these are like to the twelve celestial signs, shining as lamps, polished in their works like ivory, and bright as sapphires.

Verse 15. His legs are as pillars of marble, &c.] And the righteous they are the pillars of the world, set upon sockets of the best gold : these are (x) the word of the law, in which they study, and reprove the people of the house of Israel, that they may do His will who is filled with compassion to them, as an old man ; and makes the transgressions of the house of Israel as white as snow, and is ready to make victory and war among the nations who have transgressed His word, as a young man who is strong and robust as the cedars.

Verse 16. His mouth is most sweet, &c.] The words of His mouth are sweet as honey, and all His commandments are more desirable to His wise men than gold and silver ; this is the praise of God, who is my beloved, and this is the power of the might of the Lord, who is dear to me, O ye prophets who prophesy in Jerusalem.

cause it comes from Pontus : but rather because some sorts of jaspers are variegated and spotted like panthers. In the same order were the names of the twelve tribes engraven both upon the stones in the breastplate, and on the two onyx stones upon the shoulders of the ephod, according to Maimon. Tract. Cele Hamikdash. c. 9. s. 1, 7, 9.

(x) So these sockets of fine gold are explained in Shirhashirim Rabba, and by Jarchi in loc. in Vajikra Rabba, Parash. 25. and in Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 10.

CHAPTER VI.

Verse 1. Whither is thy beloved gone, &c.] The prophets (a) replied, when they heard the praise of the Lord, from the mouth of the congregation of Israel, and thus they said, For what offence is the Shechinah of the Lord removed from thee, O thou who art fairer in thy works than all the nations ? and which way did thy beloved turn himself when he removed from thy sanctuary ? The congregation of Israel said, Because of the sins, transgressions, and rebellion, which were found in me. The prophets said, But now return by repentance, and let us arise, both thou and we, and we will pray before Him, and seek mercy with thee.

Verse 2. My beloved is gone down into his garden, &c.] And the Lord of the world graciously received their prayer, and came down to the Sanhedrim of the wise men at Babylon, and gave refreshment unto His people, and brought them out of their captivity by the hands of Cyrus, and Ezra, and Nehemiah, and Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and the elders of Judah ; and they built the house of the sanctuary, and appointed priests over the offerings, and Levites over the charge of the holy commandment ; and He sent fire from heaven and graciously received the offerings, and the sweet incense ; and as a man supplies his own beloved son with dainties, so did He deliciously feed them ; and as a man that gathereth roses out of the plains, so did He gather them out of Babylon.

Verse 3. I am my beloved's, &c.] And when I served the Lord of the world, who is my beloved, my beloved caused the holy Shechinah to dwell with me, and He fed me with dainties.

Verse 4. Thou art beautiful, O my love, &c.] The Lord said by His word, How fair art thou, my love, when thou art willing to perform my pleasure, beautiful is the house of the sanctuary which thou hast built for me instead of the former sanctuary, which Solomon, king in Jerusalem, built for me, and thy dread was upon all the people in the day that thy four (b) standards marched in the wilderness.

Verse 5. Turn away thine eyes from me, &c.] Set thy doctors, the wise men of the great congregation, in a circle over against me, for these (c) made me their king in the captivity, and fixed the school, for the teaching of my law, and the rest of thy nobles, and the people of the earth justified me by the word of their mouth, as the sons of Jacob, who gathered stones and made an heap (d) upon the mount of Gilead.

Verse 6. Thy teeth are as a flock of sheep, &c.] And the priests and Levites, who eat thine offerings, and the holy tithes, and the oblation of fruits, are pure from all oppression and rapine, for they are as clean as Jacob's flocks of sheep, when they came up from the brook (e) Jabok, for there is no oppression or rapine in them : but they are all of them like one another, and they always bear twins, neither is there any that miscarrieth or is barren among them.

(a) The persons here interrogating are said to be "the nations of the world," in Shirhashirim Rabba, and by Jarchi in loc.

(b) Which were those of Judah, Reuben, Ephraim, and Dan. See Numb. ii. and Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 2.

(c) So the word הרהיבני is paraphrased in Shirhashirim Rabba, in loc.

(d) See note on chap. iv. 1.

(e) See note on chap. iv. 2.

Verse 7. As a piece of a pomegranate, &c.] And the kingdom of the house of the Hasmonæans (f) are all of them full of the commandments, even as a pomegranate, besides, Matthias, the high-priest, and his sons, who are more righteous than them all, who very eagerly established the commandments, and the words of the law.

Verse 8. There are threescore queens, &c.] At that time the Grecians arose and gathered sixty kings of the children of (g) Esau clothed with coats of mail, riding upon horses, being horsemen, and eighty dukes of the children of Ishmael, riding upon elephants, besides the rest of the nations and languages, of which there's no number, and they appointed king Alexander to be the general over them, and they came to make war against Jerusalem.

Verse 9. My dove, my undefiled is but one, &c.] And at that time the congregation of Israel, which is like to an unblemished dove, was serving her Lord with a single heart, and was united to the law, and studied in the words of the law with a perfect heart, and her righteousness was as pure as in the day when she came out of Egypt. Lo, the sons of the Hasmonæans, and Matthias, and all the people of Israel, went forth and made war with them, and the Lord delivered them into their hands: which, when the inhabitants of the provinces saw, they blessed them, and the kingdoms of the earth, and the governors, and they praised them.

Verse 10. Who is she that looketh forth as the morning, &c.] The nations said, How splendid are the works of this people as the morning, fair are their young men as the moon, and their righteousness as clear as the sun; and their dread was upon all the inhabitants of the earth, as in the time their (h) four standards marched in the wilderness.

Verse 11. I went down into the garden of nuts, &c.] The Lord of the world said, concerning the second (i) temple, which was built (k) by the hands of Cyrus, I will cause my Shechinah to dwell there, to behold the good works of my people, and see whether the wise men, who are like to a vine, multiply and increase, and whether their branches are full of good works, as the pomegranates.

Verse 12. Or ever I was aware, &c.] And when it appeared manifest before the Lord, that they were righteous, and studied in the law, the Lord said by His word, I will not humble them any more, yea, I will not consume them; but will consult with myself to do them good, and to set them, even their excellent ones, in the chariots of (l) kings, because of the worthiness of the righteous of that generation, who are like in their works to Abraham their father.

Verse 13. Return, return, O Shulamite, &c.] Return unto me, O congregation of Israel, return unto Jerusalem, return unto the house of the doctrine of the law, return to receive the prophecy from the prophets, who have prophesied in the name of the word of the Lord; for what is your goodness, ye lying prophets, to make the people of Jerusalem go astray by your prophecies? for ye speak perverse things against the word of the Lord, to profane the camp of Israel and Judah.

(f) Schindler in his Lex. Pentaglott. fol. 680. says, that Mattathias and his posterity were called so from חשמן Hasmon, one of their ancestors, though I think there is no evidence of any of their ancestors being of that name. The Jewish writers pretty generally agree, that they were so called from the word חשמנים Hasmannim, which signifies princes, or great persons, and is so used in Psa. lxviii. 32. for they had both the high-priesthood and the princely government in their hands. So R. Aben Ezra, R. David Kimchi, and R. Sol. Ben. Melec. in Psa. lxviii. 32. David De Pomis, Lex. Heb. fol. 42. 1. and so likewise Scaliger de Emend. Temp. lib. 5. p. 436, 437. who observes that Mattathias was never so called, nor was he an high-priest though the Targumist here calls him so, but a common priest of the course of Jehoiarib, and of the town of Moddin. See 1 Maccab. ii. 1. and that this family began to be called by the name of the Hasmonæans, from the times of Simon Hyrcanus, who was both high-priest and prince of the Jewish nation, which kind of government continued in that family unto the times of Herod the great, who destroyed both it and them; and this well agrees with what the paraphrast here says, who manifestly distinguishes the kingdom of the house of the Hasmonæans, from Mattathias and his sons, i. e. Judas Maccabæus, and Jonathan. Of these Hasmonæans Jarchi and Aben Ezra explain the 10th and 12th verses of this chapter.

(g) Vide Aben Ezra and Jarchi in loc. and Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 14. where those sixty queens and eighty concubines are interpreted of the sons of Noah, Abraham, Ham, Ishmael and Esau.

(h) See note on verse 4.

(i) So Jarchi interprets this "garden of nuts;" though some of the Rabbins in Shirhashirim Rabba think the world is meant: and by the vine, the schools and synagogues; and by the pomegranates the students in the law.

(k) It is said to be built by Cyrus, because he gave the Jews liberty and encouragement to build it; see Ezra i. 2, 3, 4.

(l) In Shirhashirim Rabba in loc. these words are referred to the deliverance of the Israelites out of Egypt, and their exaltation over the nations in the land of Canaan, to the raising of David to the throne of Israel, after he had been persecuted by Saul, and to the advancement of Mordecai to great dignity, in Babylon, after his mourning in sackcloth and ashes; all which are represented as severally surprising to them.

CHAPTER VII.

Verse 1. How beautiful are thy feet with shoes, &c.] Solomon said by the spirit of prophecy from the Lord, How beautiful are the feet of the Israelites, when they come up to appear before the Lord (a) three times a year, in sandals of badger skin, and offer up their vows and free-will offerings; and their sons which come out of their loins are fair as the gems which were fixed upon the holy (b) crown that Bezaleel the artificer made for Aaron the priest.

Verse 2. Thy navel is like a round goblet, &c.] And the head of thy school, by whose righteousness all the world is nourished; even as the fœtus receives its nourishment through its navel, in its mother's bowels, who shines in the law, as the orb of the moon, when he comes to pronounce pure or unclean, to justify or condemn; neither do the words of the law ever fail from his mouth, even as the waters of the great river which proceeds from Eden, never (c) fail; and the seventy wise men are round about him, as a round (d) floor, whose treasures are full of the holy tithes and vows, and free-will offerings, which Ezra the priest, and Zerubbabel, and Joshua, and Nehemiah, and Mordecai Bilshan, men of the great (e) congregation who are like to roses, decreed for them, because they had strength to study in the law day and night.

Verse 3. Thy two breasts are like two young roes, &c.] Thy (f) two Redeemers, which shall redeem thee, Messiah, the son of David, and Messiah, the son of Ephraim, are like to Moses and Aaron, the sons of Jochebed, who may be compared to two young roes that are twins.

Verse 4. Thy neck is as a tower of ivory, &c.] And (g) the father of the house of judgment, who determines thy causes, is mighty over thy people to bind them, and to bring him forth who is condemned in judgment, even to bring him forth, as Solomon the king, who made a tower of ivory, and subjected the people of the house of Israel, and returned them to the Lord of the world. Thy scribes are full of wisdom, as pools of water; and they know how to number the computations of the (h) intercalations, and they intercalate the years, and fix the beginning of the months, and the beginning of the years at the gate of the house of the great Sanhedrim, and the chief of the house of Judah is like to David the king, who built the fortress of Zion, which is called the tower of Lebanon, on which whoever stands may number (i) all the towers that are in Damascus.

(a) i. e. At the feast of the passover, at the feast of weeks or pentecost, and at the feast of tabernacles; see Exod. xxiii. 14, 15, 16, 17. 2 Chron. viii. 13. So the words are explained in Shirhashirim Rabba, and by Jarchi in loc.

(b) So the plate of gold was called, on which was inscribed "holiness to the Lord," which was fixed to the fore front of the mitre on Aaron's forehead; see Exod. xxviii. 36. and xxxix. 30. This plate was two fingers broad, and reached from ear to ear; "holiness to the Lord" were wrote upon it in great letters, standing out, and that either in one line or in two lines; if in two lines, "holiness" was wrote below, and "to the Lord" above, Maimon. Hilch. Cele Hamikdash, c. 9. s. 1, 2. and Ceseph Mishna in ibid. and Jarchi in Exod. xxviii. 36.

(c) The same is said of them in Zohar in Exod. fol. 34. 3. and xxxvii. 2. see Gen. ii. 10. and note on chap. iv. 12.

(d) The great Sanhedrim consists of seventy persons, besides the Nasi or prince, at whose right hand sat Ab Beth Din, or the father of the house of judgment; before them sat the two scribes, and the rest of the Sanhedrim took their places according to their age or dignity, and sat in a semicircular form, or as they express it, כחצי גורן עגולה ke-chatsi goren egulah, "as the half of a round corn floor," to which they compare this assembly. So that both the prince and father of the court could see them all, Mishna Tract. Sanhedrim, c. 4. s. 3. Jarchi and Ez Chayim in ibid. Maimon. Hilch. Sanhedrim, c. 1. s. 3. and Ceseph Mishna in ibid. Shemoth Rabba, Parash. 5. Vajikra Rabba, Parash. 11. R. Aben Ezra in loc. Midrash Echa Rabba Præfat. fol. 38. 4. Midrash Kohelet in chap. i. 11.

(e) This was the Sanhedrim, or great council, collected by Ezra the scribe, after the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity, of which he was president. This assembly consisted of one hundred and twenty persons, of which these here mentioned were the chief. There are others reckoned with them by some, as the three prophets, Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi, with Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, Azariah, Seraiah, Realiah, Mispar, Bigvai, Rehum, and Baanah: the last of this venerable body of men, they say, was Simeon the just; who about forty years after the building of the second temple, met Alexander the great coming against Jerusalem, and appeased them. These men were called אנשי כנסת הגדולה Anshey cenesith ha-gedolah, "the men of the great congregation," because they restored the law to its pristine glory, and purged the Jewish church from those corruptions which had crept into it during the captivity in Babylon. They are said to have received the oral law from the prophets, who had received it from the elders, and they from Joshua, and Joshua from Moses, and to have transmitted it down to posterity, Pirke Aboth, c. 1. s. 1, 2, and Jarchi in ibid. Maimon. Præfat. in lib. Yad. Vide Buxtorfii Tiberiadin, c. 10.

(f) See note on Chap. iv. 5.

(g) See note on ver. 2.

(h) The Jewish year consisted of twelve lunar months, and sometimes they intercalated a thirteenth month, which they called Veadar, or the second Adar, which was always done by the direction and at the pleasure of the Sanhedrim; as also the fixing of the beginning of the months, by the phasis or first appearance of the moon, Maimon. Hilch. Kiddush Hachodesh, c. 1. s. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. and c. 4. s. 1, 9, 10, 11, 13. and c. 5. s. 1, 2, 3, 4. The men of the tribe of Issachar were famous for their knowledge in these things, Bereshith Rabba. Parash. 72. Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 13. Midrash Esth. Parash. 4. and Kimchi in 1 Chron. xii. 32.

(i) Jarchi relates out of the Midrash, that from the house of the forest of Lebanon, which Solomon built, a man might number all the houses which were in Damascus.

Verse 5. Thine head upon thee is like Carmel, &c.] The king who is set over thee, a righteous head, is as (k) Elijah the prophet, who was jealous with a jealousy for the Lord of heaven, and slew the false prophets in the mount of Carmel, and reduced the people of the house of Israel to the fear of the Lord God; and the poor of the people, which go with a bowed down head, because they are poor, shall be clothed in purple, as Daniel was clothed in the city of Babylon, and Mordecai in Shushan, because of the righteousness of Abraham, who long before consulted the Lord of the world; and because of Isaac, whom his father bound, in order to offer him up; and because of the holiness of Jacob, who pilled the rods in the gutters.

Verse 6. How fair and how pleasant art thou, &c.] King Solomon said, How beautiful art thou, O congregation of Israel, when thou bearest upon thee the yoke of my kingdom, when I correct thee with chastisements for thy transgressions, and thou bearest them in love, and they appear in thy sight as delicious dainties.

Verse 7. This thy stature is like to a palm-tree, &c.] And when thy priests (l) spread their hands in prayer, and bless their brethren, the house of Israel, their four hands are separated like the branches of the palm-tree, and their stature is as the date, and thy congregations stand face to face over against the priests, and their faces are bowed to the earth like a cluster of grapes.

Verse 8. I said I will go up to the palm-tree, &c.] The Lord said by His word, I will go and try Daniel, and see whether he is able to stand in one temptation as Abraham, his father, who is like to a palm-tree branch, stood in (m) ten temptations; yea, I will also try Hananiah, Mishael and Azariah, whether they are able to stand in their temptations, for the sake of whose righteousness I will redeem the people of the house of Israel, who are like to clusters of grapes; and the fame of Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael and Azariah, shall be heard in all the earth; and their smell shall be excellent, like the smell of the apples of the garden of Eden.

Verse 9. And the roof of thy mouth like the best wine, &c.] Daniel and his companions said, We will surely take upon us the decree of the word of the Lord, as Abraham our father, who may be compared to old wine, took it upon him; and we will walk in the way which is right, before Him, even as Elijah and Elisha the prophets walked, through whose righteousness the dead, which are like to a man asleep, were raised; and as Ezekiel, the son of Buzi, by the prophecy of whose mouth those who were asleep were awaked, even the dead which were in the valley of (n) Dura.

Verse 10. I am my beloved's, &c.] Jerusalem (o) said, All the time that I was walking in the way of the Lord of the world, He caused His Shechinah to dwell with me, and His desire was towards me: but when I turned aside out of His paths, He removed His Shechinah from me, and carried me away among the nations; and they ruled over me as a man rules over his wife.

Verse 11. Come, my beloved, let us go forth into the field, &c.] When the people of the house of Israel, sinned, the Lord carried them into captivity, into the land of Seir, the fields of Edom. The congregation of Israel said, I beseech thee, O Lord of the whole world, receive my prayer which I have prayed before Thee, in the cities of the captivity, and in the provinces of the people.

Verse 12. Let us get up early to the vineyards, &c.] The children of Israel said one to another, Let us get up early in the morning, and let us go to the synagogue, and to the school, and let us search in the book of the law, and see whether (p) the time of the redemption of the people of the house of Israel, who are like to a vine, is come, that they may be redeemed out of their captivity; and let us inquire of the wise men, whether the righteousness of the righteous, who are full of the commandments as pomegranates, is made (k) So these words are paraphrased in Shirhashirim Rabba in loc. and in Vajikra Rabba, Parash. 31.

(l) When the priests blessed the people, they stretched out their hands and lifted them above their heads, with their fingers spread out, only the high-priest never lifted up his above the plate of gold upon the mitre; and though at the time of blessing, the priests and people stood face to face, right over against each other; yet the priests never looked upon the people, but kept their eyes upon the ground, as in the time of prayer; nor might the people look in the faces of the priests, lest their minds should be disturbed thereby, which ceremony the Targumist here refers to, Maimon. Hilch. Tephila, c. 14. s. 3, 7, 9. Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 11. Targum Jon. in Numb. vi. 23.

(m) The same is said in Targum Jerus. in Gen. xxii. 1. Bereshith Rabba, Parash. 56. Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 15. Pirke Aboth, c. 5. s. 3. and Jarchi in ibid. where he, out of Pirke Eliezer, has given us an account of them in this following order, viz. 1st. Nimrod sought to kill him, and he was hid in a field thirteen years. 2dly. He cast him into Ur of the Chaldees, or into a furnace of fire. 3dly. He banished him from the land of his nativity. 4thly. The Lord brought a famine in his days. 5thly. Sarah was taken into the house of Pharaoh. 6thly. The kings came and carried Lot his brother's son away captive. 7thly. It was shown him between the pieces, that four kingdoms should rule over his children. 8thly. He was commanded to circumcise himself and his son. 9thly. To put away Ishmael and his mother. And, 10thly. To slay his son Isaac.

(n) In this valley Nebuchadnezzar set up his golden image, Dan. iii. 1. And here the Jews say the children of Ephraim were slain, who went out of Egypt before the time; as also the Israelites, whom the Chaldeans slew when they carried them captive, and that this is the valley Ezekiel was brought into by the Spirit of the Lord, Ezek. xxxvii. 1. and these the dry bones he prophesied over, which lived and stood upon their feet an exceeding great army, Targum Jon. in Exod. xiii. 17. R. Saadiah Gaon in Dan. iii. 1. Jarchi in Ezek. xxxvii. 1.

(o) i. e. The inhabitants of Jerusalem, or the Shulamite, the church, as in chap. vi. 13. The church is frequently called so in the Old Testament, and likewise in the New; see Gal. iv. 26. Heb. xii. 22. Rev. xxi. 2, 10.

(p) The Jews vainly expect the time of redemption by the Messiah to be future, when it is past many hundred years ago, as they might easily learn from the book of the law and the prophets, particularly from Jacob's prophecy, in Gen. xlix. 10. from Haggai's in Chap. ii. 6, 7, 8. and from Daniel's weeks, in Chap. ix. 24, 25, 26. See this fully proved in a book called "The prophecies of the Old Testament respecting the Messiah considered, &c. Chap. iii."

manifest before the Lord, whether the time is come to go up to Jerusalem, there to give praise to the God of heaven, and to offer up the burnt offerings, and the holy drink offerings.

Verse 13. The mandrakes give a smell, &c.] And when it is the pleasure of the Lord to redeem His people out of captivity, it shall be said to the King Messiah, Now is the end of the captivity completed, and the righteousness of the righteous is become sweet as the smell of balsam, and the wise men fix their habitations by the gates of the school, they study in the words of the scribes, (q) and in the words of the law. Arise now, take the kingdom which I have reserved for thee.

(q) The words of the scribes are mentioned before the words of the law; and are indeed, by the Jews, preferred unto them. They say the words of the beloved, i. e. the wise men, are better than the wine of the law; so they paraphrase the words in Cant. i. 2. they assert that the law cannot be understood without the words of the scribes, that the oral law is the foundation of the written law, and not the written law the foundation of the oral law; and that he that transgresses the words of the wise men, as much deserves death as though he had been guilty of idolatry, murder, or adultery, or profanes the sabbath; nay, that if these say, their right hand is their left, and their left hand is their right, they are obliged to hearken to them, Shirhashirim Rabba, in c. 1, 2. Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 14. Matteh Dan. Dialog. 3. fol. 31. 3. Jarchi in Deut. xvii. 11. Vide Buxtorf Recensio Operis Talmud. p. 222, 223, &c.

CHAPTER VIII.

Verse 1. O that thou wert as my brother, &c.] And when the King Messiah (a) shall be revealed unto the congregation of Israel, the children of Israel shall say unto Him, Be thou with us for a brother, and let us go up to Jerusalem, and let us suck with thee the senses of the law, as a sucking child sucketh the breast of its mother; for all the time that I was wandering without my own land, whenever I remembered the name of the great God, and laid down my life for the sake of His Deity, even the nations of the earth did not despise me.

Verse 2. I would lead thee and bring thee, &c.] I will lead Thee, O king Messiah, and bring Thee to the house of my sanctuary, and Thou shall teach me to fear the Lord, and to walk in His paths, and there will we keep (b) the feast of Leviathan, and drink old wine which has been reserved in its grapes ever since the day the world was created, and of the pomegranates, the fruits which are prepared for the righteous in the garden of Eden.

Verse 3. His left hand should be under my head, &c.] The congregation of Israel said, I am chosen above all people, because I have bound the tephelin (c) upon my left hand, and (a) The Jews very seldom speak of the birth or nativity of the Messiah, as future; but only of a revelation, or discovery of Him to them, which they expect, for they are under self-convictions that He was born long since. Some of them say, He was born on the day the house of the sanctuary was destroyed; but is hid because of their sins and transgressions, and that either in the sea, or the walks of the garden of Eden; and some say that He sits among the lepers at the gates of Rome, from whence they expect He will come unto them, R. Aben Ezra, in Cant. vii. 5. Targum in Mic. iv. 8. Talmud Sanhedrim, fol. 98. col. 2. Targum Jerus. in Exod. xii. 42.

(b) The Jews expect a very sumptuous feast to be made for the righteous in the days of the Messiah, which will consist of all sorts of flesh, fish, and fowl, of plenty of generous wine, and of a variety of the most delicious fruit, some particulars of which they have thought fit to give, and are as follow—1st. They say an exceeding large ox shall be served up, which they take to be the Behemoth in Job xl. of which they say many things monstrous and incredible; as, that it lies upon a thousand hills, and feeds upon them all, and drinks up all the waters which are gathered together in a year's time, in the river Jordan, at one draught, Vajikra Rabba, Parash. 22. Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 21. Targum in Psa. l. 10. Jarchi in ibid. and in Job xl. 20. 2dly. The next dish is the Leviathan and his mate, which they say are "the great whales" mentioned in Gen. i. 21. The male, they say, God castrated, and the female he slew, and salted it against this feast, Talmud Baba Bathra, fol. 74. Targum Jon., Jarchi, and Baal Hatturim in Gen. i. 21. Vajikra Rabba, Parash. 13. Targum Sect. in Esth. iii. 7. Aben Ezra in Dan. xii. 2. 3dly. They speak of an exceeding large fowl, which they call Ziz, that shall be one part of this entertainment, of which they say many things incredible; as particularly, that when its feet are upon the earth, its head reaches the heavens, and when it stretches out its wings, they cover the body of the sun, Baba Bathra, fol. 73. col. 2. Targum and Kimchi in Psa. l. 10. Vajikra Rabba, Parash. 22. 4thly. After all this, shall be served up a variety of the most pleasant and delightful fruits, which are in the garden of Eden, which the Targumist here speaks of. And, lastly, The wine which will then be used will be generous old wine, which, as it is said here and elsewhere, was kept in the grape from the creation of the world, Zohar in Gen. fol. 81. 4. Targum Jon. in Gen. xxvii. 25. and Targum in Eccl. ix. 7. Something of this gross notion seems to have obtained among the Jews in the times of Christ; See Luke xiv. 15. Vide Buxtorf. Synagog. Jud. c. 50.

(c) These were four sections of the law, wrote on parchments, folded up in the skin of a clean beast, and tied to the head and hand. The four sections were these following, viz. The first was Exod. xiii. 2. to ver. 11. The second was Exod. xiii. 11. to ver. 17. The third was Deut. vi. 4. to ver. 10. The fourth was Deut. xi. 13, to ver. 22. Those that were for the head were written and rolled up separately, and put in four distinct places in one skin, which was fastened with strings to the crown of the head towards the face, about the place where the hair ends, and where an infant's brain is tender: and they take care to place them in the middle, that so they may be between the eyes. Those that were for the hand, were written in four columns, on one parchment, which upon my head, and have fixed the mezuzah, (d) on the right side of my door, in the third part thereof, over against my bed-chamber; so that the noxious spirits have no power to destroy me.

Verse 4. I charge you, O daughters of Jerusalem, &c.] The King Messiah shall say, I adjure you, O my people, the house of Israel, wherefore do ye stir up yourselves against the people of the earth to go out of captivity; and why do ye rebel against the army of Gog and (e) Magog? tarry a little while until the people which come up to make war against Jerusalem are destroyed; and after that the Lord of the world will remember unto you the mercies of the righteous, and then it will be his good pleasure to redeem you.

Verse 5. Who is this that cometh up from the wilderness, &c.] Solomon, the prophet, said, When the dead shall live, the mount of olives shall be (f) cleaved asunder, and all the dead of Israel shall come out from under it; yea, even the righteous, which die in captivity, shall pass through subterraneous (g) caverns, and come out from under the mount of olives: but the wicked which die and are buried in the land of Israel, shall be cast away, (h) as a man casts a stone with a sling; then all the inhabitants of the earth shall say, What is the righteousness of this people, which ascend out of the earth, even ten thousand times ten thousand, as in the day they came up out of the wilderness to the land of Israel, and are deliciously fed by the mercies of the Lord, as in the day when they were hid (i) under mount Sinai, to receive the law, and in that very hour Zion, which is the (k) mother of Israel, shall bring forth her sons, and Jerusalem receive the children of the captivity.

Verse 6. Set me as a seal upon thine heart, &c.] The children of Israel said in that day, unto their Lord, We pray Thee, set us as the signature of a ring upon Thine heart, as the signature of a ring upon Thine arm, that we may not be carried captive any more; for strong as death is the love of Thy Deity, and mighty as hell is the envy, which the people bear unto us; and the hatred which they have reserved for us is like to the coals of the fire of hell, (l) which the Lord created on the second (m) day of the crea-being rolled up, was fastened to the inside of the left arm, where it is fleshy, between the shoulder and the elbow, that so it might be over against the heart. These they call Tephillin, from the root פלל phalal, "to pray," because they use them in the time of prayer, and look upon them as useful to put them in mind of that duty; in Matt. xxiii. 5. they are called φυλακτηρια, phylacteries, because they think they keep men in the fear of God, are preservatives from sin, nay, from evil spirits, and against diseases of the body; they imagine there is a great deal of holiness in them, and value themselves much upon the use of them, Targum, Jon. Jarchi, and Baal Hatturim in Exod. xiii. 9, 10. and Deut. vi. 8. Maimon. Hilch. Tephilin, c. 1. s. 1. and c. 2. s. 1. and c. 3. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. and c. 4. 1, 2, 25. Matteh Dan. Dialog. 2. fol. 9. 4. and 10. 1. Vide Buxtorf. Synagog. Jud. c. 9. and Leo Modena's history of the rites, &c. of the present Jews, Par. 1. c. 11.

(d) These were two passages in the law, the one was Deut. vi. 4. to ver. 10. the other was Deut. xi. 13. to ver. 22. which were written on a piece of parchment in one column, which being rolled up and put into a pipe of reed or wood, was fastened to the right side of the door post; this they imagine was useful to put them in mind of the Divine Being, to preserve them from sin, and from evil spirits, Targum Jon. in Deut. vi. 9. Maimon. Hilch. Tephilin, c. 5. s. 1, 6. and 6. 13. Vide Buxtorf. Synagog. Jud. c. 31.

(e) Magog was one of the sons of Japhet, Gen. x. 2. from whom very probably the people called by those two names sprung, who seem to be the Scythians or Tartars; for Josephus Antiq. Jud. l. i. c. 7. calls the Scythians, Magogæ, and Hierapolis in Cælosyria, Pliny, Nat. Hist. l. 5. c. 23. says, was called by the Syrians Magog; and Marcus Paulus Venetus, l. 1. c. 64. says, that "the countries of Gog and Magog are in Tartary, which they call Jug, (perhaps rather Gug) and Mungug." Vide Schindler, Lex. Pent. fol. 288. mention is made of these in Ezek. xxxviii. and xxxix. Rev. xx. 8, 9. with which last text may be compared what the Targumist here says. The Jewish Rabbins, in their writings, very frequently speak of the war of Gog and Magog, which they expect in the days of the Messiah. See Mr. Mede's works, Book 1. disc. 48. p. 374. and Book 3. p. 713, 751.

(f) See Zech. xiv. 4.

(g) The Jews are of opinion, that those of their nation, who die and are buried in other lands, at the resurrection of the dead, shall not rise where they died and were buried: but shall be rolled through the caverns of the earth, into the land of Canaan, and there rise. This they call גלגול המתים golgol ha-metim, "the rolling of the dead," or גלגול המחילות golgol ha-machiloth, "the rolling through the caverns," which they represent as very painful and afflicting; and say that this was the reason that Jacob desired he might not be buried in Egypt; and is now one reason why the Jews are so desirous of returning to their own land: nay, at this time the more wealthy and religious among them, go thither on this very account, especially when advanced in years, that they may die and be buried there, and so escape this painful rolling under the earth, Bereshith Rabba, Parash. 96. Midrash Hannealam in Zohar in Gen. fol. 68. 4. Jarchi in Gen. xlvii. 29. Kimchi in Ezek. xxxvii. 12. Vide Buxtorf. Synagog. Jud. c. 3. and Lex. Talmud. fol. 439.

(h) Though the resurrection of the dead is one of the thirteen articles of the Jewish creed, yet many of them are of opinion, that it is peculiar to the righteous, and that the wicked shall have no share therein: but that their bodies perish with their souls at death, and shall never rise more, R. David Kimchi, in Psa. i. 5. and in Isa. xxvi. 19. R. Saadiah Gaon, in Dan. xii. 2. Vide Pocock. Not. Misc. c. 6. p. 180, &c.

(i) The Targumist here refers to a fabulous notion of the Jews, that when the people of Israel came to mount Sinai to receive the law, the Lord plucked up the mountain, and removed it into the air, and set the people under it, where he gave the law unto them; this they collect from Exod. xix. 17. and Deut. iv. 11. And this, they say, is the apple-tree under which the church is here said to be raised up, Targum Jon. Jarchi and Baal Hatturim in Exod. xix. 17. Jarchi and Shirhashirim Rabba in loc.

(k) So Jerusalem is said to be "the mother of us all," in Gal. iv. 26.

(l) גהנם gehinnom, "The valley of Hinnom," where the idolaters caused their children to pass through the fire to Moloch, and burnt them, 2 Chron. xxviii. 3. and xxxiii. 6. Jer. vii. 31. and xxxii. 35. R. David Kimchi in Psa. xxvii. 13. says, that Gehinnom was a very contemptible place near Jerusalem, where all manner of filthiness and dead carcasses were cast; and that a continual fire was kept there to burn them: hence the word is used very frequently by the Jewish Rabbins, to signify the place where the wicked are punished after death; and so the word γεεννα is used in the New Testament, see Matt. v. 22. and x. 28. and elsewhere.

(m) The same is asserted in Talmud Pesach. fol. 54. 1. Bereshith Rabba, Parash. 4. and 11. and 21. Shemoth Rabba, Parash. 15. Zohar in Deut. fol. 120. 1. Jarchi in Isa. xxx. 33. and yet at other times, tion of the world, to (n) burn therein those who commit idolatry.

Verse 7. Many waters cannot quench love, &c.] The Lord of the world said unto His people, the house of Israel, If all people, (o) which are like to the waters of the sea, which are many, were gathered together, they could not extinguish my love unto thee; and if all the kings of the earth, which are like to the waters of a river that runs fiercely, they could not remove thee out of the world: but if a man will give all the substance of his house to obtain wisdom in the captivity, I will return unto him (p) double in the world to come; and all the spoils (q) which they shall take from the armies of Gog shall be his.

Verse 8. We have a little sister, &c.] At that time the angels of heaven shall say one to another, We have one nation in the earth, and her righteousness is very little, and the kings and governors do not bring her forth to make war with the armies of Gog. What shall we do for our sister, in the day when the nations shall speak of going up against her to war?

Verse 9. If she be a wall, &c.] Michael, (r) the prince of Israel shall say, If she is fixed as a wall among the people, and gives silver to procure the (s) unity of the name of the Lord of the world, I and you, together with their scribes, will surround her, as borders of silver, that the people may have no power to rule over her, even as a worm hath no power to rule over silver; and though she (t) is poor in the commandments, we will seek mercies for her from the Lord, and the righteousness of the law shall be remembered to her, in which infants study, being written upon (u) the table of the heart, and is placed over against the nations as a cedar.

Verse 10. I am a wall, &c.] The congregation of Israel answered and said, I am strong in the words of the law, as a wall, and my sons are mighty as a tower, and at that time the congregation of Israel found mercy in the eyes of her Lord, and all the inhabitants of the earth asked of her welfare.

Verse 11. Solomon had a vineyard at Baal-hamon, &c.] One nation came up in the lot of the Lord of the world, (x) with whom is peace, which is like to a vineyard; (y) He placed it in Jerusalem, and delivered it into the hands of the kings of the house of David, who kept it as a vinedresser keeps his vineyard; after that Solomon king of Israel died, it was left in the hands of his son Rehoboam; Jeroboam the son of Nebat, came and divided the kingdom with him, and took out of his hands ten tribes, according to the word of Ahijah, of Shiloh, who was a great man.

Verse 12. My vineyard, which is mine, &c.] When Solomon, the king of Israel, heard the prophecy of Ahijah, of Shiloh, he sought to (z) kill him; but Ahijah fled from Solomon, and went into Egypt. And at that time king Solomon was informed, by prophecy, that he should rule over the ten tribes all his days: but after his death, Jeroboam the son of Nebat, should rule over them; and the two tribes, Judah and Benjamin, Rehoboam the son of Solomon, should reign over.

Verse 13. Thou that dwellest in the gardens, &c.] Solo-they reckon hell among the seven things which were created before the world was, Talmud Pesach. fol. 54. 1. and Nedarim. fol. 39. 2. Zohar in Lev. fol. 14. 4. Targum Jon. in Gen. iii. 24. See Matt. xxv. 41.

(n) The punishment of the wicked in hell is very frequently expressed by Jewish writers, by their burning in fire and brimstone, Bereshith Rabba, Parash. 6. and 51. Zohar in Gen. fol. 71. 3. Raya Mehimna in ibid. in Lev. fol. 7. 2. Targum Jon. and Jerus. in Gen. iii. 24. Targum Jerus. in Gen. xv. 12. Targum in Eccles. viii. 10. and x. 11. Targum in Isa. xxxiii. 14. R. David Kimchi in Isa. xxx. 33. Thus idolaters, with others are said to "have their part in the lake, which burneth with fire and brimstone." Rev. xxi. 8.

(o) So the words are explained in Shemoth Rabba, Parash. 49. Bemidbar Rabba, Parash. 2. Zohar in Numb. fol. 105. 3. Raya Mehimna, in ibid. in Gen. fol. 51. 3. Shirhashirim Rabba, Jarchi and Aben Ezra in loc.

(p) See Mark x. 30. Luke xviii. 30.

(q) See Ezek. xxxix. 9, 10.

(r) See Dan. x. 13. 21. and xii. 1. The Jews suppose that every nation or kingdom has an angel set over it to be its president, protector, and defender, and that Michael was he that presided over Israel.

(s) i. e. The knowledge of the unity of God. The doctrine of the unity of the Divine Being is the second article of the Jewish creed, where they say that "God is one, and that there is no unity in any respect like His;" this they very much magnify and extol. Hence they often have those words in their mouths, "Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord," Deut. vi. 4. which, they think, is entirely inconsistent with a Trinity of Persons. Hence says Maimonides, Hilch. Yesod Hattorah, c. 1. s. 4. "This God is one, not two, or more than two; but one. For there is no unity like His, in any of the individuals, which are found in the world; neither is He one in species, which comprehends more individuals; nor one in body, which is divided into parts and extremes: but He is so one, that there is no other unity like it in the world." All which is not so much opposed to the polytheism of the heathens, as to the plurality of Persons in the Trinity, and the incarnation of Christ. But though modern Jews have exploded the doctrine of the Trinity, as inconsistent with that of the unity of the Divine Being; yet their more ancient writers do very manifestly speak of it, as the great mystery of faith, Zohar, edit. Sultzbac. in Gen. fol. 1. col. 3. and in Exod. fol. 18. 3. 4. and fol. 58. 1. and fol. 66. 2, 3. and in Lev. fol. 27. 2. and in Num. fol. 67. 3. Jetzira, edit. Rittangel, fol. 1. 4. 6. 38, 64. Vide Josep. de Voisin. Disp. Theolog. de S. Trinitate, Allix's judgment of the Jewish church, against the Unitarians, c. 9, 10, 11.

(t) In Raya Mehimna in Zohar in Exod. fol. 38. 3. it is said, that "no man is poor but he that is so in the law, and in the commandments," and that "the riches of a man lies in them;" and in Vajikra Rabba, Parash. 34. where those words in Prov. xxii. 2. "The rich and poor meet together," are mentioned. It is said, "The rich is he that is rich in the law, and the poor is he that is poor in the law;" See also Zohar in Numb. fol. 91. 3. with all which compare 1 Tim. vi. 18.

(u) See note in chap. iv. 9.

(x) In Shirhashirim Rabba in loc. it is explained the same way; R. Aben Ezra, by Solomon, in the next verse understands the King Messiah; though it is interpreted of Solomon, king of Israel, by the Targum; and Jarchi in loc. by Maimon. Yesod. Hattorah, c. 6. s. 12. and in Zohar in Exod. fol. 91. 3.

(y) So it is explained of the people of Israel, under the government of Solomon, in Shirhashirim Rabba, and by Jarchi and Aben Ezra in loc.

(z) This is a very great mistake of the Targumist, for it was Jeroboam, and not Ahijah, who fled into Egypt, whom Solomon sought to kill; See 1 Kings xi. 40.

mon said at the end of his prophecy, The Lord of the world shall say to the congregation of Israel, in the end of days, O thou congregation of Israel, which art like to a garden highly esteemed of among the nations, and sits in the school with the companions of the Sanhedrim, and the rest of the people, which hearken to the voice of the chief of the school, and learn from his mouth his words, cause me to hear the law, the voice of thy words, when thou sittest to justify and condemn, and I will consent to whatever thou dost.

Verse 14. Make haste, my beloved, &c.] In that very hour the elders of the congregation of Israel shall say, Flee, O my beloved, the Lord of the world, from this defiled earth, and cause Thy Shechinah to dwell in the highest heavens, and in the time of straights, when we pray before Thee, be Thou like a roe, which when it sleeps, (a) has one eye shut, and the other eye open; or as a young hart, which when it flees, looks behind it; so do Thou look upon us, and consider our sorrow and our affliction, from the highest heavens, until the time comes that Thou wilt take pleasure in us, and redeem us, and bring us to the mountain of Jerusalem, where the priests shall offer up before Thee the sweet incense.

(a) The same is mentioned in Shirhashirim Rabba in loc.

THE firmament is obscured by clouds, the woodlands are black with Tamála[1] trees.
That youth who roves in the forest must be fearful in the gloom of night.
Go, my daughter; bring the wanderer home to my rustic mansion.
Such was the command of NANDA,[2] the fortunate herdsman; and hence arose the loves of RADHA[3] and MADHAVA,[4] who sported on the bank of Yamunà,[5] or hastened eagerly to the secret bower.
If thy soul be delighted with the remembrance of HERI,[6] or sensible to the raptures of love, listen to the voice of JAYADEVA, whose notes are both sweet and brilliant.
O thou who reclinest on the bosom of CAMALA,[7] whose ears flame with gems, and whose locks are embellished with sylvan flowers;
Thou from whom the day star derived his effulgence, who showedst the venom-breathing CALIYA,[8] who beamedst like a sun on the tribe of YADU,[9] that flourished like a lotos;
Thou, who sittest on the plumage of GARURA,[10] who, by subduing demons, gavest exquisite joy to the assembly of immortals;
Thou, for whom the daughter of JANACA[11] was decked in gay apparel, by whom DUSHANA[12] was overthrown;
Thou, whose eye sparkles like the water lily, who calledst three worlds into existence;
Thou, by whom the rocks of Mandar[13] were easily supported; who sippest nectar from the radiant lips of PEDMA,[14] as the fluttering Chacora[15] drinks the moon-beams;

Be victorious, O HERI, lord of conquest.

RADHA sought him long in vain, and her thoughts were confounded by the fever of desire.
She was roving in the vernal season, among the twining Vasanti's[16] covered with soft blossoms, when a damsel thus addressed her with youthful hilarity:
The gale that has wantoned round the beautiful clove plant breathes from the hill of MAYLAYA;[17]
The circling arbours resound with the notes of the Cocila,[18] and the murmurs of honey-making swarms;
Now the hearts of damsels, whose lovers are travelling at a distance, are pierced with anguish;
While the blossoms of Bacul[19] are conspicuous among the flowrets covered with bees.

The Tamāla, with leaves dark and fragrant, claims a tribute from the musk, which it vanquishes ;
And the clustering flowers of the Cinsuca[20] resembling the nails of Cáma,[21] with which he rends the hearts of the young
The full blown Césara[22] gleams like the sceptre of the world's monarch, love ;
And the pointed thyrsus of the Cétaci[23] resembles the darts by which lovers are wounded.
See the bunches of Pătalí,[24] flowers filled with bees, like the quiver of Smara[25] full of shafts ;
While the tender blossom of the Caruna[26] smiles to see the whole world laying shame aside.
The far-scented Mādhavi[27] beautifies the trees, round which it twines ;
And the fresh Mālica[28] seduces with rich perfume even the hearts of hermits ;
While the Amra[29] tree with blooming tresses is embraced by the gay creeper Atimucta,[30]
And the blue streams of Yamuna wind round the groves of Vrindāvan.[31]
In this charming season, which gives pain to separated lovers,
Young Heri sports and dances with a company of damsels.
A breeze, like the breath of love, from the fragrant flowers of the Cétaci, kindles every heart.
Whilst it perfumes the woods with the prolific dust, which it shakes from the Mallica[32] with half-opened buds ;
And the Cócila bursts into song, when he sees the blossoms glistening on the lovely Rasála."[33]
The jealous Radha gave no answer ;
And, soon after, her officious friend, perceiving the foe of Mura[34] in the forest, eager for the rapturous embraces of the herdsman's daughters, with whom he was dancing,
Thus again addressed his forgotten mistress :
" With a garland of wild flowers, descending even to the yellow mantle that girds his azure limbs,
Distinguished by smiling cheeks, and by earrings that sparkle as he plays,
Heri exults in the assemblage of amorous damsels.
One of them presses him with her swelling breast, while she warbles with exquisite melody.
Another, affected by a glance from his eye, stands meditating on the lotos of his face.
A third, on pretence of whispering a secret in his ear, approaches his temples, and kisses them with ardour.
One seizes his mantle, and draws him towards her, pointing to the bower on the banks of Yamuna, where elegant Vanjulas[35] interweave their branches.
He applauds another who dances in the sportive circle, whilst her bracelets ring, as she beats time with her palms.
Now he caresses one, and kisses another, smiling on a third with complacency ;
And now he chases her, whose beauty has most allured him.
Thus the wanton Heri frolics, in the season of sweets, among the maids of Vraja,[36]
Who rush to his embraces, as if he were pleasure itself assuming a human form ;
And one of them, under a pretext of hymning his divine perfections, whispers in his ear.
' Thy lips, my beloved, are nectar.' "

PART II.

Radha remains in the forest : but, resenting the promiscuous passion of Heri, and his neglect of her beauty, which he once thought superior,
She retires to a bower of twining plants, the summit of which resounds with the humming of swarms engaged in their sweet labours ;
And there, fallen languid on the ground, she thus addresses her female companion.
" Though he take recreation in my absence, and smile on all around him,
Yet my soul remembers him, whose beguiling reed modulates an air sweetened by the nectar of his quivering lip.
While his ear sparkles with gems, and his eye darts amorous glances ;
Him, whose locks are decked with the plumes of peacocks resplendent with many coloured moons ;
And whose mantle gleams like a dark blue cloud illumined with rainbows ;
Him, whose graceful smile gives new lustre to his lips, brilliant and soft as a dewy leaf, sweet and ruddy as the blossom of Bandhujíva,[37]

While they tremble with eagerness to kiss the daughters of the herdsmen ;
Him, who disperses the gloom with beams from the jewels which decorate his bosom, his wrists, and his ankles.
On whose forehead shines a circlet of sandal wood, which makes even the moon contemptible, when it moves through irradiated clouds ;
Him, whose earrings are formed of entire gems in the shape of the fish Macara[38] on the banners of love,
Even the yellow robed god, whose attendants are the chiefs of deities, of holy men, and of demons ;
Him who reclines under a gay Cadumba-tree,[39] who formerly delighted me while he gracefully waved in the dance,
And all his soul sparkled in his eye.
My weak mind thus enumerates his qualities ; and, though offended, strives to banish offence.
What else can it do ? It cannot part with its affection for Crishna, whose love is excited by other damsels, and who sports in the absence of Radha.
Bring, O my sweet friend, that vanquisher of the demon Cesi,[40] to sport with me, who am repairing to a secret bower,
Who look timidly on all sides, who meditate with amorous fancy on his divine transfiguration.
Bring him, whose discourse was once composed of the gentlest words, to converse with me, who am bashful on his first approach,
And express my thoughts with a smile sweet as honey.
Bring him, who formerly slept on my bosom, to recline with me on a green bed of leaves just gathered, while his lips shed dew, and my arms enfold him.
Bring him, who has attained the perfection of skill in love's art, whose hand used to press these firm and delicate spheres, to play with me,
Whose voice rivals that of the Cócila, and whose tresses are bound with waving blossoms.
Bring him, who formerly drew me by the locks to his embrace, to repose with me whose feet tinkle, as they move, with rings of gold and of gems,
Whose loosened zone sounds, as it falls ; and whose limbs are slender and flexible as the creeping plant.
That god, whose cheeks are beautified by the nectar of his smiles,
Whose pipe drops in his ecstasy from his hand, I saw in the grove encircled by the damsels of Vrája, who gazed on him askance from the corners of their eyes.
I saw him in the grove with happier damsels, yet the sight of him delighted me.
Soft is the gale which breathes over yon clear pool, and expands the clustering blossoms of the voluble Asóca.[41]
Soft, yet grievous to me in the absence of the foe of Madhu.
Delightful are the flowers of Amra trees on the mountain top, while the murmuring bees pursue their voluptuous toil ;
Delightful, yet afflicting to me, O friend, in the absence of the youthful Césáva.

PART III.

Mean time, the destroyer of Cansa,[42] having brought to his remembrance the amiable Radha, forsook the beautiful damsels of Vrája :
He sought her in all parts of the forest ; his old wound from love's arrow bled again ;
He repented of his levity ; and seated in a bower near the bank of Yamuna, the blue daughter of the sun,
Thus poured forth his lamentation.
" She is departed,—she saw me, no doubt, surrounded by the wanton shepherdesses,
Yet, conscious of my fault, I durst not intercept her flight.
Wo is me ! she feels a sense of injured honour, and is departed in wrath.
How will she conduct herself ? How will she express her pain in so long a separation ?
What is wealth to me ? What are numerous attendants ?
What are the pleasures of the world ? What joy can I receive from a heavenly abode ?
I seem to behold her face with eyebrows contracting themselves through a just resentment ;
It resembles a fresh lotos, over which two black bees are fluttering.
I seem, so present is she to my imagination, even now to caress her with eagerness.

Why then do I seek her in this forest? why do I lament her without cause?
O slender damsel, I know that anger has torn thy soft bosom;
But whither thou art retired that I know not.
How can I invite thee to return?
Thou art seen by me, indeed, in a vision; thou seemest to move before me.
Ah! why dost thou not rush, as before, to my embrace?
Do but forgive me: never again will I commit a similar offence.
Grant me but a sight of thee, O lovely Radhica; for my passion torments me.
I am not the terrible Mâhêsa,[43] a garland of water lilies with subtile filaments decks my shoulders: not serpents, with twisted folds.
The blue petals of the lotos glitter on my neck, not the azure gleam of poison:
Powdered sandal wood is sprinkled on my limbs; not pale ashes.
O god of love, mistake me not for Mahadeva.[44]
Wound me not again; approach me not in anger;
I love already but too passionately; yet I have lost my beloved.
Hold not in thy hand that shaft barbed with an Amra flower.
Brace not thy bow, O conqueror of the world. Is it valour to slay one who faints?
My heart is already pierced by arrows from Rádhâ's eyes, black and keen as those of an antelope;
Yet my eyes are not gratified with her presence.
Her eyes are full of shafts; her eyebrows are bows; and the tips of her ears are silken strings.
Thus armed by Ananga,[45] the god of desire, she marches, herself a goddess, to ensure his triumph over the vanquished universe.
I meditate on her delightful embrace, on the ravishing glances darted from her eye;
On the fragrant lotos of her mouth, on her nectar-dropping speech,
On her lips, ruddy as the berries of the Bimba[46] plant;
Yet even my fixed meditation on such an assemblage of charms increases, instead of alleviating the misery of separation.

PART IV.

The damsel commissioned by RADHA, found the disconsolate god under an arbour of spreading Vâniras by the side of Yamunâ; where, presenting herself gracefully before him, she thus described the affliction of his beloved:
She despises essence of sandal wood, and even by moonlight sits brooding over her gloomy sorrow;
She declares the gale of Malaya to be venom; and the sandal trees, through which it has breathed, to have been the haunt of serpents.
Thus, O MADHAVA, is she afflicted in thy absence with the pain which love's dart has occasioned: her soul is fixed on thee.
Fresh arrows of desire are continually assailing her, and she forms a net of lotos leaves as armour for her heart, which thou alone shouldst fortify.
She makes her own bed of the arrows darted by the flowery shafted god: but when she hoped for thy embrace, she had formed for thee a couch of soft blossoms.
Her face is like a water-lily, vailed in the dew of tears; and her eyes appear like moons eclipsed, which let fall their gathered nectar through pain caused by the tooth of the furious dragon.
She draws thy image with musk in the character of the deity with five shafts, having subdued the Macar, or horned shark, and holding an arrow tipped with an Amra flower; thus she draws thy picture, and worships it.
At the close of every sentence, O MADHAVA, she exclaims, At thy feet am I fallen, and in thy absence even the moon, though it be a vase full of nectar, inflames my limbs.
Then by the power of imagination she figures thee standing before her; thee who art not easily attained;
She sighs, she smiles, she mourns, she weeps, she moves from side to side, she laments and rejoices by turns.
Her abode is a forest; the circle of her female companions is a net;

Her sighs are flames of fire kindled in a thicket; herself (alas! through thy absence) is become a timid roe; and love is the tiger, who springs on her like YAMA, the genius of death.
So emaciated is her beautiful body, that even the light garland which waves over her bosom she thinks a load.
Such, O bright haired god, is RADHA when thou art absent.
If powder of Sandal-wood finely levigated be moistened and applied to her bosom, she starts and mistakes it for poison.
Her sighs form a breeze long extended, and burn her like the flame which reduced CANDARPA[47] to ashes.
She throws around her eyes, like blue water-lilies with broken stalks, dropping lucid streams.
Even her bed of tender leaves appears in her sight like a kindled fire.
The palm of her hand supports her aching temple, motionless as the crescent rising at eve.
HERI, HERI, thus in silence she meditates on thy name, as if her wish were gratified, and she were dying through thy absence.
She rends her locks; she pants; she laments inarticulately;
She trembles; she pines; she muses; she moves from place to place; she closes her eyes;
She falls; she rises again; she faints: in such a fever of love, she may live, O celestial physician, if thou administer the remedy;
But shouldst thou be unkind, her malady will be desperate.
Thus, O divine healer, by the nectar of thy love must RADHA be restored to health; and, if thou refuse it, thy heart must be harder than the thunder stone.
Long has her soul pined, and long has she been heated with sandal wood, moonlight, and water-lilies, with which others are cooled;
Yet she patiently and in secret meditates on thee, who alone canst relieve her.
Shouldst thou be inconstant, how can she, wasted as she is to a shadow, support life a single moment?
How can she, who lately could not endure thy absence even for an instant, forbear sighing now, when she looks with half-closed eyes on the Rasála with blooming branches, which remind her of the vernal season, when she first beheld thee with rapture?
Here have I chosen my abode: go quickly to RADHA; sooth her with my message, and conduct her hither.
So spoke the foe of MADHU[48] to the anxious damsel, who hastened back, and thus addressed her companion:
Whilst a sweet breeze from the hills of Malaya comes wafting on his plumes the young god of desire;
While many a flower points his extended petals to pierce the bosoms of separated lovers,
The deity crowned with sylvan blossoms laments, O friend, in thy absence.
Even the dewy rays of the moon burn him; and as the shaft of love is descending, he mourns inarticulately with increasing distraction.
When the bees murmur softly, he covers his ears;
Misery sits fixed in his heart, and every returning night adds anguish to anguish.
He quits his radiant palace for the wild forest, where he sinks on a bed of cold clay, and frequently mutters thy name.
In yon bower, to which the pilgrims of love are used to repair, he meditates on thy form, repeating in silence some enchanting word, which once dropped from thy lips, and thirsting for the nectar which they alone can supply.
Delay not, O loveliest of women; follow the lord of thy heart: behold, he seeks the appointed shade, bright with the ornaments of love, and confident of the promised bliss.
Having bound his locks with forest flowers, he hastens to yon arbour, where a soft gale breathes over the banks of Yamuna:
There, again pronouncing thy name, he modulates his divine reed.
Oh! with what rapture doth he gaze on the golden dust, which the breeze shakes from expanded blossoms:
The breeze which has kissed thy cheek!
With a mind, languid as a drooping wing, feeble as a trembling leaf, he doubtfully expects thy approach, and timidly looks on the path which thou must tread.
Leave behind thee, O friend, the ring which tinkles on the delicate ankle, when thou sportest in the dance;
Hastily cast over thee thy azure mantle, and run to the gloomy bower.
The reward of thy speed, O thou who sparklest like lightning, will be to shine on the blue bosom of MURARI.[49]
Which resembles a vernal cloud, decked with a string of pearls like a flock of white-water birds fluttering in the air.
Disappoint not, O thou lotos-eyed, the vanquisher of MADHU; accomplish his desire.
But go quickly: it is night; and the night also will quickly depart.
Again and again he sighs; he looks around: he re-enters the arbour; he can scarce articulate thy sweet name;

He again smooths his flowery couch ; he looks wild ; he becomes frantic ; thy beloved will perish through desire.
The bright-beamed god sinks in the west, and thy pain of separation may also be removed ;
The blackness of the night is increased, and the passionate imagination of GOVINDA [50] has acquired additional gloom.
My address to thee has equalled in length and in sweetness the song of the Cócila : delay will make thee miserable, O my beautiful friend.
Seize the moment of delight in the place of assignation with the son of DEVACI,[51] who descended from heaven to remove the burdens of the universe.
He is a blue gem on the forehead of the three worlds, and longs to sip honey like the bee from the fragrant lotos of thy cheek.
But the solicitous maid, perceiving that RADHA was unable ; through debility, to move from her arbour of flowery creepers, returned to GOVINDA, who was himself disordered with love, and thus described her situation.
She mourns, O sovereign of the world, in her verdant bower ;
She looks eagerly on all sides in hope of thy approach ; then, gaining strength from the delightful idea of the proposed meeting, she advances a few steps, and falls languid on the ground.
When she rises, she weaves bracelets of fresh leaves ; she dresses herself like her beloved, and looking at herself in sport, exclaims,—"Behold the vanquisher of MADHU !"
Then she repeats again and again the name of HERI, and catching at a dark blue cloud, strives to embrace it, saying, "It is my beloved who approaches."
Thus, while thou art dilatory, she lies expecting thee ; she mourns ; she weeps ; she puts on her gayest ornaments to receive her lord ;
She compresses her deep sighs within her bosom ; and, then meditating on thee, O cruel, she is drowned in a sea of rapturous imaginations.
If a leaf but quiver, she supposes thee arrived ; she spreads her couch ; she forms in her mind a hundred modes of delight ;
Yet, if thou go not to her bower, she must die this night through excessive anguish.

PART V.

By this time the moon spread a net of beams over the groves of Vrindavan,
And looked like a drop of liquid sandal on the face of the sky, which smiled like a beautiful damsel ;
While its orb with many spots betrayed, as it were, a consciousness of guilt, in having often attended amorous maids to the loss of their family honour.
The moon, with a black fawn couched on its disk, advanced in its nightly course.
But MADHAVA had not advanced to the bower of RADHA, who thus bewailed his delay with notes of varied lamentations.
The appointed moment is come ; but HERI, alas ! comes not to the grove.
Must the season of my unblemished youth pass thus idly away ?
Oh ! what refuge can I seek, deluded as I am by the guile of my female adviser ?
The god with five arrows has wounded my heart ; and I am deserted by him, for whose sake I have sought at night the darkest recess of the forest.
Since my best beloved friends have deceived me, it is my wish to die ;
Since my senses are disordered, and my bosom is on fire,—why stay I longer in this world ?
The coolness of this vernal night gives me pain, instead of refreshment.
Some happier damsel enjoys my beloved : whilst I, alas ! am looking at the gems of my bracelets, which are blackened by the flames of my passion.
My neck, more delicate than the tenderest blossom, is hurt by the garland that encircles it :
Flowers are, indeed, the arrows of love, and he plays with them cruelly.
I make this wood my dwelling : I regard not the roughness of the Vétas trees ;
But the destroyer of MADHU holds me not in his remembrance !
Why comes he not to the bower of blooming Vanjulas, assigned for meeting ?
Some ardent rival, no doubt, keeps him locked in her embrace.
Or have his companions detained him with mirthful recreations ?

Else why roams he not through the cool shades ?
Perhaps, through weakness, the heart sick lover is unable to advance even a step !
So saying, she raised her eyes ; and, seeing her damsel return silent and mournful, unaccompanied by MADHAVA, she was alarmed even to phrensy ;
And, as if she actually beheld him in the arms of a rival, she thus described the vision which overpowered her intellect.
Yes, in habiliments becoming the war of love, and with tresses waving like flowery banners,
A damsel, more alluring than RADHA, enjoys the conqueror of MADHU.
Her form is transfigured by the touch of her divine lover ; her garland quivers over her swelling bosom ;
Her face like the moon is graced with clouds of dark hair, and trembles while she quaffs the nectareous dew of his lip :
Her bright earrings dance over her cheeks, which they irradiate ; and the small bells on her girdle tinkle as she moves
Bashful at first, she smiles at length on her embracer, and expresses her joy with inarticulate murmurs ;
While she floats on the waves of desire, and closes her eyes dazzled with the blaze of approaching CAMA :
And now this heroine in love's warfare falls, exhausted and vanquished by the resistless MURARI.
But alas ! in my bosom prevails the flame of jealousy, and yon moon, which dispels the sorrow of others, increases mine.
See again, where the foe of MURA sports in yon grove on the bank of the Yamuna.
See how he kisses the lip of my rival, and imprints on her forehead an ornament of pure musk, black as the young antelope on the lunar orb !
Now, like the husband of RETI,[52] he fixes white blossoms on her dark locks, where they gleam like flashes of lightning among the curled clouds.
On her breasts, like two firmaments, he places a string of gems like a radiant constellation.
He binds on her arms, graceful as the stalks of the water-lily, and adorned with hands glowing like the petals of its flower, a bracelet of sapphires, which resembles a cluster of bees.
Ah ! see how he ties round her waist a rich girdle illumined with golden bells,
Which seem to laugh, as they tinkle, at the inferior brightness of the leafy garlands, which lovers hang on their bowers to propitiate the god of desire.
He places her soft foot, as he reclines by her side, on his ardent bosom, and stains it with the ruddy hue of Yavaca.
Say, my friend, why pass I my nights in this tangled forest without joy, and without hope,
While the faithless brother of HALADHERA clasps my rival in his arms ?
Yet why, my companion, shouldst thou mourn, though my perfidious youth has disappointed me ?
What offence is it of thine, if he sport with a crowd of damsels happier than I ?
Mark, how my soul, attracted by his irresistible charms, bursts from its mortal frame, and rushes to mix with its beloved.
She, whom the god enjoys, crowned with sylvan flowers,
Sits carelessly on a bed of leaves with him, whose wanton eyes resemble blue water-lilies agitated by the breeze.
She feels no flame from the gales of Malaya with him, whose words are sweeter than the water of life.
She derides the shafts of soul-born CAMA with him, whose lips are like a red lotos in full bloom.
She is cooled by the moon's dewy beams, while she reclines with him, whose hands and feet glow like vernal flowers.
No female companion deludes her, while she sports with him, whose vesture blazes like tried gold.
She faints not through excess of passion, while she caresses that youth, who surpasses in beauty the inhabitants of all worlds.
O gale, scented with sandal, who breathest love from the regions of the south, be propitious but for a moment
When thou hast brought my beloved before my eyes, thou mayest freely waft away my soul.
Love, with eyes like blue water-lilies, again assails me, and triumphs ;
And, while the perfidy of my beloved rends my heart, my female friend is my foe ;
The cool breeze scorches me like a flame, and the nectar-dropping moon is my poison
Bring disease and death, O gale of Malaya ! Seize my spirit, O god with five arrows !
I ask not mercy from thee : no more will I dwell in the cottage of my father.
Receive me in thy azure waves, O sister of YAMA,[53] that the ardour of my heart may be allayed

PART VI.

Pierced by the arrows of love, she passed the night in the agonies of despair, and at early dawn thus rebuked her lover, whom she saw lying prostrate before her, and imploring her forgiveness.

Alas! alas! go, MADHAVA, depart, O CESAVA,[54] speak not the language of guile;

Follow, her, O lotos-eyed god, follow her, who dispels thy care.

Look at his eye half-opened, red with continual waking through the pleasurable night, yet smiling still with affection for my rival!

Thy teeth, O cerulean youth, are azure as thy complexion from the kisses which thou hast imprinted on the beautiful eyes of thy darling, graced with dark blue powder;

And thy limbs marked with punctures in love's warfare exhibit a letter of conquest written on polished sapphires with liquid gold.

That broad bosom, stained by the bright lotos of her foot, displays a vesture of ruddy leaves over the tree of thy heart, which trembles within it.

The pressure of her lip on thine, wounds me to the soul.

Ah! how canst thou assert that we are one, since our sensations differ thus widely?

Thy soul, O dark-limbed god, shows its blackness externally.

How couldst thou deceive a girl who relied on thee; a girl who burned in the fever of love?

Thou rovest in the woods, and females are thy prey:—what wonder?

Even thy childish heart was malignant; and thou gavest death to the nurse, who would have given thee milk.

Since thy tenderness for me, of which these forests used to talk, has now vanished;

And since thy breast, reddened by the feet of my rival, glows as if thy ardent passion for her were bursting from it,

The sight of thee, O deceiver, makes me (ah! must I say it?) blush at my own affection.

Having thus inveighed against her beloved, she sat overwhelmed in grief, and silently meditated on his charms; when her damsel softly addressed her.

He is gone: the light air has wafted him away. What pleasure now, my beloved, remains in thy mansion?

Continue not, resentful woman, thy indignation against the beautiful MADHAVA,

Why shouldst thou render vain those round smooth vases, ample and ripe as the sweet fruit of yon Tala tree?

How often and how recently have I said, Forsake not the blooming HERI?

Why sittest thou so mournful? Why weepest thou with distraction, when the damsels are laughing around thee?

Thou hast formed a couch of soft lotos leaves: let thy darling charm thy sight, while he reposes on it.

Afflict not thy soul with extreme anguish: but attend to my words, which conceal no guile.

Suffer CESAVA to approach; let him speak with exquisite sweetness, and dissipate all thy sorrows.

If thou art harsh to him, who is amiable; if thou art proudly silent, when he deprecates thy wrath with lowly prostrations;

If thou showest aversion to him, who loves thee passionately; if, when he bends before thee, thy face be turned contemptuously away;

By the same rule of contrariety the dust of sandal-wood, which thou hast sprinkled, may become poison;

The moon, with cool beams, a scorching sun; the fresh dew, a consuming flame; and the sports of love be changed into agony.

MADHAVA was not absent long; he returned to his beloved; whose cheeks are heated by the sultry gale of her sighs.

Her anger was diminished, not wholly abated: but she secretly rejoiced at his return, while the shades of night also were approaching.

She looked abashed at her damsel, while he, with faltering accents implored her forgiveness.

Speak but one mild word, and the rays of thy sparkling teeth will dispel the gloom of my fears.

My trembling lips, like thirsty Chacoras, long to drink the moon-beams of thy cheek.

O my darling who art naturally so tender-hearted, abandon thy causeless indignation.

At this moment the flame of desire consumes my heart. Oh! grant me a draught of honey from the lotos of thy mouth.

Or, if thou beest inexorable, grant me death from the arrows of thy keen eyes;

Make thy arms my chains; and punish me according to thy pleasure.

Thou art my life; thou art my ornament; thou art a pearl in the ocean of my mortal birth:

Oh! be favourable now, and my heart shall eternally be grateful.

Thine eyes, which nature formed like blue water-lilies, are become, through thy resentment, like petals of the crimson lotos.

Oh! tinge with their effulgence these my dark limbs, that they may glow like the shafts of love tipped with flowers.
Place on my head that foot like a fresh leaf; and shade me from the sun of my passion, whose beams I am unable to bear.
Spread a string of gems on those two soft globes; let the golden bells of thy zone tinkle, and proclaim the mild edict of love.
Say, O damsel, with delicate speech, shall I dye red with the juice of Alactaca those beautiful feet, which will make the full blown land lotos blush with shame?
Abandon thy doubts of my heart, now indeed fluttering through fear of thy displeasure, but hereafter to be fixed wholly on thee;
A heart, which has no room in it for another: none else can enter it, but love, the bodiless god.
Let him wing his arrows; let him wound me mortally; decline not, O cruel, the pleasure of seeing me expire.
Thy face is bright as the moon, though its beams drop the venom of maddening desire;
Let thy nectareous lip be the charmer, who alone has power to lull the serpent, or supply an antidote for his poison.
Thy silence afflicts me: oh! speak with the voice of music, and let thy sweet accents allay my ardour.
Abandon thy wrath: but abandon not a lover, who surpasses in beauty the sons of men, and who kneels before thee, O thou most beautiful among women.
Thy lips are a Bandhujiva flower; the lustre of the Madhuca[55] beams on thy cheek;
Thine eye outshines the blue lotos; thy nose is a bud of the Tila;[56] the Cunda[57] blossom yields to thy teeth;
Thus the flowery shafted god borrows from thee the points of his darts, and subdues the universe.
Surely, thou descendest from heaven, O slender damsel, attended by a company of youthful goddesses; and all their beauties are collected in thee.

PART VII.

He spake; and, seeing her appeased by his homage, flew to his bower, clad in a gay mantle.
The night now veiled all visible objects; and the damsel thus exhorted Radha, while she decked her with beaming ornaments;
Follow, gentle RADHICA, follow the son of MADHU;
His discourse was elegantly composed of sweet phrases; he prostrated himself at thy feet, and he now hastens to his delightful couch by yon grove of branching Vanjalas.
Bind round thy ankle rings beaming with gems; and advance with mincing steps, like the pearl-fed Marala.
Drink with ravished ears the soft accents of HERI; and feast on love, while the warbling Cocilas obeys the mild ordinance of the flower-darting god.
Abandon delay: see, the whole assembly of slender plants, pointing to the bower with fingers of young leaves agitated by the gale, make signals for thy departure.
Ask those two round hillocks, which receive pure dew-drops from the garland playing on thy neck, and the buds whose tops start aloft with the thought of thy darling;
Ask, and they will tell, that thy soul is intent on the warfare of love:
Advance fervid warrior, advance with alacrity, while the sound of thy tinkling waist-bells shall represent martial music.
Lead with thee some favoured maid; grasp her hand with thine, whose fingers are long and smooth as love's arrows.
March; and with the noise of thy bracelets proclaim thy approach to the youth, who will own himself thy slave.
She will come; she will exult in beholding me; she will pour accents of delight;
She will enfold me with eager arms; she will melt with affection.
Such are his thoughts at this moment; and, thus thinking, he looks through the long avenue;
He trembles; he rejoices; he burns; he moves from place to place; he faints, when he sees thee not coming, and falls in his gloomy bower.
The night now dresses in habiliments fit for secrecy the many damsels, who hasten to their places of assignation;
She sets off with blackness their beautiful eyes; fixes dark Tamala leaves behind their ears;
Decks their locks with the deep azure of water lilies, and sprinkles musk on their panting bosoms.
The nocturnal sky, black as the touchstone, tries the gold of their affections,
And is marked with rich lines from the flashes of their beauty, in which they surpass the brightest Cashmirians.

Radha, thus incited, tripped through the forest : but shame overpowered her, when, by the light of innumerable gems, on the arms, the neck, and the feet of her beloved ;

She saw him at the door of his flowery mansion ; then her damsel again addressed her with ardent exultation.

Enter, sweet Radha, the bower of Heri ; seek delight, O thou whose bosom laughs with the foretaste of happiness.

Enter, sweet Radha, the bower graced with a bed of Asoca leaves ; seek delight, O thou, whose garland leaps with joy on thy breast.

Enter, sweet Radha, the bower illumined with gay blossoms ; seek delight, O thou, whose limbs far excel them in softness.

Enter, O Radha, the bower made cool and fragrant by gales from the woods of Malaya ; seek delight, O thou, whose amorous lays are softer than breezes.

Enter, O Radha, the bower spread with leaves of twining creepers ; seek delight, O thou, whose arms have been long inflexible.

Enter, O Radha, the bower which resounds with the murmur of honey-making bees ; seek delight, O thou, whose embrace yields more exquisite sweetness.

Enter, O Radha, the bower attuned by the melodious band of Cocilas ; seek delight, O thou, whose lips, which outshine the grains of the pomegranate, are embellished, when thou speakest, by the brightness of thy teeth.

Long has he borne thee in his mind ; and now, in an agony of desire, he pants to taste nectar from thy lip.

Deign to restore thy slave, who will bend before the lotos of thy foot, and press it to his irradiated bosom ;

A slave, who acknowledges himself bought by thee for a single glance from thy eye, and a toss of thy disdainful eyebrow.

She ended ; and Radha with timid joy, darting her eyes on Govinda, while she musically sounded the rings of her ankles and the bells of her zone, entered the mystic bower of her only beloved.

There she beheld her Madhava, who delighted in her alone ;

Who so long had sighed for her embrace ; and whose countenance then gleamed with excessive rapture.

His heart was agitated by her sight, as the waves of the deep are affected by the lunar orb.

His azure breast glittered with pearls of unblemished lustre, like the full bed of the cerulean Yamuna, interspersed with curls of white foam.

From his graceful waist flowed a pale yellow robe, which resembled the golden dust of the water lily, scattered over its blue petals.

His passion was inflamed by the glances of her eyes, which played like a pair of water-birds with blue plumage, that sport near a full blown lotos on a pool in the season of dew.

Bright ear-rings, like two suns, displayed in full expansion the flowers of his cheeks and lips, which glistened with the liquid radiance of smiles.

His looks, interwoven with blossoms, were like a cloud variegated with moon-beams ;

And on his forehead shone a circle of odorous oil, extracted from the sandal of Malaya, like the moon just appearing on the dusky horizon ;

While his whole body seemed in a flame from the blaze of unnumbered gems.

Tears of transport gushed in a stream from the full eyes of Radha, and their watery glances gleamed on her best beloved.

Even shame, which before had taken its abode in their dark pupils, was itself ashamed, and departed when the fawn-eyed Radha gazed on the brightened face of Crishna.

While she passed by the soft edge of his couch, and the bevy of his attendant nymphs, pretending to strike the gnats from their cheeks in order to conceal their smiles, warily retired from the bower.

PART VIII.

Govinda, seeing his beloved cheerful and serene, her lips sparkling with smiles, and her eye speaking desire, thus eagerly addressed her ; while she carelessly reclined on the leafy bed strewn with soft blossoms.

Set the lotos of thy foot on this azure bosom ; and let this couch be victorious over all who rebel against love.

Give short rapture, sweet Radha, to Narayan, [58] thy adorer.

I do thee homage ; I press with my blooming palms thy feet, weary with so long a walk.

O that I were the golden ring, that plays round thy ankle!
Speak but one gentle word; bid nectar drop from the bright moon of thy mouth.
Since the pain of absence is removed, let me thus remove the thin vest that enviously hides thy charms.
Blest should I be, if those raised globes were fixed on my bosom, and the ardour of my passion allayed.
O! suffer me to quaff the liquid bliss of those lips;
Restore with their water of life thy slave, who has long been lifeless, whom the fire of separation has consumed.
Long have these ears been afflicted in thy absence by the notes of the Cocila.
Relieve them with the sound of thy tinkling waist bells, which yield music, almost equal to the music of thy voice.
Why are those eyes half closed? Are they ashamed of seeing a youth to whom thy careless resentment gave anguish?
Oh! let affliction cease; and let ecstasy drown the remembrance of sorrow.

PART IX.

In the morning she rose disarrayed, and her eyes betrayed a night without slumber; when the yellow robed god, who gazed on her with transport, thus meditated on her charms in his heavenly mind;

Though her locks be diffused at random; though the lustre of her lips be faded; though her garland and zone be fallen from their enchanting stations;

And though she hide their places with her hands, looking towards me with bashful silence, yet even thus disarrayed, she fills me with ecstatic delight.

But RADHA preparing to array herself, before the company of nymphs could see her confusion, spake thus with exultation to her obsequious lover.

Place, O son of YADU, with fingers cooler than sandal wood, place a circlet of musk on this breast, which resembles a vase of consecrated water, crowned with fresh leaves, and fixed near a vernal bower, to propitiate the god of love.

Place, my darling, the glossy powder, which would make the blackest bee envious, on this eye, whose glances are keener than arrows darted by the husband of RETI.

Fix, O accomplished youth, the two gems, which form part of love's chain, in those ears, whence the antelopes of thine eyes may run downwards and sport at pleasure.

Place now a fresh circle of musk, black as the lunar spots, on the moon of my forehead; and mix gay flowers on my tresses with a peacock's feathers, in graceful order, that they may wave like the banners of CAMA.

Now replace, O tender-hearted, the loose ornaments of my vesture; and refix the golden bells of my girdle on their destined station, which resembles those hills, where the god with five shafts, who destroyed SAMBARA,[59] keeps his elephant ready for battle.

While she spake, the heart of YADAVA triumphed; and, obeying her sportful behests, he placed musky spots on her bosom and forehead, dyed her temples with radiant hues, embellished her eyes with additional blackness, decked her braided hair and her neck with fresh garlands, and tied on her wrists the loosened bracelets, on her ankles the beamy rings, and round her waist the zone of bells, that sounded with ravishing melody.

Whatever is delightful in the modes of music, whatever is divine in meditations on VISHNU,[60] whatever is exquisite in the sweet art of love, whatever is graceful in the fine strains of poetry, all that let the happy and wise learn from the songs of JAYADEVA,[61] whose soul is united with the foot of NARAYAN.

May that HERI be your support, who expanded himself into an infinity of bright forms, when, eager to gaze, with myriads of eyes, in the daughter of the ocean, he displayed his great character of the all-pervading deity, by the multiplied reflections of his divine person in the numberless gems on the many heads of the king of serpents, whom he chose for his couch;

That HERI, who removing his lucid veil from the bosom of PEDMA, and fixing his eyes on the delicious buds that grew on it, diverted her attention by declaring that, when she had chosen him as her bridegroom near the sea of milk, the disappointed husband of PERVATI[62] drank in despair the venom, which dyed his neck azure!

I HAVE now placed before my readers this extraordinary poem, which I believe will be considered by every adequate judge to be equal, if not superior, to every thing of the kind that has been produced, either by the ancients or moderns. The poem is confessedly mystical, relating to the pure and affectionate intercourse between the Deity and human souls; and is capable of a very extended comment, to illustrate its phraseology, and explain its almost numberless allusions to the mythological system of the Hindoos.

But the chief design of its introduction here, is to illustrate the phraseology of the SONG OF SONGS. The most superficial reader cannot but be struck with the similarity of the language, of the metaphors, and imagery. There are few turns of thought in the Song of Songs, that may not find a parallel in the Gitagovinda:—and even the strongly impassioned language of Solomon may be every where supported by that of Jayadeva, and vice versâ. Could it be proved that the love between Christ and the church were really the subject of the Canticles, the Gitagovinda might be applied with the utmost success to illustrate and explain all its imagery, and all its allusions. But we have no key to unlock its reference; no data to which we can confidently refer; and though it be generally allowed to be a mystic song, yet all interpreters follow their own creed in its explanation; and it is only on the general subject that any two of them agree. As I am not satisfied that the common method used in its interpretation is either correct or genuine, I have simply avoided the rocks on which others have been wrecked: but have constructed no chart according to which a more prosperous voyage might be projected.

The late learned and pious Mr. Romaine seems to have thought that a competent knowledge of the original language might lead to its proper illustration; and is indignant at those who have attempted its explanation without this necessary qualification. Of his knowledge of the sacred language no man doubts. I also have brought some acquaintance with the original to bear on the subject: but, though perhaps as well acquainted with the meaning of the words as Mr. Romaine himself, I have not been able to discover his system in the poem; and I dare not by conjecture put a meaning on any thing that professes to be a revelation sent from God. I respect many of its interpreters for their piety and learning, but I cannot follow their steps: they have not proved to me that Solomon's Song refers to the love of Christ and His church. Let this be my apology with the candid reader for not entering into a more extended comment on this extraordinary book.

☞ To ascertain some of the latter PARTS of this poem, I have been obliged to trust to my own judgment; as Sir William Jones from whom I have borrowed these, had not marked any division; and I have had the original of the four first PARTS only.

As to the Old Version of the Canticles here introduced, the reader will be pleased to observe, it is that which was used by our forefathers before and after the reformation: one word of which I would not presume to alter or change. It is sacred both by age and use.

NOTES ON THE GITAGOVINDA.

INTRODUCTION

TO

PROPHET ISAIAH.

ON the term Prophet, and on the nature and several kinds of prophecy, I have already discoursed in different parts of this Work. See the Notes on Gen. xv. 1. xx. 7. and the Preface to the Four Gospels and Acts of the Apostles. A few things only require to be recapitultaed. נבא naba, signifies not only to foretell future events, but also to pray and supplicate; and נביא Nabia, the Prophet, was by office not only a declarer of events still future, but the general preacher of the day: and as he frequently foresaw the approach of disastrous times, such was the wickedness of the people, he employed his time in counselling sinners to turn from the error of their ways, and in making strong prayer and supplication to God to avert the threatened judgments; for such predictions, however apparently positive in their terms, were generally conditional, strange as this may appear to some who, through their general ignorance of every thing but the peculiarities of their own creed, suppose that every occurrence is impelled by an irresistible necessity.

To His own conduct, in reference to such matters, God has been pleased to give us a key, see Jer. xviii. which opens all difficulties, and furnishes us with a general comment on His own providence. God is absolute Master of His own ways; and as He has made man a free agent, whatever concerns him in reference to futurity, on which God is pleased to express His mind in the way of prophecy, there is a condition generally implied or expressed. As this is but seldom attended to by partial interpreters, (who wish by their doctrine of fatalism to bind even God Himself,) many contradictory sentiments are put in the mouths of His Prophets.

In ancient times those who were afterward called PROPHETS were termed SEERS, 1 Sam. ix. 9. הראה ha-roeh, the seeing person; he who perceives mentally what the design of God is. Sometimes called also חוזה chozeh, the man who has visions, or supernatural revelations, 1 Kings xxii. 17. 2 Kings xvii. 13. Both these terms are translated seer, in our common Version. They were sometimes also called men of God, and messengers or angels of God. In their case, it was ever understood that all God's Prophets had an extraordinary commission, and had their message given them by immediate inspiration.

In this the Heathen copied after the people of God. They also had their Prophets and Seers; and hence their Augurs and Auguries, their Haruspices, Priests, and Priestesses, and their oracles; all pretending to be divinely inspired, and to declare nothing but the truth; for what was truth and fact among the former, was affected and pretended among the latter.

Many Prophets and Seers are mentioned in the Sacred Writings; but, fragments and insulated prophecies excepted, we have the Works of only SIXTEEN; four of whom are termed the former or larger Prophets, and twelve the latter or minor Prophets. They have these epithets not from priority of time, or from minor importance: but merely from the places they occupy in the present arrangement of the Books in the Bible, and from the relative size of their productions.

The Jews reckon forty-eight Prophets, and seven Prophetesses; and Epiphanius, in a fragment preserved by Cotelerius, reckons not fewer than seventy-three Prophets, and ten Prophetesses: but in both collections there are many which have no Scriptural pretensions to such a distinguished rank.

The succession of Prophets in the Jewish Church is well worthy of note; because it not only manifests the merciful regards of God towards that people, but also the uninterrupted succession of the prophetic influence at least from Moses to Malachi, if not before, for this gift was not withheld under the patriarchal dispensation: indeed we might boldly ask any man to show when the time was in which God left Himself without a witness of this kind?

To show this succession I shall endeavour to give the different Prophets in order of time.

1. The first man ADAM has an undoubted right to stand at the head of the Prophets, as he does at the head of the human race. His declaration concerning marriage, "For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother and cleave to his wife," is so truly prophetic, that no doubt can be formed on the subject. There was then nothing in nature or experience, to justify such an assertion; and he could have it only by Divine inspiration. The millions of instances which have since occurred, and the numerous laws which have been founded on this principle among all the nations of the earth, show with what precision the declaration was conceived, and with what truth it was published to the world. Add to this, his correct knowledge of the nature of the different animals, so that he could impose on them names expressive of their respective natures or propensities; which proves that he must have acted under a Divine inspiration; for known only to God are all His works from the beginning.

2. ENOCH, the seventh from Adam, is expressly called a Prophet: and St. Jude, ver. 14, 15, has preserved a fragment of one of his prophecies, relative to the corruption of the antediluvian world, and the approaching judgments of God.

3. NOAH was a Prophet and Preacher of righteousness, and predicted the general deluge, and the time of respite which God in His mercy had granted to the offenders of that age.

4. ABRAHAM is expressly called a Prophet also, Gen. xx. 7.; and it appears from Psa. cv. 15. that he partook of the Divine anointing.

5. ISAAC, Gen. xxvii. 27. predicted the future greatness of his son Jacob, and of the race that was to spring from him.

6. JACOB was so especially favoured with the prophetic gift, that he distinctly foretold what should happen to each of his sons. See Gen. xlix.

7. JOSEPH was favoured with several prophetic visions, and had the gift of interpreting dreams which portended future occurrences, see Gen. xxxvii. xl. xli.; and foretold the redemption of the Israelites from Egypt, Gen. l. 25. Thus far the prophetic influence extended through the patriarchal dispensation for about two thousand three hundred and seventy years from the Creation.

With the Jewish Dispensation the prophetic gift revived; and,

8. MOSES became one of the most eminent Prophets that had ever appeared. He not only enjoyed the continual prophetic afflatus, but had such visions of, and intercourse with God, as no person either before or since possessed; and by which he was highly qualified to perform the arduous work which God had given him to do, and to frame that Code of Laws which had no equal before the promulgation of the Gospel. See Deut. xxxiv. 10. He predicted expressly the coming of the Messiah. See Deut. xviii. 18.

9. AARON, the brother of Moses, his prime minister, and God's high priest, was also a partaker of His Divine influence, and declared the will of God to Pharaoh and the Israelites, not merely from information received from Moses, but also by immediate communication from God. See Exod. iv. 15.

10. Miriam, the sister of Moses and Aaron, is expressly called a Prophetess, Exod. xv. 20. Numb. xii. 2.

11. Joshua, who succeeded Moses, was a partaker of the same grace. He was appointed by Moses under the especial direction of God, Numb. xxvii. 18—23. Deut xxxiv. 9. and has always been reckoned among the Jews as one of the Prophets. See Ecclus. xlvi. 1—6.

Though I cannot place them in the same rank, yet it is necessary to state that, by the Jews several of the Judges are classed among the Prophets; such as Othniel, Ehud, Samson, and Barak.

12. Deborah, the coadjutor of Barak, is called a Prophetess, Judges iv. 4. During her time, and down to the days of Eli the high priest, prophecy had been very scarce, there having been very few on whom the Spirit of the Lord had rested: "the word of the Lord was scarce in those days, and there was no open vision," 1 Sam. iii. 1.

13. Hannah, the wife of Elkanah, is supposed to have partaken of the spirit of prophecy; and to have foretold, at least indirectly, the advent of the Messiah, and the glory that should be revealed under the Gospel. See her Song, 1 Sam. ii. 1—10. And what renders this more likely is, that it is on the model, and with many of the expressions, of this Song, that the blessed Virgin composed her Magnificat, Luke i. 46—55.

14. Samuel, her son, was one of the most eminent of the Jewish Prophets, and was the last and indeed the greatest of the Judges of Israel. In his time the prophetic influence seems to have rested upon many; so that we find even whole schools or colleges of Prophets which were under his direction. See 1 Sam. x. 5, 10. xix. 20. and elsewhere.

15. David united in himself the character of Prophet and king, in the most eminent manner; and from his reign down to the Captivity the succession was not only not interrupted, but these extraordinary messengers of God became very numerous.

16. Gad flourished under his reign, and was emphatically called David's Seer, 2 Sam. xxiv. 11. 1 Chron. xxi. 9, 19, 20.; and it appears that he had written a Book of Prophecies, which is now lost, 1 Chron. xxix. 29.

17. Nathan lived also under the same reign, 2 Sam. vii. 2.; and, in conjunction with Gad, composed a book of the acts of David. 1 Chron. xxix. 29.

18. To Solomon also, son of David, the prophetic gift has been attributed. This might be implied in the extraordinary wisdom with which God had endowed him, 1 Kings iii. 5—9. 2 Chron. i. 7. vii. 12.; and in his writings several prophetic declarations may be found, even independently of the supposed reference to Christ and His Church in the Canticles.

19. Iddo is termed a Seer, 2 Chron. xii. 15. xiii. 22.; and was one of Solomon's biographers.

20. Shemaiah lived under Rehoboam; he is called a man of God, and to him the word of prophecy came relative to Judah and Benjamin, 1 Kings xii. 22—24. Some think this was the same person who was sent to Jeroboam relative to his idolatry, see 1 Kings xiii. 1, &c.

21. Ahijah, the Shilonite, prophesied to Jeroboam, 1 Kings xi. 29—39.

22. Hanani the Seer, prophesied under Azariah and Asa, 2 Chron. xvi. 7.

23. Jehu, son of Hanani, prophesied under Jehoshaphat, 1 Kings xvi. 1, 7. 2 Chron. xvi. 7. xix. 2. and xx. 34.

24. Azariah, the son of Oded, prophesied under Asa, 2 Chron. xv. 1.

25. Elijah prophesied under the reign of Ahab and Jezebel.

26. Elisha succeeded Elijah under the same reigns. And these eminent men had many disciples on whom the spirit of prophecy rested. They, and their masters Elijah and Elisha, prophesied in the kingdoms both of Israel and Judah. Their histories make a prominent part of the 1st and 2d Books of Kings; and are well known.

27. Micaiah, the son of Imlah, prophesied under the same reign, 1 Kings xxi. 9.

28. Hosea prophesied under Jeroboam the second, king of Israel, and under the reign of Uzziah, king of Judah.

29. Amos prophesied about the same time.

30. Jonah, son of Amittai, is supposed to have been contemporary with the above.

31. Eliezar, the son of Dodavah, prophesied against Jehoshaphat and Ahaziah, 2 Chron. xx. 37.
32. Jahaziel, son of Zechariah, prophesied against Judah and Israel under the same reign, 2 Chron. xx. 14.
33. Isaiah prophesied in the reigns of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, Isa. i. 1.
34. Micah prophesied against Samaria and Jerusalem, in the reigns of Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah.
35. Obed, father of Azariah, prophesied against Asa, 2 Chron. xv. 8.
36. Nahum prophesied under Hezekiah.
37. Joel, under Josiah.
38. Jeremiah, about the same time.
39. Zephaniah, under the same reign. See their Prophecies.
40. Huldah, the Prophetess, was contemporary with the above.
41. Igdaliah, called a man of God, and probably a Prophet, was contemporary with Jeremiah, Jer. xxxv. 4.
42. Habakkuk lived about the end of the reign of Josiah, or the beginning of that of Jehoiakim.
43. Ezekiel lived under the Captivity; and prophesied in Mesopotamia, about the time that Jeremiah prophesied in Jerusalem.
44. Obadiah lived in Judea, after the capture of Jerusalem, and before the desolation of Idumea by Nebuchadnezzar.
45. Daniel prophesied in Babylon during the Captivity.
46. Haggai prophesied during and after the Captivity.
47. Urijah, the son of Shemaiah, prophesied under Jehoiakim, See Jer. xxvi. 20, 21.
48. Zechariah, son of Barachiah, flourished in the second year of Darius, after the Captivity.
49. Malachi lived under Nehemiah, and some time after Haggai and Zechariah.

Here is a succession of divinely inspired men, by whom God at sundry times and divers manners spake unto the Fathers, from the beginning of the world down to the restoration from the Babylonish Captivity, a period of three thousand six hundred years. From the time of Malachi, who was the last of the Prophets, till the time of Christ, a period of nearly four hundred years elapsed without vision or prophecy; but during the whole of that time the Jews had the law and the prophetical writings, to which, till the time of Christ, there was no necessity to add any thing; for God had with the writings of the last mentioned Prophet completed the canon of the Old Testament, nothing being farther necessary, till He should, in the fulness of time, superadd the Gospel; and this having taken place, vision and prophecy are now for ever sealed up, and the Temple of God is established among all genuine believers in Christ Jesus.

It is not easy to ascertain the order in which the sixteen Prophets, whose writings are preserved, have succeeded to each other. There are chronological notes prefixed to several of their prophecies, which assist to settle generally, the times of the whole. Several were contemporary, as the Reader has already seen in the preceding list. The major and minor Prophets may be thus arranged:—

1. Jonah—under the reign of Jeroboam the second.
2. Hosea—under Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, &c.
3. Joel—contemporary with Hosea.
4. Amos—under Uzziah and Jeroboam the second.
5. Isaiah—under Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah.
6. Micah—contemporary with Isaiah.
7. Nahum—under the reign of Hezekiah.
8. Habakkuk—under the reign of Manasseh or Josiah.
9. Zephaniah—under Josiah.
10. Jeremiah—from Josiah to Zedekiah.
11. Daniel—under the Captivity, after Zedekiah.
12. Ezekiel—at the same time.
13. Obadiah—during the Captivity.

14. HAGGAI—began to prophesy the second year of Darius.
15. ZECHARIAH—about the same time. See Zech. i. 1. vii. 1.
16. MALACHI—under Nehemiah. The last of all the Prophets.

The Works of these Prophets constitute the principal and most important part of what is called THE BIBLE, or Old Testament.

ON the style of the Prophets much has been said by several learned men; particularly, Calmet, Lowth, Bishop Newton, Vitringa, Michaelis, and Houbigant. Their chief observations, and especially those most within the reach of the common people, have been selected and abridged with great care and industry by the Rev. Dr. John Smith, of Cambleton, in his little Tract intituled "A Summary View and Explanation of the Writings of the Prophets," to which it forms preliminary observations, drawn up at the desire of the Scottish Society for propagating Christian Knowledge, in a small 8vo. 1804. From this Work I thankfully borrow what concerns the present subject: taking occasion at the same time to recommend the whole to all Christian Ministers, to private persons, and to all families, who wish to read the Prophets to their edification.

"The writings of the Prophets, the most sublime and beautiful in the world, lose much of that usefulness and effect which they are so well calculated to produce on the souls of men, from their not being more generally understood. Many prophecies are somewhat dark, till events explain them. They are, besides, delivered in such lofty and figurative terms, and with such frequent allusions to the customs and manners of times and places the most remote, that ordinary readers cannot, without some help, be supposed capable of understanding them. It must therefore be of use to make the language of prophecy as intelligible as may be, by explaining those images and figures of speech in which it most frequently abounds; and this may be done generally, even when the prophecies themselves are obscure.

"Some prophecies seem as if it were not intended that they should be clearly understood before they are fulfilled. As they relate to different periods, they may have been intended for exciting the attention of mankind, from time to time, both to Providence and to Scripture; and to furnish every age with new evidence of Divine Revelation; by which means they serve the same purpose to the last ages of the world that miracles did to the first. Whereas, if they had been in every respect clear and obvious from the beginning, this wise purpose had been in a great measure defeated. Curiosity, industry, and attention, would at once be at an end; or, by being too easily gratified, would be little exercised.

"Besides, a great degree of obscurity is necessary to some prophecies before they can be fulfilled; and if not fulfilled, the consequence would not be so beneficial to mankind. Thus, many of the ancient prophecies concerning the destruction of Jerusalem had a manifest relation to the remoter destruction by the Romans, as well as to the nearer one by the Chaldeans. Had the Jews perceived this, which was not indeed clear enough till the event explained it, they would probably have wished to have remained for ever in their captivity at Babylon, rather than expose themselves or their offspring a second time to a destruction so dreadful as that which they had already experienced.

"With respect to our times, by far the greatest number of prophecies relate to events which are now past; and, therefore, a sufficient acquaintance with history, and with the language and style of prophecy, is all that is requisite in order to understand them. Some prophecies, however, relate to events still future: and these too may be understood in general, although some particular circumstances connected with them, may remain obscure till they are fulfilled. If prophecies were not capable of being understood in general, we should not find the Jews so often blamed, in this respect, for their ignorance, and want of discernment. That they did actually understand many of them, when they chose to search the Scriptures, we know. Daniel understood, from the prophecies of Jeremiah, the time at which the Captivity in Babylon was to be at an end; and the scribes knew from Micah, and told Herod, where the Messiah was to be born. A very little attention might have enabled them in the same manner, to understand others, as they probably did; such as the seventy weeks of Daniel; the destruction of the Babylonian empire, and of the other three that were to succeed; and also the ruin of the people and places around them; Moab, Ammon, Tyre, Sidon, Philistia, Egypt, and Idumea. Perhaps, indeed, a few enigmatical circumstances might have been annexed, which could not be understood till they were accomplished; but the general tenor of the prophecies they could be at no loss to understand. With regard to prophecies still future, we are in a similar situation. It is understood in general, that the Jews will be gathered from their dispersions, restored to their own land, and converted to Christianity; that the fulness of the Gentiles will likewise come in: that Antichrist, Gog and Magog, and all the enemies of the Church, will be destroyed; after which the Gospel will remarkably flourish, and be more than ever glorified. But several circumstances connected with those general events must probably remain in the dark till their accomplishment shall clearly explain them.

"But this degree of obscurity which sometimes attends prophecy does not always proceed from the circumstances or subject; it frequently proceeds from the highly poetical and figurative style in which prophecy is for the most part conveyed, and of which it will be proper to give some account. To speak of all the rhetorical figures with which the Prophets adorn their style would lead us into a field too wide, and would be more the province of the rhetorician than of the commentator. It will be sufficient for our purpose at present, to attend to the most common of them; consisting of Allegory, Parable, and Metaphor; and then to consider the sources from which the Prophets most frequently borrow their images in those figures, and the sense which they wish to convey by them.

"By allegory, the first of the figures mentioned, is meant that mode of speech in which the writer or speaker means to convey a different idea from what the words in their obvious and primary signification bear. Thus, 'Break up your fallow ground, and sow not among thorns,' (Jer. iv. 3.) is to be understood not of tillage, but of repentance. And these words, 'Thy rowers have brought thee into great waters, the east wind hath broken thee in the midst of the seas,' (Ezek. xxvii. 6.) allude not to the fate of a ship, but of a city.

"To this figure the parable, in which the Prophets frequently speak, is nearly allied. It consists in the application of some feigned narrative to some real truth, which might have been less striking, or more disagreeable, if expressed in plain terms. Such is the following one of Isaiah, (v. 1, 2.) 'My well-beloved hath a vineyard in a very fruitful hill. And he fenced it, and gathered out the stones thereof, and planted it with the choicest vine, and built a tower in the midst of it, and also made a wine-press therein: and he looked that it should bring forth grapes, and it brought forth wild grapes.' The 7th verse tells us that this vineyard was the house of Israel, which had so ill requited the favour which God had shown it.—[On this subject see the Dissertation at the end of the Notes on Matthew xiii.]

"There is, besides, another kind of allegory not uncommon with the prophets, called mystical allegory or double prophecy. Thus it is said of Eliakim, (Isa. xxii. 22.) 'And the key of the house of David will I lay upon his shoulder; and he shall open, and none shall shut; and he shall shut, and none shall open.' In the first and obvious sense, the words relate to Eliakim; but in the secondary or mystical sense, to the Messiah. Instances of the same kind are frequent in those prophecies that relate to David, Zerubbabel, Cyrus, and other types of Christ. In the first sense, the words relate to the type; in the second, to the antitype. The use of this allegory, however, is not so frequent as that of the former. It is generally confined to things most nearly connected with the Jewish religion; with Israel, Sion, Jerusalem, and its kings and rulers: or such as were most opposite to these; Assyria, Babylon, Egypt, Idumea, and the like. In the former kind of allegory the primitive meaning is dropped, and the figurative only is retained: in this, both the one and the other are reserved; and this is what constitutes the difference.

"But of all the figures used by the Prophets the most frequent is the metaphor, by which words are transferred from their primitive and plain to a secondary and figurative meaning. This figure, common in all poetry, and in all languages, is of indispensable necessity in Scripture; which, having occasion to speak of Divine and spiritual matters, could do it only by terms borrowed from sensible and material objects. Hence it is that the sentiments, actions, and corporeal parts, not only of man, but also of inferior creatures, are ascribed to God Himself; it being otherwise impossible for us to form any conceptions of His pure essence and incommunicable attributes. But though the prophets partly from necessity, and partly from choice, are thus profuse in the use of metaphors, they do not appear, like other writers, to have the liberty of using them as fancy directed. The same set of images, however diversified in the manner of applying them, is always used, both in allegory and metaphor, to denote the same subjects, to which they are in a manner appropriated. This peculiar characteristic of the Hebrew poetry might perhaps be owing to some rules taught in the prophetic schools, which did not allow the same latitude in this respect as other poetry. Whatever it may be owing to, the uniform manner in which the Prophets apply these images, tends greatly to illustrate the prophetic style; and, therefore, it will be proper now to consider the sources from which those images are most frequently derived, and the subjects and ideas which they severally denote. These sources may be classed under four heads; Natural, Artificial, Religious, and Historical.

"I. The first and most copious, as well as the most pleasing source of images in the prophetic writings, as in all other poetry, is Nature; and the principal images drawn from nature, together with their application, are the following:—

"The sun, moon, and stars, the highest objects in the natural world, figuratively represent kings, queens, and princes, or rulers; the highest in the world politic. 'The moon shall be confounded. and the sun ashamed.' Isa. xxii. 23. 'I will cover the heavens, and make the stars thereof dark: I will cover the sun with a cloud, and the moon shall not give her light.' Ezek. xxii. 7.

"Light and darkness are used figuratively for joy and sorrow, prosperity and adversity: 'We wait for light, but behold obscurity; for brightness, but we walk in darkness,' Isa. lix 9. An uncommon degree of light denotes an uncommon degree of joy and prosperity; and vice versa. 'The light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun shall be sevenfold,' Isa. xxx. 26—The same metaphors are likewise used to denote knowledge and ignorance. 'If they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them,' Isa. viii. 20. 'The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light,' Isa. ix. 2.

"Dew, moderate rains, gentle streams, and running waters, denote the blessings of the Gospel. 'Thy dew is as the dew of herbs,' Isa. xxvi. 19. 'He shall come unto us as the rain,' Hosea vi. 3. 'I will water it every moment,' Isa. xxvii. 3. 'I will pour water on him that is thirsty,' Isa. xliv. 3.

"Immoderate rains on the other hand, hail, floods, deep waters, torrents and inundations, denote judgments and destruction. 'I will rain upon him an overflowing rain, and great hailstones,' Ezek. xxxviii. 22. 'Waters rise up out of the north, and shall overflow the land,' Jer. xlvii. 2.

"Fire also, and the east wind, parching and hurtful, frequently denote the same. 'They shall cast thy choice cedars into the fire,' Jer. xxii. 7. 'He stayed His rough wind in the day of the east wind,' Isa. xxvii. 8.

"Wind in general is often taken in the same sense. 'The wind shall eat up all thy pleasures,' Jer. xxii. 22. Sometimes it is put for any thing empty or fallacious, as well as hurtful. 'The Prophets shall become wind,' Jer. v. 13. 'They have sown the wind, and they shall reap the whirlwind,' Hos. viii. 7.

"Lebanon and Carmel; the one remarkable for its height and stately cedars, was the image of majesty, strength, or any thing very great or noble. 'He shall cut down the thickets of the forest with iron, and Lebanon shall fall by a mighty one,' Isa. x. 34. 'The Assyrian was a cedar in Lebanon,' Ezek. xxxi. 3. The other mountain, (Carmel) fruitful, and abounding in vines and olives, denoted beauty and fertility. 'The glory of Lebanon shall be given it, the excellency of Carmel,' Isa. xxxv. 2. The vine alone is a frequent image of the Jewish Church. 'I had planted thee a noble vine,' Jer. ii. 21.

"Rams and bullocks of Bashan, lions, eagles, sea-monsters, or any animal of prey, are figures frequently used for cruel and oppressive tyrants and conquerors. 'Hear this word, ye kine of Bashan, which oppress the poor,' Amos iv. 1. 'The lion is come up from his thicket,' Jer. iv. 7. 'A great eagle came unto Lebanon, and took the highest branch of the cedar,' Ezek. xvii. 3. 'Thou art as a whale in the seas,' Ezek. xxxii. 2. 'The unicorn shall come down,—and their land shall be soaked with blood,' Isa. xxxiv. 7.

"II. The ordinary occupations and customs of life, with the few arts practised at the time, were another source from which the Prophets derived many of their figures; particularly,— "From husbandry in all its parts, and from its implements. 'Sow to yourselves in righteousness, reap in mercy; break up your fallow-ground,' Hos. x. 12. 'Put in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe,' Joel iii. 12. 'I am pressed under you, as a wain under a load of sheaves,' Amos ii. 13. Threshing was performed in various ways (mentioned Isa. xxviii. 24, &c.) which furnish a variety of images denoting punishment. 'Arise, and thresh, O daughter of Zion; for I will make thine horn iron, and thy hoofs brass,' &c. Micah iv. 13. The operation was performed on rising grounds, where the chaff was driven away by the wind, while the grain remained; a fit emblem of the fate of the wicked, and of the salvation of the just. 'Behold I will make thee a new threshing-instrument having teeth; thou shalt thresh the mountains, and beat them small, and thou shalt make the hills as chaff. Thou shalt fan them and the wind shall carry them away, and the whirlwind shall scatter them,' Isa. xli. 15, 16.

"The vintage and winepress also furnished many images, obvious enough in their application. 'The press is full, the fats overflow, for their wickedness is great,' Joel iii. 13. 'I have trod the winepress alone.—I will tread down the people in mine anger,' Isa. lxiii. 3, &c. As the vintage was gathered with shouting and rejoicing, the ceasing of the vintage-shouting is frequently one of the figures that denote misery and desolation. 'None shall tread with shouting; their shouting shall be no shouting,' Jer. xlviii. 33.

"From the occupation of tending cattle, we have many images. 'Woe unto the pastors that destroy and scatter the sheep of my pasture,' Jer. xxiii. 1. The people are the flock; teachers and rulers the pastors. 'Israel is a scattered sheep, the lions have driven him away.' 'As a shepherd taketh out of the mouth of the lion two legs, or a piece of an ear,' &c. Amos iii. 12.—Some of the images derived from husbandry, tending cattle, &c. may perhaps appear mean to us; though not to the Jews, whose manner of life was simple and plain, and whose greatest men, (such as Moses, David, Gideon, &c.) were often husbandmen and shepherds. Accordingly, the Messiah himself is frequently described under the character of a shepherd. [See Fleury's Manners of the Israelites.]

"It was customary in deep mournings to shave the head and beard, to retire to the house-tops, (which in those countries were flat, and furnished with little chambers adapted to the purposes of devotion or of sequestered grief,) also to sing dirges at funerals, and to accompany them with a mournful sort of music; and from these and the like circumstances images are frequently borrowed by the Prophets to denote the greatest danger and the deepest distress. 'Mine heart shall sound for Moab like pipes.'—'Every head shall be bald, and every beard clipt—there shall be lamentation on all the house-tops of Moab,' Jer. xlviii. 36, 37, 38. Isa. xv. 2, 3.

"The mode of burying in the Jewish sepulchres, or 'sides of the pit,' and their Hades, or state of the dead, supplied many images of the same kind. See Observations on Isa. xiv. and Ezek. xxvi. 20.

"According to the barbarous custom of those times, conquerors drove their captives before them almost naked, and exposed to the intolerable heat of the sun, and the inclemencies of the weather. They afterward employed them frequently in grinding at the handmill, (water-mills not being then invented;) hence nakedness, and grinding at the mill and sitting on the ground, (the posture in which they wrought) express captivity. 'Descend and sit in the dust, O virgin daughter of Babylon—take the millstones—thy nakedness shall be uncovered,' Isa. xvii. 1—3.

"The marriage relation supplied metaphors to express the relation or covenant between God and His people. On the other hand, adultery, infidelity to the marriage-bed, &c. denoted any breach of covenant with God, particularly the love and worship of idols. 'Turn, O backsliding children, saith the Lord, for I am married unto you,' Jer. iii. 14. 'There were two women, the daughters of one mother, and they committed whoredoms,—with their idols have they committed adultery,' &c. Ezek. xxiii. 2, 3—37.

"The debility and stupefaction caused by intoxicating liquors suggested very apt images to express the terrible effects of the Divine judgments on those who are the unhappy objects of them. 'Thou shalt be filled with drunkenness—with the cup of thy sister Samaria,' Ezek. xxiii. 33.

"From the method of refining metals in the furnace images are often borrowed to denote the judgments inflicted by God on His people, with a view to cleanse them from their sins, as metal from its dross. 'Israel is—dross in the midst of the furnace,' Ezek. xxii. 18. 'He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver,' Mal. iii. 3.

"Among the other few arts, from which the Hebrew poets derive some of their images, are those of the fuller and potter, Mal. iii. 2, &c. Jer. xviii. 1, &c. of which the application is obvious. No less so is that of images derived from fishing, fowling, and the implements belonging to them; the hook, net, pit, snare, &c. which generally denote captivity or destruction. 'I will send for many fishers, and they shall fish them,—and for many hunters, and they shall hunt them,—for their iniquity is not hid from mine eyes.' Jer. xvi. 16, 17. 'I will put hooks to thy jaws,' Ezek. xxix. 4. 'Fear, and the pit, and the snare, are upon thee, O inhabitant of the earth,' Isa. xxiv. 17.

"A few images are derived from building, as when the Messiah is denoted by a foundation and corner-stone, Isa. xxviii. 16. The next verse describes the rectitude of judgment by metaphors borrowed from the line and plummet; and by building with precious stones, is denoted a very high degree of prosperity, whether applied to church or state, Isa. liv. 11, 12.

"III. Religion, and things connected with it, furnished many images to the sacred poets.

"From the temple and its pompous service, from the tabernacle, Shechinah, mercy-seat, &c. are derived a variety of images, chiefly serving to denote the glory of the Christian church, the excellency of its worship, God's favour towards it, and His constant presence with it; the Prophets speaking to the Jews in terms accommodated to their own ideas. 'And the Lord will create upon every dwelling-place of mount Zion, and upon her assemblies, a cloud and smoke by day, and the shining of a flaming fire by night; for upon all the glory shall be a covering,' Isa. iv. 5. 'Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean,' Ezek. xxxvi. 25.

"The ceremonial law, and especially its distinctions between things clean and unclean, furnished a number of images, all obvious in their application. 'Wash ye, make you clean, put away the evil of your doings,' Isa. i. 16. 'Their way was before me as the uncleanness of a removed woman,' Ezek. xxxvi. 17.

"The killing of sacrifices, and feasting upon them, serve as metaphors for slaughter. 'The Lord hath a sacrifice in Bozra,' Isa. xxxiv. 6. Ezek. xxxix. 17.

"The Pontifical robes, which were very splendid, suggested several images expressive of the glory of both the Jewish and Christian church. 'I clothed thee with broidered work,' &c. Ezek. xvi. 10. 'He clothed me with the garments of salvation,' Isa. lxi. 10. The Prophets wore a rough upper garment; false prophets wore the like, in imitation of true ones; and to this there are frequent allusions. 'Neither shall they wear a rough garment to deceive,' Zech. xiii. 4.

"From the pots, and other vessels and utensils of the temple, are likewise borrowed a few metaphors obvious enough without explanation. 'Every pot in Jerusalem and in Judah shall be holiness,' Zech. xiv. 21.

"The Prophets have likewise many images that allude to the idolatrous rites of the neighbouring nations, to their groves and high places, (Isa. xxvii. 9.) and to the worship paid to their idols, Baal, Moloch, Chemosh, Gad, Meni, Astaroth, Tammuz, &c. Ezek. viii. 10—14.

"IV. Many of the metaphors and images used by the Prophets are likewise borrowed from history, especially sacred.

"From the fall of angels.—'How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning,' Isa. xiv. 12. 'Thou art the anointed cherub,—thou wast upon the holy mountain of God,' Ezek. xxviii. 14. And from the fall of man. 'Thou hast been in Eden, the garden of God,' ver. 13.

"From Chaos.—'I beheld the earth, and, lo! it was without form, and void; and the heavens, and they had no light,' Jer. iv. 23. 'He shall stretch over it the line of devastation, and the plummet of emptiness,' Isa. xxxiv. 11.

"From the deluge.—'The windows from on high are open, and the foundations of the earth do shake,' Isa. xxiv. 18.

"From the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah.—'And the streams thereof shall be turned into pitch, and the dust thereof into brimstone, and the land thereof shall become burning pitch,' Isa. xxxiv. 9.—Also from the destruction of the Hivites and Amorites, &c. Isa. xvii. 9.

"The Exodus, and deliverance from Egypt, is frequently used to shadow forth other great deliverances. 'Thus saith the Lord, who maketh a way in the sea, and a path in the mighty waters,' &c. Isa. xi. 15, 16. xliii. 16—19. li. 9, 10, &c.

"From the descent on Sinai.—'Behold the Lord cometh forth out of His place, and will come down and tread on the high places of the earth; and the mountains shall be molten under him,' Micah i. 3, 4.

"From the resurrection, the end of the world, and the last judgment, are derived many images of which the application is natural and obvious. 'Thy dead men shall live, with my dead body shall they arise,—awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust,' &c. Isa. xxvi. 19.—'And all the host of heaven shall be dissolved, and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll; and all their host shall fall down as a leaf falleth from the vine, and as a falling fig from the fig-tree." Isa. xxxiv. 4.

"The foregoing account of the images which most frequently occur in the writings of the Prophets may be of considerable use in studying their style: but as a thorough knowledge of this must be allowed to be of the highest importance, a few general remarks are farther added, although some part of them may appear to be superseded by what has been already observed.

"1. Although the Prophets use words so frequently in a figurative or metaphorical meaning; yet we ought not, without necessity, to depart from the primitive and original sense of language: and such a necessity there is, when the plain and original sense is less proper, less suitable to the subject and context, or contrary to other Scriptures.

"2. By images borrowed from the world natural the Prophets frequently understand something analogous in the world politic. Thus, the sun, moon, stars, and heavenly bodies, denote kings, queens, rulers, and persons in great power; their increase of splendour denotes increase of prosperity; their darkening, setting, or falling, denotes a reverse of fortune, or the entire ceasing of that power or kingdom to which they refer. Great earthquakes, and the shaking of heaven and earth, denote the commotion and overthrow of kingdoms; and the beginning or end of the world, their rise, or ruin.

"3. The cedars of Lebanon, oaks of Bashan, fir-trees, and other stately trees of the forest, denote kings, princes, potentates, and persons of the highest rank; briers and thorns the common people, or those of the meanest order.

"4. High mountains and lofty hills, in like manner, denote kingdoms, republics, states, and cities;—towers and fortresses signify defenders and protectors;—ships of Tarshish, merchants, or commercial people; and the daughter of any capital or mother city, the lesser cities, or suburbs around it. Cities never conquered are farther, styled virgins.

"5. The Prophets likewise describe kings, and kingdoms by their ensigns; as Cyrus and the Romans by an eagle;—the king of Macedon, by a goat;—and the king of Persia, by a ram; these being the figures on their respective standards, or in the ornaments of their architecture.

"6. The Prophets, in like manner, borrow some of their images from ancient hieroglyphics, which they take in their usual acceptation: thus, a star was the emblem of a god, or hero;—a horn, the emblem of great power, or strength; and a rod, the emblem of royalty: and they signify the same in the Prophets.

"7. The same prophecies have frequently a double meaning; and refer to different events, the one near, the other remote;—the one temporal, the other spiritual, or perhaps eternal. The Prophets having thus several events in their eye, their expressions may be partly applicable to one, and partly to another; and it is not always easy to mark the transitions. Thus, the prophecies relating to the first and second restoration of the Jews, and first and second coming of our Lord, are often interwoven together; like our Saviour's own prediction (Matt. xxiv.) concerning the destruction of Jerusalem, and the end of the world. What has not been fulfilled in the first, we must apply to the second; and what has been already fulfilled, may often be considered as typical of what still remains to be accomplished.

"8. Almost all the prophecies of the Old Testament, whatever view they may have to nearer events, are ultimately to be referred to the New, where only we are to look for their full completion. Thus Babylon, under the Old Testament, was a type of mystical Babylon under the New; and the King of Syria (Antiochus Epiphanes) a type of Antichrist;—the temporal enemies of the Jews, types and figures of the spiritual enemies of Christians We must not, however, expect to find always a mystical meaning in prophecy; and when the near and most obvious meaning is plain, and gives a good sense, we need not depart from it, nor be over curious to look beyond it.

"9. In prophecies, as in parables, we are chiefly to consider the scope and design, without attempting too minute an explication of all the poetical images and figures with which the Sacred Writers use to adorn their style.

"10. Prophecies of a general nature are applicable by accommodation to individuals;—most of the things that are spoken of the church in general being no less applicable to its individual members.

"11. Prophecies of a particular nature, on the other hand, admit, and often require, to be extended. Thus, Edom, Moab, or any of the enemies of God's people, is often put for the whole;—what is said of one, being generally applicable to the rest.

"12. In like manner, what is said to or of any of God's people, on any particular occasion, is of general application and use; all that stand in the same relation to God having an interest in the same promises.

"13. A cup of intoxicating liquor is frequently used to denote the indignation of God;—and the effects of such a cup, the effects of His displeasure.

"14. As the covenant of God with His people is represented under the figure of marriage; so their breach of that covenant, especially their idolatry, is represented by whoredom, adultery, and infidelity to the marriage bed; on which the Prophets sometimes enlarge, to excite detestation of the crime. The epithet strange does likewise, almost always relate to something connected with idolatry.

"15. Persons or nations are frequently said in Scripture to be related to those whom they resemble in their life and conduct. In the same manner, men are denoted by animals whose qualities they resemble. A definite number, such as three, four, seven, ten, &c. is sometimes used by the Prophets for an indefinite, and commonly denotes a great many.

"16. In the reckoning of time, a day is used by the Prophets to denote a year;—and things still future, to denote their certainty, are spoken of as already past.

"17. When the Prophets speak of the last, or latter days, they always mean the days of the Messiah, or the time of the Gospel dispensation. That day means often the same, and always some period at a distance.

"18. When places are mentioned as lying north, south, east, or west, it is generally to be understood of their situation with respect to Judea or Jerusalem, when the context does not plainly restrict the scene to some other place.

"19. By the earth, (or the word so translated,) the Prophets frequently mean the Land of Judea; and sometimes, says Sir Isaac Newton, the great continent of all Asia and Africa, to which they had access by land. By the isles of the sea, on the other hand, they understood the places to which they sailed, particularly all Europe, and probably the islands and sea-coasts of the Mediterranean.

"20. The greatest part of the Prophetic Writings was first composed in verse, and still retains (notwithstanding all the disadvantages of a literal prose translation,) much of the air and cast of the original, particularly in the division of the lines, and in that peculiarity of Hebrew poetry by which the sense of one line or couplet so frequently corresponds with that of the other. Thus,—

I will greatly rejoice in the Lord,
My soul shall be joyful in my God;
For he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation,
He hath covered me with the robe of righteousness:

As a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments,
And as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels.
Isa. lxi. 10.

"Attention to this peculiarity in sacred poetry will frequently lead to the meaning of many passages in the poetical parts of Scripture, (in which it perpetually occurs,) as the one line of a couplet, or member of a sentence, is generally a commentary on the other. Thus,—

The Lord hath a sacrifice in Bozra,
And a great slaughter in the land of Idumea.
Isa. xxxiv. 6.

"Here the metaphor in the first line is expressed in plain terms in the next:—the sacrifice in Bozra means the great slaughter in Idumea, of which Bozra was the capital.

"It must be observed that the parallelism is frequently more extended. Thus,—

For I will pour out waters on the thirsty,
And flowing streams upon the dry ground;
I will pour out my Spirit on thy seed,
And my blessing on thine offspring.
Isa. xliv. 3.

"Here the two last lines explain the metaphor in the two preceding."

As the gift of prophecy was the greatest which God gave to men upon earth; so the Prophet, as being the immediate instrument of revealing the will of God to the people, was the greatest, the most important, the most august, venerable, and useful person, in the Land of Israel. Ipsi eis exeant (says St. Augustin) philosophi ipsi sapientes, ipsi theologi, ipsi prophetæ, ipsi doctores, probitatis ac pietatis:—they were to the people the philosophers, the wise men, the divines, the prophets, and the teachers of truth and godliness. By their intercourse with God, they were His mediators with the people; and their persons, as well as their office, were considered as peculiarly sacred. They did not mix with the people, and only appeared in public when they came to announce the will of God. They were also a kind of typical persons,—whatever occurred to them was instructive, so that they were for signs, metaphors, and portents.

Most of the ancient Prophets were extraordinary messengers. They were not bred up to the prophetic function: as the office was immediately from God, as well as the message they were to deliver to the people, so they had no previous education—in reference to such an office; for no man knew whom the God of Israel might please to call to announce his righteousness to the people. Several of them were taken out of the walks of common life. Jonah appears to have been a private person at Gath-hepher in Galilee, before God called him to prophesy against Ninevah. Elisha was a ploughman at Abel-meholah (1 Kings xix. 16.) when called to the prophetic function. Zechariah appears to have been a husbandman, and a keeper of cattle, chap. xiii. 5. Amos was a herdsman of Tekoa, and a gatherer of sycamore fruit, chap. i. 1., vii. 14, 15.; and no doubt several others of the ancient prophets had an equally mean origin: but the office and the calling dignified the man. We know that our blessed Lord called not His disciples from the higher walks or offices of life; but out of fishermen, tax-gatherers, and tent-makers, he formed Evangelists and Apostles.

The Prophets appear to have gone in mean clothing; either sackcloth, hair-cloth, or coats of skin, appear to have been their ordinary clothing. They spoke against the pride and vain-glory of man; and their very garb and manner gave additional weight to the solemn words they delivered. They lived in a retired manner; and, when not sent on special errands, they employed their vacant time in the instruction of youth;—as this is probably what we are to understand by the schools of the Prophets, such as those over which Elijah, Elisha, and Samuel presided; though no doubt there were some of their disciples that were made partakers of the prophetic gift.

The Prophets do not appear to have been called to a life of celibacy. Isaiah was a married man, chap. viii. 3. and so was Hosea, chap. i. 2, unless we are to understand the latter case enigmatically. And that the sons of the Prophets had wives we learn from 2 Kings iv. 1, &c.; and from this, as well as from the case of the Apostles, we learn that the matrimonial state was never considered either by Moses or the Prophets, Christ or his Apostles, as disqualifying men from officiating in the most holy offices; as we find Moses, Aaron, Isaiah, Zechariah, and Peter, all married men, and yet the most eminent of their Order.

Of Isaiah, the writer of this Book, very little is known. He is supposed to have been of the tribe of Judah, and of the royal family of David. Himself says that he was the son of Amoz; and others tell us that this Amoz was the son of Joash, and brother of Amaziah, king of Judah. "Of his family and tribe we know nothing," says R. D. Kimchi, "only our Rabbins, of blessed memory, have received the tradition that Amoz and Amaziah were brothers:" and it is on this ground that he has been called the royal prophet. It has been also said that Isaiah gave his daughter in marriage to Manasseh, son of Hezekiah, king of Judah; and that himself was put to death by Manasseh, being sawn asunder with a wooden saw. But all these traditions stand on very slender authority, and are worthy of very little regard. Several commentators have thought that his prophecies afford presumptive evidence of his high descent and elegant education:—1. Because his style is more correct and majestic than any of the other Prophets. 2. That his frequent use of images taken from royalty is a proof that this state was familiar to him, being much at court, as he must have been, had he been the brother of the king. These things are spoken by many with much confidence; for my own part, I had rather look to his inspiration for the correctness of his language and the dignity of his sentiments, than to those very inferior helps. On the other hypothesis nothing is left to the Divine Spirit, except the mere matter of his Prophecies. Suppositions of this kind are not creditable to Divine Revelation.

Isaiah appears to have had two sons,—who were typical in their names: one, Shear Jashub, "a remnant shall return," chap. vii. 3.;—and the other Maher-shalal-hash-Baz, "haste to the spoil: quick to the prey," chap. viii. 3.: and it is remarkable, that his wife is called a prophetess. Other matters relative to his character will appear in the Notes on his Prophecies.

In the Notes on this Book I have consulted throughout the Commentary of Rabbi David Kimchi; and have made much use of Bishop Lowth, as the reader will perceive. His various Readings I have re-collated with Dr. Kennicott and B. De Rossi; in consequence of which I have been enabled in many cases to add double weight to the authorities by which the learned Bishop was supported in the Readings which he has either mentioned, or received into the Text. Bishop Lowth could avail himself only of the Collections of Dr. Kennicott—the sheets of Isaiah in the Doctor's edition of the Hebrew Bible, as they passed through the press, were sent by him to the Bishop: but the Collections of De Rossi, more numerous and more accurate than those of Dr. Kennicott, were not published till six years after the Doctor had published his Bible, and about one year before this most learned and pious prelate went to his reward. I have also consulted some excellent Hebrew MSS. in my own library, from six to eight hundred years old, which have afforded me additional help in estimating the worth and importance of the Various Readings in the above Collections of Kennicott and De Rossi, as far as they are employed in the illustration of this Prophet. From the ancient English MS. Version of this Prophet I have extracted several curious translations of select parts; which I have no doubt will meet with every Reader's approbation. Though I have followed Bishop Lowth chiefly, yet I have consulted the best Commentators within my reach, in order to remove doubts, and clear up difficult passages; but have studied to be as brief as possible, that the Sacred Text might not be encumbered either with the multitude or length of the Notes, nor the Reader's time occupied with any thing not essentially necessary.

This Book, according to Vitringa, is twofold in its matter:—1. Prophetical. 2. Historical.

1. The prophetical is divided into five parts:—Part I. From chap. i. to chap. xiii. is directed to the Jews and Ephraimites; and contains five prophetic discourses. Part II. From chap. xiii. to chap. xxiv. declares the fate of the Babylonians, Philistines, Moabites, Syrians, Egyptians, Tyrians, and others; and contains eight prophetic discourses. Part III. From chap. xxiv. to chap. xxxvi. denounces judgments on the disobedient Jews, and consoles the true followers of God. This contains three discourses. Part IV. From chap. xl. to chap. xlix. refers to the Messiah and the deliverance of the Jews from the Babylonians; and contains four discourses.—

Part V. From chap. xlix. to the end, points out the passion, crucifixion, and glory, of the Messiah, and contains five discourses.

2. The historical part begins with chap. xxxvi. and ends with chap. xxxix., and relates some of the transactions of the Prophet's own times. On this Analysis Vitringa explains the whole Prophecy.

Calmet takes a different view of it. He divides it into eight parts, viz.—Part I. He supposes to relate to Jotham, son of Uzziah, king of Judah: this is included in the first six chapters. The Prophet inveighs against the crimes of the Jews; declares the judgments of God against them; predicts a more auspicious time, which took place under Hezekiah, who was a type of Christ. Part II. concerns the reign of Ahaz, and comprehends the six following chapters, in which he speaks of the siege of Jerusalem by Pekah and Resin; of the birth of Immanuel, as a proof of the approaching deliverance of Judah; predicts the calamities that were to fall on the kingdoms of Syria and Israel, &c. Part III. contains many prophecies against Babylon, the Philistines, Moabites, &c. Part IV. contains prophecies against Egypt, Babylon, Kedar, Arabia, &c. Part V. concerns the reign of Hezekiah, and especially the war of Sennacherib against the Jews, &c. The four historical chapters inserted here, contain the account of the fulfilment of the preceding Prophecy. Part VI., included in chap. xl. to xlv. inclusive, contains the Prophet's discourses on the existence of God, the truth and perfection of the Jewish religion, the vanity of idolatry, the return of the people from captivity, and the coming of Christ. Part VII. From chap. xlix. to chap. lvi. the Prophet, personifying the Messiah, speaks of His sufferings, death, and burial;—predicts the return from the Babylonish Captivity, and the glory of the latter days. Part VIII. speaks of the coming of the Messiah, and the vocation of the Gentiles;—the disgrace and confusion of all false prophets and teachers; and the establishment of a pure and holy church, &c.

I might give other Analyses of this Book, but it is needless:—from what is before the Reader he will at once see how vain all attempts of this kind are, and how foolish to make divisions and subdivisions, partitions and classifications, where the Spirit of God has given no intimations of the kind; and where even the most learned men differ in their arrangement.

"God never left His work for man to mend." The Prophecies were given as they were necessary, and no classification was ever intended. We should take them up as we find them; and humbly endeavour to find out their objects and meaning, and how far ourselves are interested in these denunciations of Divine wrath;—and in those glorious promises of mercy and salvation through Him who was once the Hope of Israel,—and now is Salvation to the ends of the earth.

Bishop Lowth's Translation is by far the best that has ever been made of this sublime Prophet:—as he thoroughly understood his language, so he entered deeply into his spirit. Were it allowable, I should be glad to supersede what is called the Authorised Version, and put that of the learned Bishop in its place, as being abundantly more correct and nervous,—rendering the Sacred Text more clearly, and consequently more intelligibly, so that even the common Reader can understand this Text better without a comment, than he can the Authorised Version, even with one. His Notes, which are a treasure of learning and sound criticism, I have almost universally preserved, with which my own are intermingled, distinguished by being put within brackets; and I have often adopted his Text, as being vastly superior to that in common use: the catch words from this, included in parentheses, follow those from the Authorised Version. Should a New Translation of the Bible be ever published by Authority, I have no doubt that, with a few alterations, that of Bishop Lowth would be adopted as the standard.

THE BOOK

OF THE

PROPHET ISAIAH.

Chronological Notes relative to the commencement of Isaiah's prophecy.

Year from the Creation of the World, according to the computation of Archbishop Ussher, 3244.—Year from the Deluge, according to the generally received Hebrew Text, 1588.—Year from the vocation of Abram, 1161.—Year from the foundation of Solomon's Temple, 251.—First year of the fifth Olympiad.—Year before the building of Rome, according to the Varronian computation, 7.—Fifteenth year of the reign of Thurimas, king of Macedon.—Eleventh year of the reign of Theopompus, king of Lacedæmon.—Second year of the reign of Alyattes, king of Lydia.—Eighteenth year of Æschylus, perpetual archon of the Athenians.—Second year of the reign of Pekahiah, king of Israel.—Fifty-first year of the reign of Azariah, or Uzziah, king of Judah.—Epoch of the establishment of the Ephori at Lacedæmon by Theopompus.

CHAPTER I.

The Prophet, with a boldness and majesty becoming the herald of the Most High, begins with calling on the whole creation to attend when Jehovah speaks, 2. A charge of gross insensibility and ingratitude is then brought against the Jews, by contrasting their conduct with that of the ox and ass, the most stupid of animals, 3. This leads to an amplification of their guilt, 4; highly aggravated by their slighting the chastisements and judgments of God, though repeated till they had been left almost like Sodom and Gomorrah, 5—9. The incidental mention of those places leads to an address to the rulers and people of the Jews, (under the character of princes of Sodom, and people of Gomorrah,) no less spirited and severe than it is elegant and unexpected, 10. The vanity of trusting to the performance of outward rites and ceremonies of religion is then exposed, 11—15; and the necessity of repentance and reformation is strongly enjoined 16, 17, and urged by the most encouraging promises as well as by the most awful threatenings, 18—20. But neither of these producing the proper effect on that people who were the Prophet's charge, he bitterly laments their degeneracy, 21—23; and concludes with introducing God, declaring his purpose of inflicting such heavy judgments as would entirely cut off the wicked, and excite in the righteous, who should also pass through the furnace, an everlasting shame and abhorrence of every thing connected with idolatry, the source of their misery, 24—31.

ISAIAH exercised the prophetical office during a long period of time, if he lived to the reign of Mannasseh; for the lowest computation, beginning from the year in which Uzziah died, when some suppose him to have received his first appointment to that office, brings it to sixty-one years. But the tradition of the Jews that he was put to death by Manasseh is very uncertain; and one of their principal Rabbins, (Aben Ezra, Com. in Isa. i. 1.) seems rather to think that he died before Hezekiah, which is indeed more probable. It is however certain that he lived at least to the fifteenth or sixteenth year of Hezekiah; this makes the least possible term of the duration of his prophetical office about forty-eight years. The time of the delivery of some of his prophecies is either expressly marked, or sufficiently clear from the history to which they relate: that of a few others may with some probability be deduced from internal marks; from expressions, descriptions, and circumstances interwoven. It may therefore be of some use in this respect, and for the better understanding of his prophecies in general, to give here a summary view of the history of his time.

The kingdom of Judah seems to have been in a more flourishing condition during the reigns of Uzziah and Jotham, than at any other time after the revolt of the ten tribes. The former recovered the port of Elath on the Red Sea which the Edomites had taken in the reign of Joram. He was successful in his wars with the Philistines, and took from them several cities, Gath, Jabneh, Ashdod; as likewise against some people of Arabia Deserta, and against the Ammonites, whom he compelled to pay him tribute. He repaired and improved the fortifications of Jerusalem; and had a great army, well appointed and disciplined. He was no less attentive to the arts of peace; and very much encouraged agriculture, and the breeding of cattle. Jotham maintained the establishments and improvements made by his father: added to what Uzziah had done in strengthening the frontier places; conquered the Ammonites, who had revolted; and exacted from them a more stated and probably a larger tribute. However, at the latter end of his time, the league between Pekah king of Israel, and Retsin king of Syria, was formed against Judah; and they began to carry their designs into execution.

But in the reign of Ahaz his son, not only all these advantages were lost, but the kingdom of Judah was brought to the brink of destruction. Pekah king of Israel overthrew the army of Ahaz, who lost in battle one hundred and twenty thousand men; and the Israelites carried away captives two hundred thousand women and children, which however were released and sent home again, upon the remonstrance of the Prophet Oded. After this, as it should seem, (see Vitringa on chap. vii. 2.) the two kings of Israel and Syria joining their forces, laid siege to Jerusalem: but in this attempt they failed of success. In this distress Ahaz called in the assistance of Tiglath-Pileser king of Assyria; who invaded the kingdoms of Israel and Syria, and slew Retsin; but he was more in danger than ever from his too powerful ally; to purchase whose forbearance, as he had before bought his assistance, he was forced to strip himself and his people of all the wealth he could possibly raise, from his own treasury, from the temple, and from the country. About the time of the siege of Jerusalem the Syrians took Elath, which was never after recovered. The Edomites likewise, taking advantage of the distress of Ahaz, ravaged Judea, and carried away many captives. The Philistines recovered what they had before lost; and took many places in Judea, and maintained themselves there. Idolatry was established by the command of the king in Jerusalem, and throughout Judea; and the service of the temple was either intermitted, or converted into an idolatrous worship.

Hezekiah, his son, at his accession to the throne, immediately set about the restoration of the legal worship of God both in Jerusalem and through Judea. He cleansed and repaired the temple, and held a solemn passover. He improved the city, repaired the fortification, erected magazines of all sorts, and built a new aqueduct. In the fourth year of his reign Shalmaneser king of Assyria invaded the kingdom of Israel, took Samaria and carried away the Israelites into captivity and replaced them by different people sent from his own country; and this was the final destruction of that kingdom in the sixth year of the reign of Hezekiah.

Hezekiah was not deterred by this alarming example from refusing to pay the tribute to the king of Assyria, which had been imposed on Ahaz: this brought on the invasion of Sennacherib in the fourteenth year of his reign, an account of which is inserted among the prophecies of Isaiah. After a great and miraculous deliverance from so powerful an enemy, Hezekiah continued his reign in peace. He prospered in all his works, and left his kingdom in a flourishing state to his son Manasseh, a son in every respect unworthy of such a father. See Lowth.

NOTES ON CHAP. I.

Verse 1. The vision of Isaiah] It seems doubtful whether this title belong to the whole book, or only to the prophecy contained in this Chapter. The former part of the title seems properly to belong to this particular prophecy; the latter part, which enumerates the kings of Judah under whom Isaiah exercised his prophetical office, seems to extend it to the whole collection of prophecies delivered in the course of his ministry. Vitringa (to whom the world is greatly indebted for his learned labours on this Prophet; and to whom we should have owed much more, if he had not so totally devoted himself to Masoretic authority,) has, I think, very judiciously resolved this doubt. He supposes that the former part of the title was originally prefixed to this single prophecy; and that, when the collection of all Isaiah's prophecies was made, the enumeration of the kings of Judah was added, to make it at the same time a proper title to the whole book. As such it was plainly taken in 2 Chron. xxxii. 32. where the Book of Isaiah is cited by this title: "The vision of Isaiah the Prophet, the son of Amots."

The prophecy contained in this first Chapter stands single and unconnected, making an entire piece of itself. It contains a severe remonstrance against the corruptions prevailing among the Jews of that time; powerful exhortations to repentance; grievous threatenings to the impenitent; and gracious promises of better times, when the nation shall have been reformed by the just judgments of God. The expression, upon the whole, is clear; the connection of the several parts easy; and in regard to the images, sentiments, and style, it gives a beautiful example of the prophet's elegant manner of writing; though perhaps it may not be equal in these respects to many of the following prophecies.

Verse 2. Hear O heavens—(Hear, O ye heavens,)] God is introduced as entering into a public action, or pleading, before the whole world, against his disobedient people. The prophet, as herald or officer to proclaim the summons to the court, calls upon all created beings, celestial and terrestrial, to attend, and bear witness to the truth of his plea, and the justice of his cause. The same scene is more fully displayed in the noble exordium of Psa. l. where God summons all mankind, from east to west, to be present to hear His appeal; and the solemnity is held on Sion, where He is attended with the same terrible pomp that accompanied Him on mount Sinai:

> "A consuming fire goes before Him,
> And round Him rages a violent tempest:
> He calleth the heavens from above,
> And the earth, that He may contend in judgment with > His people." Psa. l. 3, 4.

By the same bold figure Micah calls upon the mountains, that is, the whole country of Judea, to attend to him, chap. vi. 1, 2.

> "Arise, plead thou before the mountains,
> And let the hills hear Thy voice.
> Hear, O ye mountains, the controversy of JEHOVAH;
> And ye, O ye strong foundations of the earth:
> For JEHOVAH hath a controversy with His people,
> And He will plead His cause against Israel."

With the like invocation Moses introduces his sublime song; the design of which was the same as that of this prophecy. "to testify as a witness, against the Israelites," for their disobedience, Deut. xxxi. 21.

> "Give ear, O ye heavens, and I will speak;
> And let the earth hear the words of my mouth."
> Deut. xxxii. 1.

This in the simple yet strong oratorical style of Moses is, "I call heaven and earth to witness against thee this day; life and death have I set before thee; the blessing and the curse: choose now life, that thou mayest live, thou and thy seed." Deut. xxx. 19. The poetical style by an apostrophe, sets the personification in a much stronger light.

Hath spoken—(That speaketh)] I render it in the present time, pointing it דֹּבֵר dober. There seems to be an impropriety in demanding attention to a speech already delivered. [But the present reading may stand, as the prophet may be here understood to declare to the people what the Lord had first spoken to him.]

I have nourished] The Septuagint have εγεννησα, I have begotten. Instead of גִּדַּלְתִּי gidalti, they read יָלַדְתִּי yildati; the word little differing from the other, and perhaps more proper: which the Chaldee likewise seems to favour; "vocavi eos filios." See Exod. iv. 22. Jer. xxxi. 9.

Verse 3. The ox knoweth] An amplification of the gross insensibility of the disobedient Jews, by comparing them with the most heavy and stupid of all animals, yet not so insensible as they. Bochart has well illustrated the comparison, and shown the peculiar force of it. "He sets them lower than the beasts, and even than the most stupid of all beasts; for there is scarcely any more so than the ox and the ass. Yet these acknowledge their master; they know the manger of their lord; by whom they are fed, not for their own, but for his good; neither are they looked upon as children, but as beasts of burden; neither are they advanced to honours, but oppressed with great and daily labours. While the Israelites, chosen by the mere favour of God, adopted as sons, promoted to the highest dignity, yet acknowledged not their Lord and their God; but despised His commandments, though in the highest degree equitable and just." Hieroz. i. col. 409.

Jeremiah's comparison to the same purpose is equally elegant; but has not so much spirit and severity as this of Isaiah.

"Even the stork in the heavens knoweth her season;
And the turtle, and the swallow, and the crane, observe the time of their coming:
But my people doth not know the judgment of JEHOVAH.
Jer. viii. 7.

Hosea has given a very elegant turn to the same image, in the way of metaphor or allegory:—

"I drew them with human cords, with the bands of love:
And I was to them as he that lifteth up the yoke upon their cheek;
And I laid down their fodder before them."
Hos. xi. 4.

Salomo ben Melech thus explains the middle part of the verse, which is somewhat obscure: "I was to them at their desire as they that have compassion on a heifer, lest she be over-worked in ploughing; and that lift up the yoke from off her neck, and rest it upon her cheek, that she may not still draw, but rest from her labour an hour or two in the day."

But Israel] The Septuagint, Syriac, Aquila, Theodotion, and Vulgate, read וישראל va-yisrael, BUT Israel, adding the conjunction; which being rendered as an adversative, sets the opposition in a stronger light.

Doth not know] The same ancient Versions agree in adding ME, which very properly answers, and indeed is almost necessarily required to answer, the words possessor and lord preceding. Ισραηλ δε ΜΕ ουκ εγνω. Sept. "Israel autem ME non cognovit," Vulg. Ισραηλ δε ΜΟΥ ουκ εγνω. Aquil., Theod. The testimony of so scrupulous an interpreter as Aquila is of great weight in this case. And both his and Theodotion's rendering is such, as shows plainly, that they did not add the word MOY to help out the sense; for it only embarrasses it. It also clearly determines what was the original reading in the old copies from which they translated. It could not be ידעני yadâni, which most obviously answers to the version of the Septuagint, and Vulgate, for it does not accord with that of Aquila and Theodotion. The version of these latter interpreters, however injudicious, clearly ascertains both the phrase, and the order of the words, of the original Hebrew: it was וישראל אותי לא ידע va-yisrael othi lo yadâ. The word אותי othi, has been lost out of the text. The very same phrase is used by Jeremiah, chap. iv. 22. עמי אותי לא ידעו âmmi othi lo yedâu. And the order of the words must have been as above represented; for they have joined ישראל yisrael, with אותי othi, as in regimine: they could not have taken it in this sense, Israel MEUS non cognovit, had either this phrase or the order of the words been different. I have endeavoured to set this matter in a clear light, as it is the first example of a whole word lost out of the text; of which the Reader will find many other plain examples in the course of these Notes. [But Rosenmuller contends that this is unnecessary, as the passage may be translated, Israel knows nothing: my people have no understanding.]

The Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgate, read ועמי veâmmi, "and my people:" and so likewise sixteen MSS. [of Kennicott, and fourteen of De Rossi.]

Verse 4. Ah sinful nation—(Degenerate)] Five MSS. (one of them ancient) read משחיתם mashechitim, without the first י yod; in hophel, corrupted, not corrupters. See the same word in the same form, and in the same sense, Prov. xxv. 26.

Are corrupters—(Are estranged)] Thirty-two MSS. (five ancient) and two editions, read נזורו nazoru: which reading determines the word to be from the root זור zur, to alienate, not from נזר nazar, to separate; so Kimchi understands it. See also Annotat. in Noldium, 68.

They are gone away backward—(They have turned their backs upon him.)] So Kimchi explains it: "they have turned unto Him the back, and not the face." See Jer. ii. 27. vii. 24. I have been forced to render this line paraphrastically; is the verbal translation "they are estranged backward" would have been unintelligible.

Verse 5. Why should ye be stricken any more?—(On what part, &c.)] The Vulgate renders מה על âl mah, super quo, (see Job xxxviii. 6. 2 Chron. xxxii. 10.) upon what part. And so Abendana on Sal. ben Melech.: "There are some who explain it thus: Upon what limb shall you be smitten, if you add defection? for already for your sins have you been smitten upon all of them; so that there is not to be bound in you a whole limb on which you can be smitten." Which agrees with what follows: from the sole of the foot even to the head, there is no soundness therein: and the sentiment and image is exactly the same with that of Ovid, Pont. ii. 7, 42.

"Vix habet in nobis jam nova plaga locum."

[There is no place on you for a new stripe.]

Or that still more expressive line of Euripides; the great force and effect of which Longinus ascribes to its close and compressed structure, analogous to the sense which it expresses:

Γέμω κακῶν δὴ· κ' οὐκετ' ἐσθ' ὅπῃ τιθῇ.

I'm full of miseries: there's no room for more.
Herc. Fur. 1245. Long. sect. 40.

"On what part will ye strike again; will ye add correction?" This is addressed to the instruments of God's vengeance; those that inflicted the punishment, who or whatsoever they were. "Ad verbum certæ personæ intelligendæ sunt, quibus ista actio [quæ per verbum exprimitur] competit." [The words are addressed to the persons who were the agents employed in the work expressed by the original word,] as Glassius says in a similar case, Phil. Sacr. i. 3, 22. See chap. viii. 4.

As from ידע yadâ, דעה daâh, knowledge; from יעץ yaâts, עצה âtsah, counsel; from ישן yashan, שנה shanah, sleep, &c. so from יסר yasar, is regularly derived סרה sarah, correction.

Verse 5. The whole head is sick,] [The king and the priests are equally gone away from truth and righteousness. Or the state is oppressed by its enemies, and the church corrupted in its rulers and in its members.]

Verse 6. They have not been closed, &c.—(It hath not been pressed, &c.)] The art of medicine in the east consists chiefly in external applications: accordingly the prophet's images in this place are all taken from surgery. Sir John Chardin, in his note on Prov. iii. 8. "It shall be health to thy navel, and marrow to thy bones," observes, that "the comparison is taken from the plaisters, ointments, oils, frictions, which are made use of in the East upon the belly and stomach in most maladies. Being ignorant in the villages of the art of making decoctions and potions, and of the proper doses of such things, they generally make use of external medicines." Harmer's Observations on Scripture, vol. ii. p. 488. And in surgery their materia medica is extremely simple: oil making the principal part of it. "In India," says Tavernier, "they have a certain preparation of oil and melted grease, which they commonly use for the healing of wounds." Voyage Ind. So the good Samaritan poured oil and wine on the wounds of the distressed Jew: wine cleansing and somewhat astringent, proper for a fresh wound; oil, mollifying and healing. Luke x. 34. [Kimchi has a judicious remark here: "When various medicines are applied, and no healing takes place, that disorder is considered as coming immediately from God."]

Of the three verbs in this sentence one is in the singular number in the Text, another is singular in two MSS (one of them ancient) חבשה chobeshah; and the Syriac and Vulgate render all of them in the singular number.

Verse 7—9. Your country is desolate] The description of the ruined and desolate state of the country in these verses does not suit with any part of the prosperous times of Uzziah and Jotham. It very well agrees with the time of Ahaz, when Judea was ravaged by the joint invasion of the Israelites and Syrians, and by the incursions of the Philistines and Edomites. The date of this prophecy is therefore generally fixed to the time of Ahaz. But on the other hand it may be considered whether those instances of idolatry which are urged in ver. 29, (the worshipping in groves and gardens,) having been at all times too commonly practised, can be supposed to be the only ones which the Prophet would insist upon in the time of Ahaz; who spread the grossest idolatry through the whole country, and introduced it even into the temple; and, to complete his abominations, made his son pass through the fire to Moloch. It is said, 2 Kings xv. 27. that in Jotham's time—"the Lord began to send against Judah, Retsin and Pekah." If we may suppose any invasion from that quarter to have been actually made at the latter end of Jotham's reign, I should choose to refer this prophecy to that time.

[And your cities are burned—Nineteen of Dr. Kennicott's MSS. and twenty-two of De Rossi's, some of my own, with the Syriac and Arabic, add the conjunction, which makes the hemistich more complete.]

Verse 7. זרים zarim (at the end of the verse.) This reading, though confirmed by all the ancient Versions, gives us no good sense; for "your land is devoured by strangers; and is desolate, as if overthrown by strangers" is a mere tautology, or, what is as bad, an identical comparison. Aben

Ezra thought that the word in its present form might be taken for the same with זרם zerem, an inundation: Schultens is of the same opinion; (see Taylor's Concord.) and Schindler in his Lexicon explains it in the same manner: and so, says Kimchi, some explain it. Abendana endeavours to reconcile it to grammatical analogy in the following manner. —"זרים zarim is the same with זרם zerem; that is, as overthrown by an inundation of waters: and these two words have the same analogy as קדם kadem and קדים kedim. Or it may be a concrete of the same form with שכיר shekir; and the meaning will be,—as overthrown by rain pouring down violently, and causing a flood." On Sal. ben Melech, in loc. But I rather suppose the true reading to be זרם zerem, and have translated it accordingly: the word זרים zerim in the line above, seems to have caught the transcriber's eye, and to have led him into this mistake. [But this conjecture of the learne dprelate is not confirmed by any MS. yet discovered.]

Verse 8. As a cottage in a vineyard—(As a shed in a vineyard)] A little temporary hut, covered with boughs, straw, turf, or the like materials, for a shelter from the heat by day, and the cold and dews by night, for the watchman that kept the garden or vineyard during the short season the fruit was ripening, see Job xxvii. 18. and presently removed when it had served that purpose. See Harmer's Observ. i. 454. They were probably obliged to have such a constant watch to defend the fruit from the jackals. "The jackal," (chical of the Turks,) says Hasselquist, (Travels, p. 227.) "is a species of mustela which is very common in Palestine, especially during the vintage; and often destroys whole vineyards, and gardens of cucumbers." "There is also plenty of the canis vulpes, the fox, near the convent of St. John in the desert, about vintage time; for they destroy all the vines unless they are strictly watched." Ibid. p. 184. See Cant. ii. 15.

Fruits of the gourd kind, melons, water-melons, cucumbers, &c. are much used, and in great request in the Levant, on account of their cooling quality. The Israelites in the wilderness regretted the loss of the cucumbers and the melons among the other good things of Egypt, Numb. xi. 5. In Egypt, the season of water-melons which are most in request, and which the common people then chiefly live upon, lasts but three weeks. See Hasselquist, p. 256. Tavernier makes it of longer continuance:—"L'on y void de grands carreaux de melons et de concombres; mais beaucoup plus des derniers, dont les Levantins font leur delices. Le plus souvent ils les mangent sans les peler, après quoi ils vont boire une verre d'eau. Dans toute l'Asie c'est la nourriture ordinaire du petit peuple pendant trois ou quatre mois; toute la famille en vit; et quand un enfant demande à manger, au lieu qu'en France ou aillieurs nous lui donnerions du pain, dans le Levant on lui presente un concombre, qu'il mange cru comme on le vient de cueillir.—Les concombres dans le Levant ont une bonté particuliere, et quoiqu'on les mange crus, ils ne font jamais de mal." Tavernier, Relat. du Serrail, cap. xix.—["There are to be seen great beds of melons and cucumbers, but a greater number of the latter, of which the Levantines are particularly fond In general they eat them without taking off the rind, after which they drink a glass of water. In every part of Asia this is the aliment of the common people for three or four months; the whole family live on them; and when a child asks something to eat, instead of giving it a piece of bread, as is done in France and other countries, they present it with a cucumber, which it eats raw, as gathered. Cucumbers in the Levant are peculiarly excellent; and, although eaten raw, they are seldom injurious."]

[As a lodge, &c.—That is, after the fruit was gathered; the lodge being then permitted to fall into decay. Such was the desolate ruined state of the city.]

As a besieged city—(A city taken by siege)] So the ὡς πολις πολιορκουμενη; Vulgate; see also the Septuagint.

Verse 9. The LORD of hosts (Jehovah God of hosts)] As this title of God, יהוה צבאות yehovah tsebaoth, "JEHOVAH of Hosts" occurs here for the first time, I think it proper to note, that I translate it always, as in this place, "JEHOVAH God of Hosts;" taking it as an elliptical expression for יהוה אלהי צבאות yehovah elohey tsebaoth. This title imports that JEHOVAH is the God, or Lord, of hosts, or armies; as he is the Creator and Supreme Governor of all beings in heaven and earth, and disposeth and ruleth them all in their several orders and stations; the Almighty, Universal Lord.

[We should have been as Sodom—As completely and finally ruined as that and the cities of the plain were, no vestige of which remains at this day.]

Verse 10. Ye princes of Sodom—(Ye rulers of Sodom)] The incidental mention of Sodom and Gomorrah in the preceding verse suggested to the Prophet this spirited address to the rulers and inhabitants of Jerusalem, under the character of princes of Sodom and people of Gomorrah. Two examples of a sort of elegant turn of the like kind may be

[AND—like unto Gomorrah.—The ו vau is added by thirty-one of Kennicott's MSS. twenty-nine of De Rossi's, and one, very ancient, of my own. See on ver. 6.]

Verse 11. To what purpose, &c.—(What have I to do)] The Prophet Amos has expressed the same sentiments with great elegance:—

"I hate, I despise your feasts;
And I will not delight in the odour of your solemnities:
Though ye offer unto me burnt-offerings;
And your meat-offerings I will not accept:
Neither will I regard the peace-offering of your fatlings.
Take away from me the noise of your songs;
And the melody of your viols I will not hear.
But let judgment roll down like waters;
And righteousness like a mighty stream,"

Amos v. 21—24.

[So has Persius:—see Sat. ii. v. 71—75.—

"Quin damus id Superis, de magna quod dare lancæ," &c. The two or three last pages of Plato's Euthyphro contain the same idea. Sacrifices and prayers are not profitable to the offerer, nor acceptable to the gods, unless accompanied with an upright life.]

Verse 11. The fat of fed beasts, &c.] The fat and the blood are particularly mentioned, because these were in all sacrifices set apart to God. The fat was always burnt upon the altar; and the blood was partly sprinkled, differently on different occasions, and partly poured out at the bottom of the altar. See Lev. iv.

[Verse 12. When ye come to appear—Instead of לראות leraoth, to appear, one MS. has לרות liroth, to see. See De Rossi. The appearing here before God refers chiefly to the three solemn annual festivals. See Exod. xxiii. 14.]

Tread my courts (no more)] So the Septuagint divide the sentence, joining the end of this verse to the beginning of the next. [πατειν την αυλην μου, ου προσθησεσθε, "To tread my court ye shall not add—ye shall not be again accepted in worship."]

Verse 13. The new moons and sabbaths—(The fast and the day of restraint)] אן ועצרה aven ve-âtserah. These words are rendered in many different manners by different interpreters; to a good and probable sense by all; but, I think, by none in such a sense as can arise from the phrase itself, agreeably to the idiom of the Hebrew language. Instead of אן aven, the Septuagint manifestly read צום tsom, νηστειαν, "the fast." This Houbigant has adopted. The Prophet could not well have omitted the fast in the enumeration of their solemnities; nor the abuse of it among the instances of their hypocrisy, which he has treated at large with such force and elegance in his fifty-eighth chapter. Observe also, that the Prophet Joel (chap. i. 14., and ii. 15.) twice joins together the fast and the day of restraint:

קדשו צום קראו עצרה
âtserah kireu tsom kadeshu
"Sanctify a fast; proclaim a day of restraint:"

Which shows how properly they are here joined together. עצרה âtserah, the restraint, is rendered, both here and in other places in our English translation, the solemn assembly. Certain holy days ordained by the law were distinguished by a particular charge that "no servile work should be done therein." Lev. xxviii. 36. Numb. xxix. 35. Deut. xvi. 8. This circumstance clearly explains the reason of the name, the restraint, or the day of restraint, given to those days.

If I could approve of any translation of these two words which I have met with, it should be that of the Spanish version of the Old Testament, made for the use of the Spanish Jews: "tortura y detenimento," "it is a pain and a constraint unto me." But I still think that the reading of the Septuagint is more probably the truth.

Verse 16. Wash ye.] Referring to the preceding verse, "your hands are full of blood:" and alluding to the legal washings commanded on several occasions. See Lev. xiv. 8, 9, 47.

Verse 17. Relieve the oppressed—(Amend that which is corrupted)] אשרו חמוץ ashern chamots. In rendering this obscure phrase I follow Bochart. (Hieroz. Part 1. lib. ii. cap. 7.) though I am not perfectly satisfied with his explication of it.

Verse 18. Though your sins be as scarlet] שני shani, "scarlet, or crimson," dibaphum, twice dipped, or double dyed; from שנה shanah, iterare, to double, or to do a thing twice. This derivation seems much more probable than that which Salmasius prefers, from שנן shanan, acuere, to whet, from the sharpness and strength of the colour, οξυφοινικον. תלע tela, the same; properly the worm, vermiculus, (from whence vermeil,) for this colour was produced from a worm, or insect, which grew in a coccus or excrescence of a shrub of the ilex kind; (see Plin. Nat. Hist. xvi. 8.) like the cochineal worm in the Opuntia of America. See Ulloa's Voyage, B. v. ch. 2. note to page 342. There is a shrub of this kind that grows in Provence and Languedoc, and produces the like insect, called the kermes oak, (see Miller, Dict. Quercus;) from kermez, the Arabic word for this colour; whence our word crimson is derived.

> "Neque amissos colores
> Lana refert medicata fuco,"

says the poet; applying the same image to a different purpose. To discharge these strong colours is impossible to human art or power: but to the grace and power of God all things, even much more difficult, are possible and easy. [Some copies have כשנים ke-shanim, "like crimson garments."]

[Though they be red, &c.—But the conjunction ו vau is added by twenty-one of Kennicott's, and by forty-two of De Rossi's MSS., by some early editions, with the Septuagint, Syriac, Vulgate, and Arabic. It makes a fuller and more emphatic sense. And though they be red as crimson, &c.)

Verse 19. Ye shall eat the good of the land.] Referring to ver. 7., it shall not be "devoured by strangers."

Verse 20. Ye shall be devoured with the sword—(Ye shall be food for the sword)] The Septuagint and Vulgate read תאכלכם teacalcem, "the sword shall devour you;" which is of much more easy construction than the present reading of the text.

"The Chaldee seems to read בחרב אויב תאכלו bechereb oiyeb teacelu, "ye shall be consumed by the sword of the enemy." The Syriac also reads בחרב bechereb, and renders the verb passively. And the rhythmus seems to require this addition." Dr. Jubb.

[Verse 21. Become a harlot—See before, the Discourse on the Prophetic Style; and see Lowth's Comment. on the place, and De Sacr. Poes. Hebr. Præl. xxxi.]

Verse 22. Wine mixed with water] An image used for the adulteration of wine with more propriety than may at first appear, if what Thevenot says of the people of the Levant of late times were true of them formerly. He says, "they never mingle water with their wine to drink: but drink by itself what water they think proper for abating the strength of the wine." "Lorsque les Persans boivent du vin, ils le prennent tout pur, à la façon des Levantins, qui ne le mêlent jamais avec de l'eau; mais en buvant du vin, de temps en temps ils prennent un pot d'eau, et en boivent de grand traits." Voyage, Part ii. liv. ii. ch. 10. "Ils (les Turcs) n'y mêlent jamais d'eau, et se moquent des Chrétiens, qui en mettent, ce qui leur semble tout à fait ridicule." Ibid. part i. ch. 24.—["The Turks never mingle water with their wine, and laugh at the Christians for doing it, which they consider altogether ridiculous."]

It is remarkable, that whereas the Greeks and Latins by mixed wine always understood wine diluted and lowered with water; the Hebrews on the contrary generally mean by it wine made stronger and more inebriating by the addition of higher and more powerful ingredients, such as honey, spices, defrutum, (or wine inspissated by boiling it down to two-thirds, or one-half, of the quantity,) myrrh, mandragora, opiates, and other strong drugs. Such were the exhilirating, or rather stupifying, ingredients which Helen mixed in the bowl together with the wine for her guests oppressed with grief, to raise their spirits; the composition of which she had learned in Egypt:—

Αυτικ' αρ' εις οινον βαλε φαρμακον, ενθεν επινον,

All sense of woe delivers to the wind." POPE.

Such was the "spiced wine and the juice of pomegranates" mentioned Cant. viii. 2. And how much the eastern people to this day deal in artificial liquors of prodigious strength, the use of wine being forbidden, may be seen in a curious chapter of Kempfer upon that subject. Amœn. Exot. Fasc. iii. Obs. 15.

Thus the drunkard is properly described, (Prov. xxiii. 30.) as one "that seeketh mixed wine," and "is mighty to mingle strong drink," Isa. v. 22. And hence the Psalmist took that highly poetical and sublime image of the cup of God's wrath, called by Isaiah (li. 17.) "the cup of trembling," (causing intoxication and stupefaction, see Chappelow's note on Hariri, p. 33.) containing, as St. John expresses in Greek the Hebrew idea, with the utmost precision, though with a seeming contradiction in terms, κεκερασμενον ακρατον, merum mixtum, pure wine made yet stronger by a mixture of powerful ingredients. Rev. xiv. 10. "In the hand of JEHOVAH," saith the Psalmist, Psa. lxxv. 9. "there is a cup, and the wine is turbid: it is full of a mixed liquor, and he poureth out of it:" (or rather, 'he poureth it out of one vessel into another,' to mix it perfectly; according to the reading expressed by the ancient Versions, ויגר מזה אל זה vayigger mizzeh al zeh, and he pours it from this to that,) "verily the dregs thereof," (the thickest sediment of the strong ingredients mingled with it,) "all the ungodly of the earth shall wring them out, and drink them."

[Rab. D. Kimchi says,—the current coin was adulterated with brass, tin, and other metals; and yet was circulated as good money. The wine also was adulterated with water in the taverns, and sold notwithstanding for pure wine.]

Verse 23. Companions of thieves—(associates)] The Septuagint, Vulgate, and four MSS. read חברי chaberey, without the conjunction ו vau.

Verse 24. Ah, I will ease me—(Aha! I will be eased)] Anger, arising from a sense of injury and affront, especially from those who, from every consideration of duty and gratitude, ought to have behaved far otherwise, is an uneasy and painful sensation: and revenge, executed to the full on the offenders, removes that uneasiness, and consequently is pleasing and quieting, at least for the present. Ezekiel, chap. v. 13. introduces God expressing Himself in the same manner:—

"And mine anger shall be fully accomplished;
And I will make my fury rest upon them;
And I will give myself ease."

This is a strong instance of the metaphor called anthropopathia; by which, throughout the Scriptures, as well the historical as the poetical parts, the sentiments, sensations, and affections, the bodily faculties, qualities, and members, of men, and even of brute animals, are attributed to God; and that with the utmost liberty and latitude of application. The foundation of this is obvious; it arises from necessity; we have no idea of the natural attributes of God, of His pure essence, of His manner of existence, of His manner of acting; when, therefore, we would treat on these subjects, we find ourselves forced to express them by sensible images. But necessity leads to beauty: this is true of metaphor in general, and in particular of this kind of metaphor; which is used with great elegance and sublimity in the sacred poetry: and, what is very remarkable, in the grossest instances of the application of it, it is generally the most striking and the most sublime. The reason seems to be this:—when the images are taken from the superior faculties of the human nature, from the purer and more generous affections, and applied to God, we are apt to acquiesce in the notion; we overlook the metaphor, and take it as a proper attribute: but when the idea is gross and offensive, as in this passage of Isaiah, where the impatience of anger and the pleasure of revenge is attributed to God, we are immediately shocked at the application, the impropriety strikes us at once; and the mind, casting about for something in the Divine nature analogous to the image, lays hold on some great, obscure, vague idea, which she endeavours in vain to comprehend, and is lost in immensity and astonishment. See De Sacr. Poësi Hebr. Præl. xvi. sub fin. where this matter is treated and illustrated by examples.

[Verse 25. I will turn my hand upon thee—So the common Version: and this seems to be a metaphor taken from the custom of those who, when the metal is melted, strike off the scoriæ with their hand previously to its being poured out into the mould. I have seen this done with the naked hand, and no injury whatever sustained.]

Purge away thy dross—(In the furnace)] The Text has כבר cabbor, which some render "as with soap;" as if it were the same with כבורית ke-borith; so Kimchi: but soap can have nothing to do with the purifying of metals. Others, "according to purity, or purely," as our Version. Le Clerc conjectured that the true reading is כבור kebur, "as in the furnace;" see Ezek. xxii. 18, 20. Dr. Durell proposes only a transposition of letters בכר to the same sense: and so likewise Archbishop Secker. That this is the true reading is highly probable.

Verse 29. For they shall be ashamed of the oaks—(For ye shall be ashamed of the ilexes)] Sacred groves were a very ancient and favourite appendage of idolatry. They were furnished with the temple of the god to whom they were dedicated; with altars, images, and every thing necessary for performing the various rites of worship offered there; and were the scenes of many impure ceremonies, and of much abominable superstition. They made a principal part of the religion of the old inhabitants of Canaan; and the Israelites were commanded to destroy their groves, among other monuments of their false worship. The Israelites themselves became afterwards very much addicted to this species of idolatry.

"When I had brought them into the land,
Which I swore that I would give unto them;
Then they saw every high hill, and every thick tree:
And there they slew their victims;
And there they presented the provocation of their offerings;
And there they placed their sweet savour;
And there they poured out their libations."

Ezek. xx. 28.

"On the tops of the mountains they sacrifice;
And on the hills they burn incense:
Under the oak, and the poplar;
And the ilex, because her shade is pleasant."

Hosea iv. 13.

Of what particular kinds the trees here mentioned are, it cannot be determined with certainty. In regard to אלה ellah, in this place of Isaiah, as well as in Hosea, Celsius (Hierobot.) understands it of the terebinth, because the most ancient interpreters render it so; in the first place the Septuagint. He quotes eight places: but in three of these eight places the copies vary, some having δρυς, the oak, instead of τερεβινθος, the terebinth, or turpentine tree. And he should have told us, that these same Seventy render it in sixteen other places by δρυς, the oak: so that their authority is really against him: and the Septuagint, stant pro quercu, contrary to what he says at first setting out. Add to this that Symmachus, Theodotion, and Aquila, generally render it by δρυς, the oak; the latter only once rendering it by τερεβινθος, the terebinth. His other arguments seem to me not very conclusive; he says, that all the qualities of אלה ellah, agree to the terebinth; that it grows in mountainous countries; that it is a strong tree, long-lived, large and high, and deciduous. All these qualities agree just as well to the oak, against which he contends; and he actually attributes them to the oak in the very next section. But I think neither the oak, nor the terebinth, will do in this place of Isaiah, from the last circumstance which he mentions, their being deciduous, where the prophet's design seems to me to require an evergreen; otherwise the casting of its leaves would be nothing out of the common established course of nature, and no proper image of extreme distress and total desolation, parallel to that of a garden without water, that is, wholly burnt up and destroyed. An ancient, who was an inhabitant and a native of this country, understands it in like manner of a tree blasted with uncommon and immoderate heat; velut arbores, cum frondes æstu torrente decusserunt. Ephrem Syr. in loc. edit. Assemani. Compare Psa. i. 4. Jer. xvii. 8. Upon the whole I have chosen to make it the ilex; which word Vossius (Etymolog.) derives from the Hebrew אלה éllah, that whether the word itself be rightly rendered or not, I might at least preserve the propriety of the poetic image.

[By the ilex the learned prelate means the holly, which, though it generally appear as a sort of shrub, grows in a good soil, where it is unmolested, to a considerable height. I have one in my own garden, rising three stems from the root, and between twenty and thirty feet in height. It is an evergreen.]

Verse 29. For they shall be ashamed—(For ye shall be ashamed)] תבושו teboshu, in the second person, Vulgate, Chaldee, three MSS. [one of my own, ancient] and one edition; and in agreement with the rest of the sentence.

Verse 30. Whose leaf—(Whose leaves)] Twenty-six of Kennicott's, twenty-four of De Rossi's, [one ancient, of my own] and seven editions, read עליה âleyah, in its full and regular form. This is worth remarking, as it accounts for a great number of anomalies of the like kind which want only the same authority to rectify them.

As a garden that hath no water—(A garden wherein is no water.)] In the hotter parts of the Eastern countries, a constant supply of water is so absolutely necessary for the cultivation, and even for the preservation and existence, of a garden, that should it want water but for a few days, every thing in it would be burnt up with the heat, and totally destroyed. There is therefore no garden whatever in those countries but what has such a certain supply, either from some neighbouring river, or from a reservoir of water collected from springs, or filled with rain water in the proper season, in sufficient quantity to afford ample provision for the rest of the year.

Moses having described the habitation of man newly created, as a garden planted with every tree pleasant to the sight and good for food; adds, as a circumstance necessary to complete the idea of a garden, that it was well supplied with water, Gen. ii. 10. and see xiii. 10. "And a river went out of Eden to water the garden."

That the reader may have a clear notion of this matter, it will be necessary to give some account of the management of their gardens in this respect.

"Damascus," says Maundrell, p. 122. "is encompassed with gardens, extending no less, according to common estimation, than thirty miles round; which makes it look like a city in a vast wood. The gardens are thick set with fruit-trees of all kinds, kept fresh and verdant by the waters of the Barrady, (the Chrysorrhoas of the ancients,) which supply both the gardens and the city in great abundance. This river, as soon as it issues out from between the cleft of the mountain before mentioned into the plain, is immediately divided into three streams; of which the middlemost and biggest runs directly to Damascus, and is distributed to all the cisterns and fountains of the city. The other two (which I take to be the work of art) are drawn round, one to the right hand, and the other to the left, on the borders of the gardens, into which they are let as they pass, by little currents, and so dispersed all over the vast wood, insomuch that there is not a garden but has a fine quick stream running through it. The Barrady is almost wholly drunk up by the city and gardens. What small part of it escapes is united, as I was informed, in one channel again on the south-east side of the city; and, after about three or four hours' course, finally loses itself in a bog there, without ever arriving at the sea." This was likewise the case in former times, as Strabo, lib. xvi. Pliny, v. 18. testify; who say, "that this river was expended in canals, and drunk up by watering the place."

"The best sight," says the same Maundrell, p. 39. "that the palace [of the emir of Beroot, anciently Berytus,] affords, and the worthiest to be remembered, is the orange garden. It contains a large quadrangular plat of ground, divided into sixteen lesser squares, four in a row, with walks between them. The walks are shaded with orange trees of a large spreading size. Every one of these sixteen lesser squares in the garden was bordered with stone; and in the stone-work were troughs, very artificially contrived, for conveying the water all over the garden; there being little outlets cut at every tree for the stream as it passed by to flow out and water it." The royal gardens at Ispahan are watered just in the same manner, according to Kempfer's description, Amœn. Exot. p. 193.

This gives us a clear idea of the פלגי מים palgey mayim, mentioned in the first Psalm, and other places of Scripture, "the divisions of waters," the waters distributed in artificial canals; for so the phrase properly signifies. The Prophet

Jeremiah, chap. xvii. 8. has imitated, and elegantly amplified, the passage of the Psalmist above referred to:

"He shall be like a tree planted by the water side,
And which sendeth forth her roots to the aqueduct.
She shall not fear, when the heat cometh;
But her leaf shall be green;
And in the year of drought she shall not be anxious,
Neither shall she cease from bearing fruit."

From this image the son of Sirach, Ecclus. xxiv. 30, 31. has most beautifully illustrated the influence and the increase of religious wisdom in a well prepared heart.

"I also come forth as a canal from a river,
And as a conduit flowing into a paradise.
I said, I will water my garden,
And I will abundantly moisten my border:
And, lo! my canal became a river,
And my river became a sea."

This gives us the true meaning of the following elegant proverb, Prov. xxi. 1.:—

"The heart of the king is like the canals of waters in the hand of JEHOVAH; Whithersoever it pleaseth Him, He inclineth it."

The direction of it is in the hand of JEHOVAH, as the distribution of the water of the reservoir through the garden by different canals is at the will of the gardener.

"Et, cum exustus ager morientibus æstuat herbis,
Ecce supercilio clivosi tramitis undam
Elicit: illa cadens raucum per levia murmur
Saxa ciet, scatebrisque arentia temperat arva."
Virg. Georg. i. 107.

"Then, when the fiery suns too fiercely play,
And shrivell'd herbs on withering stems decay,
The wary ploughman on the mountain's brow
Undams his wat'ry stores; huge torrents flow;
And rattling down the rocks, large moisture yield,
Temp'ring the thirsty fever of the field." DRYDEN.

Solomon, Eccles. ii. 5, 6. mentions his own works of this kind:—

"I made me gardens, and paradises;
And I planted in them all kinds of fruit-trees.
I made me pools of water,
To water with them the grove flourishing with trees."

Maundrell, p. 88. has given a description of the remains, as they are said to be, of these very pools made by Solomon, for the reception and preservation of the waters of a spring, rising at a little distance from them; which will give us a perfect notion of the contrivance and design of such reservoirs. "As for the pools they are three in number, lying in a row above each other; being so disposed that the waters of the uppermost may descend into the second, and those of the second into the third. Their figure is quadrangular, the breadth is the same in all, amounting to about ninety paces. In their length there is some difference between them; the first being about one hundred and sixty paces long, the second two hundred, and the third two hundred and twenty. They are all lined with wall, and plastered; and contain a great depth of water."

The immense works, which were made by the ancient kings of Egypt, for recovering the waters of the Nile when it overflowed, for such uses, are well known. But there never was a more stupendous work of this kind than the reservoir of Saba, or Merab, in Arabia Felix. According to the tradition of the country, it was the work of Balkis, that queen of Sheba who visited Solomon. It was a vast lake formed by the collection of the waters of a torrent in a valley, where, at a narrow pass between two mountains, a very high mole or dam was built. The water of the lake so formed had near twenty fathoms depth; and there were three sluices at different heights, by which, at whatever height the lake stood, the plain below might be watered. By conduits and canals from these sluices the water was constantly distributed in due proportion to the several lands; so that the whole country for many miles became a perfect paradise. The city of Saba, or Merab, was situated immediately below the great dam; a great flood came, and raised the lake above its usual height; the dam gave way in the middle of the night; the waters burst forth at once, and overwhelmed the whole city, with the neighbouring towns and people. The remains of eight tribes were forced to abandon their dwelling, and the beautiful valley became a morass and a desert. This fatal catastrophe happened long before the time of Mohammed who mentions it in the Koran, chap. xxxiv. ver. 15. See also Sale, Prelim. s. i. p. 10., and Michaelis, Quest. aux Voyag. Dan. No. 94. Niebuhr, Descript. de l'Arabie, p. 240.

The prophecy contained in the second, third, and fourth, chapters makes one continued discourse. The first five verses of chap. ii. foretell the kingdom of Messiah, the conversion of the Gentiles, and their admission into it. From the sixth verse to the end of the second chapter is foretold the punishment of the unbelieving Jews for their idolatrous practices, their confidence in their own strength, and distrust of God's protection; and, moreover, the destruction of idolatry, in consequence of the establishment of Messiah's kingdom. The whole third chapter, with the first verse of the fourth, is a prophecy of the calamities of the Babylonian invasion and captivity; with a particular amplification of the distress of the proud and luxurious daughters of Sion. Chap. iv. 2—6. promises to the remnant, which shall have escaped this severe purgation, a future restoration to the favour and protection of God.

This prophecy was probably delivered in the time of Jotham, or perhaps in that of Uzziah, as Isaiah is said to have prophesied in his reign; to which time not any of his prophecies is so applicable as that of these Chapters. The seventh verse of the second, and the latter part of the third chapter, plainly point out times in which riches abounded, and luxury and delicacy prevailed. Plenty of silver and gold could only arise from their commerce; particularly from that part of it, which was carried on by the Red Sea. This circumstance seems to confine the prophecy within the limits above-mentioned, while the port of Elath was in their hands: it was lost under Ahaz, and never recovered.

NOTES ON CHAP. II.

Verse 2. In the last days—(In the latter days)] "Wherever the latter times are mentioned in Scripture, the days of the Messiah are always meant," says Kimchi on this place: and, in regard to this place, nothing can be more clear and certain. [And the mountain of the Lord's house, says the same author, is mount Moriah, on which the temple was built.] The prophet Micah, (chap. iv. 1—4.) has repeated this prophecy of the establishment of the kingdom of Christ, and of its progress to universality and perfection, in the same words, with little and hardly any material variation: for as he did not begin to prophesy till Jotham's time, and this seems to be one of the first of Isaiah's prophecies, I suppose Micah to have taken it from hence. The variations, as I said, are of no great importance. Verse 2. הוא hu, after ונשא venissa, a word of some emphasis, may be supplied from Micah, if dropped in Isaiah. An ancient MS. has it here in the margin. It has in like manner been lost in chap. liii. 4. (see note on the place,) and in Psa. xxii. 29. where it is supplied by the Syriac and Septuagint. Instead of כל הגוים col ha-goyim, all the nations, Micah has only עמים âmmim, peoples; where the Syriac has כל עמים col âmim, all peoples, as probably it ought to be. Verse 3. for the second אל el read ואל ve-el, seventeen MSS., [one of my own, ancient] two Editions, the Septuagint, Vulgate, Syriac, Chaldee, and so Micah iv. 2. Verse 4. Micah adds, עד רחק âd rechok, afar off, which the Syriac also reads in this parallel place of Isaiah. It is also to be observed that Micah has improved the passage by adding a verse, or sentence, for imagery and expression worthy even of the elegance of Isaiah:—

"And they shall sit every man under his vine,
And under his fig-tree, and none shall affright them:
For the mouth of JEHOVAH God of hosts hath spoken it."

The description of well established peace, by the image of "beating their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks," is very poetical. The Roman poets have employed the same image, Martial xiv. 34. "Falx ex ense."

"Pax me certa ducis placidos curvavit in usus:
Agricolæ nunc sum; militis ante fui."

Sweet peace has transformed me. I was once the property of the soldier, and am now the property of the husbandman.

The prophet Joel, chap. iii. 10. hath reversed it, and applied it to war prevailing over peace:—

"Beat your ploughshares into swords,
And your pruning-hooks into spears."

And so likewise the Roman poets:—

"Non ullus aratro
Dignus honos: squalent abductis arva colonis,
Et curvæ rigidum falces conflantur in ensem."
Virg. Georg. i. 506.

[Agriculture has now no honour: the husbandmen being taken away to the wars, the fields are overgrown with weeds, and the crooked sickles are straitened into swords.]

"Bella diu tenuere viros: erat aptior ensis
Vomere: cedebat taurus arator equo.
Sarcula cessabant; versique in pila ligones;
Factaque de rastri pondere cassis erat."
Ovid. Fast. i. 697.

The prophet Ezekiel, chap. xvii. 22—24. has presignified the same great event with equal clearness, though in a more abstruse form, in an allegory; from an image, suggested by the former part of the prophecy, happily introduced, and well pursued:—

"Thus saith the Lord JEHOVAH:
I myself will take from the shoot of the lofty cedar;
Even a tender cion from the top of his cions will I pluck off:
And I myself will plant it on a mountain high and eminent.
On the lofty mountain of Israel will I plant it;
And it shall exalt its branch, and bring forth fruit;
And it shall become a majestic cedar:
And under it shall dwell all fowl of every wing;
In the shadow of its branches shall they dwell:
And all the trees of the field shall know,
That I JEHOVAH have brought low the high tree;
Have exalted the low tree;
Have dried up the green tree;
And have made the dry tree to flourish:
I JEHOVAH have spoken it, and will do it."

The word ונחתי ve-natati, in this passage, ver. 22. as the sentence now stands, seems incapable of being reduced to any proper construction or sense. None of the ancient Versions acknowledge it, except Theodotion and the Vulgate; and all but the latter vary very much from the present reading of this clause. Houbigant's correction of the passage, by reading instead of ונחתי ve-natati, ויונקת va-yoneketh, (and a tender cion,) which is not very unlike it, (perhaps better ויונק va-yonek, with which the adjective רך rack, will agree without alteration), is ingenious and probable; and I have adopted it in the above translation.

[Verse 3. To the house—The conjunction ו vau, is added by nineteen of Kennicott's, thirteen of De Rossi's MSS., one of my own, and two editions, the Septuagint, Syriac, Vulgate, Arabic, and some copies of the Targum;—AND to the house. It makes the sentence more emphatic.

He will teach us of his ways—Unless God grant a revelation of His will, what can we know?

We will walk in his paths—Unless we purpose to walk in the light, of what use can that light be to us?

For out of Zion shall go forth the law—In the house of God, and in His ordinances only, can we expect to hear the pure doctrines of revelation preached.—1. God alone can give a revelation of his own will. 2. We must use the proper means in order to know this will. 3. We should know it, in order to do it. 4. We should do it, in order to profit by it. 5. He who will not walk in the light when God vouchsafes it, shall be shut up in everlasting darkness. 6. Every man should help his neighbour to attain that light, life, and felicity. Come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord.

Verse 4. Neither shall they learn war any more.—If wars are necessary, how deep must that fall be that renders them so! But what a reproach to humanity is the trade of war! Men are regularly instructed in it, as in any of the necessary arts.

"How to dislodge most souls from their frail shrines
By bomb, sword, ball, and bayonet, is the art
Which some call great and glorious!"

And is this a necessary part of a finished education in civilized society? O Earth! Earth! Earth!]

Verse 6. They be replenished—(And they multiply)] Seven MSS. and one edition for יספיקו yasepiku, read יספיחו yasepichu, and have joined themselves to the children of strangers; that is, in marriage, or worship. Dr. JUBB. So Vulg. adhæserunt. Compare chap. xiv. 1. But the very learned professor Chevalier Michaelis has explained the word יספיחו yesupachu, Job. xxx. 7. (German translation, note on the place) in another manner; which perfectly well agrees with that place, and perhaps will be found to give as good a sense here. ספיח sapiach, the noun, means corn springing up, not from the seed regularly sown on cultivated land, but in the untilled field, from the scattered grains of the former harvest. This, by an easy metaphor, is applied to a spurious brood of children irregularly and casually begotten. The Septuagint seem to have understood the verb here in this sense, reading it as the Vulgate seems to have done. This justifies their version, which it is hard to account for in any other manner: και τεκνα πολλα αλλοφυλα εγενηθη αυτοις. Compare Hos. v. 7. and the Septuagint there. But instead of ובילדי ve-beyiledey and in their children, two of Kennicott's and eight of De Rossi's MSS. have וכילדי ve-keyiledi, and as the children. And they sin impudently as the children of strangers. See De Rossi.

And are soothsayers—(They are filled with diviners)] Heb. They are filled from the East; or, more than the East. The sentence is manifestly imperfect. The Septuagint, Vulgate, and Chaldee, seem to have read כמקדם ke-mikedem; and the latter, with another word before it signifying idols: they are filled with idols as from of old. Houbigant for מקדם mikedem reads מקסם mikesem, as Brentius had proposed long ago. I rather think that both words together give us the true reading: מקדם mikedem, מקסם mikesem, with divination from the East; and that the first word has been by mistake omitted, from its similitude to the second.

Verse 7. Their land is also full of horses—(And his land is filled with horses)] This was in direct contradiction to God's command in the law: "But he (the king) shall not multiply horses to himself; nor cause the people to return to Egypt, to the end that he should multiply horses:—neither shall he greatly multiply to himself silver and gold," Deut. xvii. 16, 17. Uzziah seems to have followed the example of Solomon, see 1 Kings x. 26—29. who first transgressed in these particulars: he recovered the port of Elath on the Red Sea, and with it that commerce which in Solomon's days had "made silver and gold as plenteous at Jerusalem as stones," 2 Chron. i. 15. He had an army of 307,500 men; in which, as we may infer from the testimony of Isaiah, the chariots and horse made a considerable part. "The law above-mentioned was to be a standing trial of prince and people, whether they had trust and confidence in God their Deliverer." See Bp. Sherlock's Discourses on Prophecy, Dissert. iv. where he has excellently explained the reason and effect of the law, and the influence which the observance or neglect of it had on the affairs of the Israelites.

Verse 8. Their land is also full of idols—(And his land is filled with idols)] Uzziah and Jotham are both said, 2 Kings xv. 3, 4, 34, 35. "to have done that which was right in the sight of the Lord;" (that is, to have adhered to, and maintained, the legal worship of God, in opposition to idolatry, and all irregular worship; for to this sense the meaning of that phrase is commonly to be restrained;) "save that the high places were not removed, where the people still sacrificed and burned incense." There was hardly any time, when they were quite free from this irregular and unlawful practice; which they seemed to have looked upon as very consistent with the true worship of God; and which seems in some measure to have been tolerated, while the tabernacle was removed from place to place, and before the temple was built. Even after the conversion of Manasseh, when he had removed the strange gods, and commanded Judah to serve JEHOVAH the God of Israel, it is added, "Nevertheless the people did sacrifice still on the high places, yet unto JEHOVAH their God only," 2 Chron. xxxiii. 17. The worshipping on the high places therefore does not necessarily imply idolatry: and from what is said of these two kings, Uzziah and Jotham, we may presume, that the public exercise of idolatrous worship was not permitted in their time. The idols therefore here spoken of must have been such as were designed for a private and secret use. Such probably were the teraphim so often mentioned in Scripture; a kind of household gods, of human form, as it should seem, see 1 Sam. xix. 13. and compare Gen. xxxi. 34, of different magnitude, used for idolatrous and superstitious purposes, particularly for divination; and as oracles, which they consulted for direction in their affairs.

Verse 9. Boweth down—(Shall be bowed down)] This has reference to the preceding verse. They bowed themselves down to their idols; therefore shall they be bowed down and brought low under the avenging hand of God.

Verse 10. (When he ariseth to strike the earth with terror.)] On the authority of the Septuagint, confirmed by the Arabic, and an ancient MS., I have added here to the text a line, which in the 19th and 21st verses is repeated together with the preceding line, and has, I think, evidently been omitted by mistake in this place. The MS. here varies only in one letter from the reading of the other two verses: has it

Verse 13—16. And upon all the cedars] (Even against all the cedars) [Princes, potentates, rulers, captains, rich men, &c. So Kimchi.] These verses afford us a striking example of that peculiar way of writing, which makes a principal characteristic of the parabolical or poetic style of the Hebrews, and in which the prophets deal so largely; namely, their manner of exhibiting things Divine, spiritual, moral, and political, by a set of images taken from things natural, artificial, religious, historical, in the way of metaphor or allegory. Of these nature furnishes much the largest and the most pleasing share; and all poetry has chiefly recourse to natural images, as the richest and most powerful source of illustration. But it may be observed of the Hebrew poetry in particular, that in the use of such images, and in the application of them in the way of illustration and ornament, it is more regular and constant than any other poetry whatever; that it has for the most part a set of images appropriated in a manner to the explication of certain subjects. Thus you will find, in many other places beside this before us, that cedars of Libanus and oaks of Bashan are used, in the way of metaphor and allegory, for kings, princes, potentates of the highest rank; high mountains and lofty hills, for kingdoms, republics, states, cities; towers and fortresses, for defenders and protectors, whether by counsel or strength, in peace or war; ships of Tarshish, and works of art and invention employed in adorning them, for merchants, men enriched by commerce, and abounding in all the luxuries and elegancies of life, such as those of Tyre and Sidon; for it appears from the course of the whole passage and from the train of ideas, that the fortresses and the ships are to be taken metaphorically, as well as the high trees and the lofty mountains.

Ships of Tarshish] Are in Scripture frequently used by a metonomy for ships in general, especially such as are employed in carrying on traffic between distant countries; as Tarshish was the most celebrated mart of those times, frequented of old by the Phœnicians, and the principal source of wealth to Judea and the neighboring countries. The learned seem now to be perfectly well agreed that Tarshish is Tartessus, a city of Spain, at the mouth of the river Bætis; whence the Phœnicians, who first opened this trade, brought silver and gold, (Jer. x. 9. Ezek. xxvii. 12.) in which that country then abounded; and pursuing their voyage still further to the Cassiterides, (Bochart. Canaan, i. c. 39. Heut. Hist. de Commerce, p. 194.) the islands of Scilly and Cornwall, they brought from thence lead and tin.

Tarshish is celebrated in Scripture, (2 Chron. viii. 17, 18. ix. 21.) for the trade which Solomon carried on thither, in conjunction with the Tyrians. Jehoshaphat (1 Kings xxii. 48. 2 Chron. xx. 36.) attempted afterwards to renew that trade. And from the account given of his attempt it appears, that his fleet was to sail from Eziongeber on the Red Sea; they must therefore have designed to sail round Africa, as Solomon's fleet probably had done before; (see Heut. Histoire de Commerce, p. 32.) for it was a three years' voyage, (2 Chron. ix. 21.) and they brought gold from Ophir, probably on the coast of Arabia; silver from Tartessus; and ivory, apes, and peacocks, from Africa. "אופיר Afri, Africa, the Roman termination, Africa, terra. תרשיש Tarshish, some city or country in Africa. So the Chaldee on 1 Kings xxii. 49. where he renders תרשיש Tarshish, by אפריקה Aphricah; and compare 2 Chron. xx. 36. from whence it appears, to go to Ophir and to Tarshish is one and the same thing." Dr. Jubb. It is certain, that under Pharaoh Necho, about two hundred years afterward, this voyage was made by the Egyptians. Herodot. iv. 42. They sailed from the Red Sea, and returned by the Mediterranean; and they performed it in three years, just the same time that the voyage under Solomon had taken up. It appears likewise from Pliny, Nat. Hist. ii. 67. that the passage round the Cape of Good Hope was known and frequently practised before this time, by Hanno the Carthaginian, when Carthage was in its glory; by one Eudoxus, in the time of Ptolemy Lathyrus, king of Egypt; and Cælius Antipater, a historian of good credit, somewhat earlier than Pliny, testifies that he had seen a merchant who had made the voyage from Gades to Æthiopia. The Portuguese under Vasco de Gama, near three hundred years ago, recovered this navigation, after it had been intermitted and lost for many centuries.

Verse 18. Shall utterly abolish—(Shall disappear)] The ancient Versions and an ancient MS. read יחלפו yechalephu, plural. [One of my MSS. reads יחלוף yechaloph, probably a mistake for יחלפו yechalephu.]

Verse 19—21. Into the holes of the rocks—(Into caverns of rocks)] The country of Judea being mountainous and rocky is full of caverns, as it appears from the history of David's persecution under Saul. At Engedi, in particular, there was a cave so large that David with six hundred men hid themselves in the sides of it; and Saul entered the mouth of the cave without perceiving that any one was there, 1 Sam. xxiv. Josephus, Antiq. lib. xiv. c. 15. and Bell. Jud. lib. 1. c. 16. tells us of a numerous gang of banditti, who having infested the country, and being pursued by Herod with his army, retired into certain caverns almost inaccessible, near Arbela in Galilee, where they were with great difficulty subdued. Some of these were natural, others artificial. "Beyond Damascus," says Strabo, lib. xvi. "are two mountains called Trachones; (from which the country has the name of Trachonitis;) and from hence towards Arabia and Iturea are certain rugged mountains, in which there are deep caverns, one of which will hold four thousand men." Tavernier, Voyage de Perse, Part ii. ch. 4. speaks of a grot, between Aleppo and Bir, that would hold near three thousand horse. "Three hours distant from Sidon, about a mile from the sea, there runs along a high rocky mountain, in the sides of which are hewn a multitude of grots, all very little differing from each other. They have entrances about two feet square: on the inside you find in most or all of them a room of about four yards square. There are of these subterraneous caverns two hundred in number. It may, with probability at least, be concluded that these places were contrived for the use of the living, and not of the dead. Strabo describes the habitations of the Troglodytæ to have been somewhat of this kind." Maundrell, p. 118. The Horites, who dwelt in mount Seir, were Troglodytes, as their name חרים horim, imports. But those mentioned by Strabo were on each side of the Arabian gulf. Mohammed (Koran, chap. xv. and xxvi.) speaks of a tribe of Arabians, the Tribe of Thamud, "who hewed houses out of the mountains, to secure themselves." Thus, "because of the Midianites, the children of Israel made them the dens which are in the mountains, and caves and strong holds," Judg. vi. 2. To these they betook themselves for refuge in times of distress and hostile invasion: "When the men of Israel saw that they were in a strait, (for the people were distressed), then the people did hide themselves in caves, and in thickets, and in rocks, and in high places, and in pits," 1 Sam xiii. 6. and see Jer. xli. 9. Therefore "to enter into the rock, to go into the holes of the rocks, and into the caves of the earth," was to them a very proper and familiar image to express terror and consternation. The prophet Hosea, chap. x. 8. hath carried the same image further, and added great strength and spirit to it:

> "They shall say to the mountains, Cover us;
> And to the hills, Fall on us."

Which image, together with these of Isaiah, is adopted by the sublime author of the Revelation, chap. vi. 15, 16. who frequently borrows his imagery from our prophet.

Verse 20. Which they made each one for himself to worship]—(Which they have made to worship) The word לו lo, for himself, is omitted by two ancient MSS. and is unnecessary. It does not appear that any copy of the Septuagint has it, except MS. Pachom. and MS. I. D. II. and they have ἑαυτοῖς, להם lahem, to themselves.

To the moles] They shall carry their idols with them into the dark caverns, old ruins, or desolate places, to which they shall flee for refuge; and so shall give them up, and relinquish them to the filthy animals that frequent such places, and have taken possession of them as their proper habitation. Bellonius, Greaves, P. Lucas, and many other travellers, speak of bats of an enormous size, as inhabiting the Great Pyramid. See Harmer, Observ. Vol. II. 455. Three MSS. express חפרפרות hephorphoroth, the moles, as one word.

[Verse 22. Cease ye from man] Trust neither in him, nor in the gods that he has invented. Neither he, nor they, can either save or destroy.]

CHAPTER III.

The whole of this Chapter, with the first verse of the next, is a prophecy of those calamities that should be occasioned by the Babylonish invasion and captivity. These calamities are represented as so great and so general, that even royal honours, in such a state, are so far from being desirable, that hardly any can be got to accept them, 1—7. This visitation is declared to be the consequence of their profanity and guilt; for which the prophet further reproves and threatens them, 8—15. Particular amplification of the distress of the delicate and luxurious daughters of Zion; whose deplorable situation is finely contrasted with their former prosperity and ease, 16—26.

NOTES ON CHAP. III.

Verse 1. The stay and staff—(Every stay and support)] Hebrew "the support masculine, and the support feminine:" that is, every kind of support, whether great or small, strong or weak. "Al kanîtz, wal-kanîtzah; the wild beast, male and female. Proverbially applied both to fishing and hunting: i. e. I seized the prey, great or little, good or bad. From hence, as Schultens observes, is explained Isa. iii. 1. literally, the male and female stay: i. e. the strong and weak, the great and small." Chappelow, note on Hariri, Assembly I. Compare Eccles. ii. 8.

[The Hebrew words משען ומשענה mashâen u-meshénah, come from the same root שען shaân, to lean against, to incline, to support; and here, being masculine and feminine, they may signify all things necessary for the support both of man and woman. My old MS. understands the staff and stay as meaning particular persons, and translates the verse thus:—Lo forsoth, th Lordschip Lord of hoostis schal don awey fro Jerusalem and fro Juda the stalworth and the stronge.]

The two following verses, 2, 3, are very clearly explained by the sacred historian's account of the event, the captivity of Jehoiachin by Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon: "And he carried away all Jerusalem, and all the princes, and all the mighty men of valour, even ten thousand captives, and all the craftsmen and smiths; none remained save the poorest sort of the people of the land." 2 Kings xxiv. 14. [Which is supplied by our Version.]

Verse 4. I will give children to be their princes—(I will make boys their princes)] This also was fully accomplished in the succession of weak and wicked princes, from the death of Josiah to the destruction of the city and temple, and the taking of Zekediah, the last of them, by Nebuchadnezzar.

[Babes shall rule over them—Wymmennysche men schul lordschipen to hem. Old MS. Bible.]

Verse 6. Of the house of his father—(Of his father's house)] For בית beith, the ancient interpreters seem to have read מבית mibeith; του οικειου του πατρος αυτου, Septuagint; domesticum patris suis, Vulgate; which gives no good sense. But the Septuagint MS. i. D. ii. for οικειου, has οικου. And, his brother, of his father's house, is little better than a tautology. The case seems to require, that the man should apply to a person of some sort of rank and eminence; one that was the head of his father's house, (see Josh. xii. 14.) whether of the house of him who applies to him, or of any other, ראש בית אביו rosh beith abaiv. I cannot help suspecting, therefore, that the word ראש rosh has been lost out of the text.

Saying] Before שמלה simelah, garment, two MS. (one ancient) and the Babylonish Talmud, have the word לאמר lomer, saying; and so the Septuagint, Vulgate, Syriac, and Chaldee. I place it, with Houbigant, after שמלה semoleh.

Thou hast clothing—(Take by the garment)] That is, shall entreat him in a humble and supplicating manner. "Ten men shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, Let us go with you; for we have heard that God is with you," Zech. viii. 23. And so in Isa. iv. 1. the same gesture is used to express earnest and humble entreaty. The behaviour of Saul towards Samuel was of the same kind, when he laid hold on the skirt of his raiment, 1 Sam. xv. 27. The preceding and following verses show, that his whole deportment, in regard to the prophet, was full of submission and humility.

And let this ruin be under thy hand—(And let thy hand support)] Before תחת ידך tachath yadeca, a MS. adds תהיה teheyeh; another MS. adds in the same place, תקת בידך takath beyadeca, which latter seems to be a various reading of the two preceding words, making a very good sense; "take into thy hand our ruinous state." Twenty-one MSS. of Kennicott, thirteen of De Rossi, [one of my own, ancient,] and three editions of the Babylonish Talmud, have ידיך yadeyca, plural.

Verse 7. In that day shall he swear—(Then shall he openly declare)] The Septuagint, Syriac, and Jerom, read וישא vayissa, adding the conjunction, which seems necessary in this place.

[I will not be an healer—I am not a lethe. Old MS. Bible. Leech was the ancient English word for a physician.]

For in my house is neither bread nor clothing—(For in my house is neither bread nor raiment)] "It is customary through all the East," says Sir J. Chardin, "to gather together an immense quantity of furniture and clothes; for their fashions never alter." Princes and great men are obliged to have a great stock of such things in readiness for presents upon all occasions. "The kings of Persia," says the same author, "have great wardrobes, where there are always many hundreds of habits ready, designed for presents, and sorted." Harmer, Observ. II. 11, and 88. A great quantity of provision for the table was equally necessary. The daily provision for Solomon's household, whose attendants were exceedingly numerous, was proportionably great, 1 Kings iv. 22, 23. Even Nehemiah, in his strait circumstances, had a large supply daily for his table; at which he received a hundred and fifty of the Jews and rulers, besides those that came from among the neighbouring Heathens. Neh. v. 17, 18.

This explains the meaning of the excuse made by him that is desired to undertake the government. He alleges that he has not wherewithal to support the dignity of the station, by such acts of liberality and hospitality as the law of custom required of persons of superior rank. See Harmer's Observations, I. 340. II. 88.

Verse 8. The eyes—(The cloud)] This word appears to be of very doubtful form, from the printed editions, the MSS. and the ancient Versions. The first jod in עיני éiney, which is necessary according to the common interpretation, is in many of them omitted; the two last letters are upon a rasure in two MSS. I think it should be ענן ánen, a cloud, as the Syriac reads; and the allusion is to the cloud in which the glory of the Lord appeared above the tabernacle; see Exod. xvi. 9, 10. xl. 34—38. Numb. xvi. 41, 42.

[Either of the readings gives a very good sense. The allusion may be to the cloud of the Divine Presence in the wilderness: or the eyes of the Lord may be meant; as they are in every place beholding the evil and the good. And He cannot look upon iniquity but with abhorrence; therefore, the eyes of his glory might be well provoked by their crimes.

Verse 9. The show of their countenance—Bishop Lowth has it the steadfastness of their countenance,—they appear to be bent on iniquity—their eyes tell the wickedness of their hearts. The eye is the index of the mind. Envy, hatred, malice, malevolence, concupiscence, and murder, when in the heart, look most intelligently out at the eye. They tell the innocent to be on their guard; and serve the same purpose as the sonorous rings in the tail of the rattlesnake,—they announce the presence of the destroyer.

They declare their sin as Sodom—Impure propensities are particularly legible in the eyes: whoever has beheld the face of a debauchee or a prostitute knows this. They wish to appear what they really are. They glory in their iniquity. This is the highest pitch of ungodliness.

They have rewarded evil unto themselves—Every man's sin is against his own soul. Evil awaiteth sinners—and he that offends his God injures himself.

Verse 10. Say ye to the righteous—לצדיק le-tsadik; the ל lamed is added here by one MS. and the Chaldee. The righteous is the person—1. Who fears God. 2. Departs from evil. 3. Walks according to the testimony of God. 4. And expects and prepares for a glorious immortality.]

! (Pronounce ye)] The reading of this verse is very dubious. The Septuagint for אמרו ameru, read נאסר neasar, or both, אמרו נאסר ameru neasar; and כי לא טוב לנו ki lo tob lanu. Δησωμεν τον δικαιον οτι δυσχοητος ἡμιν εστι. Perhaps, for אמרו ameru, the true reading may be אשרו asheru, bless you; or אמרו אשרי ameru asherey, say ye, blessed is. The Vulgate and an ancient MS. read in the singular number, יאכל yokel, comedet, he shall eat.

[It shall be well with him:—כי טוב ki tob, that good. Say nothing to such but good. He is a good man; he does nothing but good, and has a good God to deal with, from whom he expects nothing but goodness. It shall be well with such in all circumstances of life. 1. In prosperity. 2. In adversity. 3. In sickness. 4. In health. 5. In death. 6. In judgment. And, 7. through eternity. In every case, occurrence, and circumstance he shall eat the fruit of his doings, —he shall derive benefit from being a righteous man, and walking in a righteous way.

Verse 11. Wo unto the wicked—לרשע le-rashâ, the man who is, 1. Evil in his heart. 2. Evil in his purposes. 3. Evil in his life. As he is wicked, he does that which is wicked; and is influenced by the wicked one, of whom he is the servant and the son. It shall be ill with him, רע râ; in a single word say to him—evil! Of him you can speak no good; and to him you can speak no good—all is evil, in him —before him—after him—round about him—above him—below him. Evil in time—evil through eternity!

The reward of his hands—What he has deserved he shall get. He shall be paid for that for which he has laboured, and his reward shall be in proportion to his work. O what a lot is that of the wicked! Cursed in time, and accursed through eternity!]

Verse 12. Err—(Pervert)] בלע billêu, swallow. Among many unsatisfactory methods of accounting for the unusual meaning of this word in this place, I choose Jarchi's explication, as making the best sense. "Read בללו billalu, confound. Syriac."—Dr. Jubb. "Read בהלו, beholu, disturb, or trouble."—Secker. So Septuagint.

[This verse might be read "The collectors of grapes shall be their oppressors; and usurers (nosim, instead of nashim, women) shall rule over them."]

Verse 13. The people—(His people)] עמו âmmo. Septuagint.

Verse 14. The vineyard—(My vineyard)] כרמי kerami, Septuagint, Chaldee, Jerom.

Verse 15. And grind the faces] The expression, and the image is strong, to denote grievous oppression: but is exceeded by the prophet Micah, chap. iii. 1—3.

> "Hear, I pray you, ye chiefs of Jacob,
> And ye princes of the house of Israel:
> Is it not yours to know what is right?
> Ye that hate good and love evil:
> Who tear their skin from off them,
> And their flesh from off their bones:
> Who devour the flesh of my people;
> And flay from off them their skin;
> And their bones they dash in pieces;
> And chop them asunder, as morsels for the pot;
> And as flesh thrown into the midst of the cauldron."

In the last line but one, for כאשר keasher, read, by the transposition of a letter, כשאר keshaar, with the Septuagint and Chaldee.

Verse 16. And wanton eyes—(And falsely setting off their eyes with paint)] Hebrew, falsifying their eyes. I take this to be the true meaning and literal rendering of the word; from שקר shaker. The Masoretes have pointed it, as if it were from שקר sakar, a different word. This arose, as I imagine, from their supposing that the word was the same with סקר sakar, Chaldee, intueri, innuere oculis; or that it had an affinity with the noun סיקרא sikra, which the Chaldeans, or the Rabbins at least, use for stibium, the mineral which was commonly used in colouring the eyes. See Jarchi's Comment on the place. Though the colouring of the eyes with stibium be not particularly here expressed, yet I suppose it to be implied, and so the Chaldee paraphrase explains it; "stibio linitis oculis." This fashion seems to have prevailed very generally among the Eastern people in ancient times; and they retain the very same to this day.

dad, whom he married in that country, (Viaggi, Tom. I. Lettera 17.) says, "Her eye lashes, which are long, and according to the custom of the East, dressed with stibium, (as we often read in the Holy Scriptures of the Hebrew women of old, Jer. iv. 30. Ezek. xxiii. 40.; and in Xenophon of Astyages the grandfather of Cyrus, and of the Medes of that time, Cyropæd. lib. i.) give a dark, and at the same time a majestic shade to the eyes." "Great eyes," says Sandys, Travels, p. 67. speaking of the Turkish women, "they have in principal repute; and of those the blacker they be, the more amiable; insomuch that they put between the eyelids and the eye a certain black powder, with a fine long pencil, made of a mineral, brought from the kingdom of Fez, and called Alcohole; which by the not disagreeable staining of the lids doth better set forth the whiteness of the eye; and though it be troublesome for a time, yet it comforteth the sight, and repelleth ill humours." "Vis ejus [stibii] astringere ac refrigerare, principalis autem circa oculos; namque ideo etiam plerique Platyophthalmon id appellavere, quoniam in calliblepharis mulierum dilatat oculos; et fluxiones inhibet oculorum exulcerationesque." Pliny, Nat. "But none of those [Moorish] ladies," says Dr. Shaw, Travels, p. 294. fol. "take themselves to be completely dressed, till they have tinged the hair and edges of their eyelids with al-kahol, the powder of lead ore. This operation is performed by dipping first into the powder a small wooden bodkin of the thickness of a quill; and then drawing it afterwards through the eyelids, over the ball of the eye." Ezekiel, chap. xxiii. 40. uses the same word in the form of a verb, כחלת עיניך kachalet êinaik, "thou didst dress thine eyes with al-cahol;" which the Septuagint render στιβιζου τους οφθαλμους σου, "thou didst dress thine eyes with stibium;" just as they do when the word פוך phuk, is employed: compare 2 Kings ix. 30. Jer. iv. 30. They supposed, therefore, that פוך phuk, and כחל cahol, or in the Arabic form, Al-cahol, meant the same thing; and probably the mineral used of old for this purpose was the same that is used now; which Dr. Shaw (ibid. note,) says, is "a rich lead ore, pounded into an impalpable powder." Alcholados; the word משקרות meshakkaroth, in this place is thus rendered in an old Spanish translation. Sanctius. See also Russell's Nat. Hist. of Aleppo, p. 102.

The following inventory, as one may call it, of the wardrobe of a Hebrew lady must, from its antiquity, and the nature of the subject, have been very obscure, even to the most ancient interpreters which we have of it; and, from its obscurity must have been also peculiarly liable to the mistakes of transcribers. However it is rather matter of curiosity than of importance; and indeed it is, upon the whole, more intelligible and less corrupted than one might have reasonably expected. Clemens Alexandrinus, Pædag. Lib. ii. c. 12. and Julius Pollux, Lib. vii. c. 22. have each of them preserved from a comedy of Aristophanes, now lost, a similar catalogue of the several parts of the dress and ornaments of a Grecian lady; which, though much more capable of illustration from other writers, though of later date, and quoted and transmitted down to us by two different authors, yet seems to be much less intelligible, and considerably more corrupted, than this passage of Isaiah. Salmasius has endeavoured by comparing the two quotations, and by much critical conjecture and learned disquisition, to restore the true reading, and to explain the particulars; with what success, I leave to the determination of the learned Reader, whose curiosity shall lead him to compare the passage of the comedian with this of the prophet, and to examine the critic's learned labours upon it. Exercit. Plinian. p. 1148. or see Clem. Alex. as cited above, edit. Potter, where the passage, as corrected by Salmasius, is given.

Nich. Guil. Schroëderus, professor of Oriental languages in the university of Marpurg, has published a very learned and judicious treatise upon this passage of Isaiah. The title of it is, "Commentarius Philologico-Critcius de Vestitu Mulierum Hebræarum ad Iesai iii. ver 16—24. Lugd. Bat. 1745." 4to. As I think no one has handled this subject with so much judgment and ability as this author, I have for the most part followed him, in giving the explanation of the several terms denoting the different parts of dress, of which this passage consists; signifying the reasons of my dissent, where he does not give me full satisfaction.

[The daughters of Zion—walk—What is meant by these several kinds of action and articles of dress cannot be well conjectured. How our ancestors understood them will appear from the following, which is the translation of these verses in my old MS. bible.

Will discover their secret parts—(Expose their nakedness)] It was the barbarous custom of the conquerors of those times to strip their captives naked, and to make them travel in that condition, exposed to the inclemency of the weather; and, the worst of all, to the intolerable heat of the sun. But this to the women was the height of cruelty and indignity; and especially to such as those here described, who had indulged themselves in all manner of delicacies of living, and all the superfluities of ornamental dress; and even whose faces had hardly ever been exposed to the sight of man. This is always mentioned as the hardest part of the lot of captives. Nahum, chap. iii. 5, 6. denouncing the fate of Nineveh, paints it in very strong colours:—

"Behold, I am against thee, saith JEHOVAH, God of hosts:
And I will discover thy skirts upon thy face;
And I will expose thy nakedness to the nations;
And to the kingdoms thy shame.
And I will throw ordures upon thee;
And I will make thee vile, and set thee as a gazing stock."

Verse 18. Ornaments about their feet—(The ornaments of the feet rings)] The late learned Dr. Hunt, Professor of Hebrew and Arabic in the University of Oxford, has very well explained the word עכס âcas, both verb and noun, in his very ingenious Dissertation on Prov. vii. 22, 23. The verb means to skip, to bound, to dance along; and the noun, those ornaments of the feet which the eastern ladies wore; chains or rings, which make a tinkling sound as they moved nimbly in walking. Eugene Roger, Description de la Terre Sainte, Liv. ii. ch. 2. speaking of the Arabian women of the first rank in Palestine, says,—"Au lieu de brasselets elles ont de menottes d'argent, qu'elles portent aux poignets et aux pieds; où sont attachez une quantité de petits annelets d'argent, qui font un cliquetis comme d'une cymbale, lorsqu'elles cheminent ou se mouvent quelque peu." See Dr. Hunt's Dissertation; where he produces other testimonies to the same purpose from authors of travels.

And their cauls—(the net-works)] I am obliged to differ from the learned Schroëderus almost at first setting out. He renders the word שביסים shebisim by soliculi, little ornaments, bullæ, or studs, in shape representing the sun, and so answering to the following word שהרנים saharonim, lunulæ, crescents. He supposes the word to be the same with שמישים shemisim, the ' yod in the second syllable making the word diminutive, and the letter מ mem being changed for ב beth, a letter of the same organ. How just and well-founded his authorities for the transmutation of these letters in the Arabic language are I cannot pretend to judge: but, as I know of no such instance in Hebrew, it seems to me a very forced etymology. Being dissatisfied with this account of the matter, I applied to my good friend above mentioned, the late Dr. Hunt, who very kindly returned the following answer to my inquiries:—

"I have consulted the Arabic Lexicons, as well MS. as printed, but cannot find שביסים shebisim in any of them, nor any thing belonging to it; so that no help is to be had from that language towards clearing up the meaning of this difficult word. But what the Arabic denies, the Syriac perhaps may afford; in which I find the verb שבש shabas, to entangle, or interweave, an etymology which is equally favourable to our marginal translation, net-works, with שבץ shabats, to make chequer-work, or embroider, (the word by which Kimchi and others have explained שבים shabis,) and has moreover this advantage over it, that the letter ש shin and ס samech are very frequently put for each other, but צ tsaddi and ס samech scarce ever. Aben Ezra joins שביסים shebisim and עכסים âcasim, (which immediately precedes it) together; and says, that שבים shabis was the ornament of the legs, as עכס âcas was of the feet. His words are, שבים "תבשיט של שוקים כמו עכס של רגלים perfume boxes, literally signify houses of the soul; and may refer to strong scented bottles used for pleasure and against fainting; similar to bottles with attar of roses, worn by the ladies of the East to the present time.]

Verse 21. Nose jewels—(The jewels of the nostril)] נזמי האף nizmey ha-aph. Schroëderus explains this, as many others do, of jewels, or strings of pearl hanging from the forehead, and reaching to the upper part of the nose, [than which nothing can be more ridiculous, as such are seldom seen on an Asiatic face.] But it appears from many passages of Holy Scripture that the phrase is to be literally and properly understood of nose jewels, rings set with jewels hanging from the nostrils, as ear-rings from the ears, by holes bored to receive them.

Ezekiel, enumerating the common ornaments of women of the first rank, has not omitted this particular, and is to be understood in the same manner, chap. xvi. 11, 12. See also Gen. xxiv. 47.

"And I decked thee with ornaments;
And I put bracelets upon thine hands,
And a chain on thy neck:
And I put a jewel on thy nose,
And ear-rings on thine ears,
And a splendid crown upon thine head."

And in an elegant proverb of Solomon, Prov. xi. 22. there is a manifest allusion to this kind of ornament, which shows it to have been used in his time:—

"As a jewel in gold in the snout of a swine;
So is a woman beautiful, but wanting discretion."

This fashion, however strange it may appear to us, was formerly, and is still common in many parts of the East, among women of all ranks. Paul Lucas, speaking of a village, or clan of wandering people, a little on this side of the Euphrates,—"The women," says he, (2d Voyage du Levant, Tom. i. art. 24.) "almost all of them travel on foot; I saw none handsome among them. They have almost all of them the nose bored; and wear in it a great ring, which makes them still more deformed." But in regard to this custom better authority cannot be produced than that of Pietro della Valle, in the account which he gives of the lady before mentioned, Signora Maani Gioerida, his own wife. The description of her dress, as to the ornamental parts of it, with which he introduces the mention of this particular, will give us some notion of the taste of the eastern ladies for finery. "The ornaments of gold and of jewels for the head, for the neck, for the arms, for the legs, and for the feet, (for they wear rings even on their toes,) are indeed, unlike those of the Turks, carried to great excess, but not of great value: for in Baghdad jewels of high price either are not to be had, or are not used; and they wear such only as are of little value, as turquoises, small rubies, emeralds, carbuncles, garnets, pearls, and the like. My spouse dresses herself with all of them according to their fashion; with exception however of certain ugly rings of very large size, set with jewels, which, in truth very absurdly, it is the custom to wear fastened to one of their nostrils, like buffalos: an ancient custom however in the East, which, as we find in the Holy Scriptures, prevailed among the Hebrew ladies even in the time of Solomon, Prov. xi. 22. These nose rings, in complaisance to me, she has left off; but I have not yet been able to prevail with her cousin and her sisters to do the same; so fond are they of an old custom, be it ever so absurd, who have been long habituated to it." Viaggi, Tom. i. let. 17.

[It is the left nostril that is bored and ornamented with rings and jewels. More than one hundred drawings from life of Eastern ladies lie now before me; and scarcely one is without the nose-jewel: both the arms and wrists are covered with bracelets, arm-circles, &c., as also their legs and feet—the soles of their feet and palms of their hands coloured beautifully red with henna; and their hair plaited and ornamented superbly. These beautiful drawings are a fine comment on this Chapter.]

Verse 23. And the veils—(The transparent garments—)] Τα διαφανη Λακωνικα, Sept. A kind of silken dress, transparent, like gauze; worn only by the most delicate women, and such as dressed themselves "elegantius, quam necesse esset probis." [Such garments are worn to the present day; garments that not only show the shape of every part of the body, but the very colour of the skin. This is evidently the case in some scores of drawings of Asiatic females now before me.] This sort of garments was afterwards in use among the Greeks. Prodicus, in his celebrated fable (Xenoph. Memorab. Socr. lib. ii.) exhibits the personage of Sloth in his dress: εσθητα δε, εξ ης αν μαλιστα ὡρα διαλαμποι:

They were called multitia and coa, (scil. vestimenta) by the Romans, from their being invented, or rather introduced into Greece, by one Pamphila of the island of Cos. This, like other Grecian fashions, was received at Rome, when luxury began to prevail under the emperors. It was sometimes worn even by the men: but looked upon as a mark of extreme effeminacy. See Juvenal, Sat. ii. 65, &c. Publius Syrus, who lived when the fashion was first introduced, has given a humourous satirical description of it in two lines, which by chance have been preserved:

"Æquum est, induere nuptam ventum textilem?
Palam prostare nudam in nebula line â?"

Verse 24. Instead of sweet smell—(perfume)] A principal part of the delicacy of the Asiatic ladies consists in the use of baths, and of the richest oils and perfumes: an attention to which is, in some degree, necessary in those hot countries. Frequent mention is made of the rich ointments of the spouse in the Song of Solomon, Cant. iv. 10, 11.

"How beautiful are thy breasts, my sister, my spouse!
How much more excellent than wine;
And the odour of thine ointments than all perfumes!
Thy lips drop as the honeycomb, my spouse!
Honey and milk are under thy tongue:
And the odour of thy garments is as the odour of Lebanon."

The preparation for Esther's being introduced to king Ahasuerus was a course of bathing and perfuming for a whole year; "six months with oil of myrrh, and six months with sweet odours." Esth. ii. 12. A diseased and loathsome habit of body, instead of a beautiful skin, softened and made agreeable with all that art could devise, and all that nature, so prodigal in those countries of the richest perfumes, could supply, must have been a punishment the most severe, and the most mortifying to the delicacy of these haughty daughters of Sion.

Burning instead of beauty.—(A sunburnt skin)] Gasper Sanctius thinks the words כי תחת ki tachat an interpolation, because the Vulgate has omitted them. The clause כי תחת יפי ki tachat yiphi seems to me rather to be imperfect at the end. Not to mention that כי ki, taken as a noun, for adustio, burning, is without example, and very improbable. The passage ends abruptly, and seems to want a fuller conclusion.

In agreement with which opinion, of the defect of the Hebrew Text in this place, the Septuagint, according to MSS. Pachom. and 1 D. ii. and Marchal. which are of the best authority, express it with the same evident marks of imperfection at the end of the sentence; thus, ταυτα σοι αντι καλλωπισμου— The two latter add σου. This chasm in the Text, from the loss probably of three or four words, seems therefore to be of long standing.

Taking כי ki, in its usual sense, as a particle, and supplying לך lec, from σοι of the Septuagint, it might possibly have been originally somewhat in this form:—

כי תחת יפי תהיה לך רעת מראה mereah raâth lec teheyeh yiphi tachath ki

"Yea, instead of beauty, thou shalt have an ill-favoured countenance."

"May it not be כהי cohey, 'wrinkles instead of beauty?' as from יפה yaphah, is formed יפי yiphi; from מרה marah מרי meri, &c. so from כהה cahah, to be wrinkled, כהי cohey." Dr. Jubb. [The כי ki, is wanting in one MS. and has been omitted by several of the ancients.]

Verse 25. Thy mighty men] For גבורתך geburateca, an ancient MS. has גבורך gebureca. The true reading from the Septuagint, Vulgate, Syriac, and Chaldee, seems to be גבורך geburica.

Verse 26. Sit upon the ground.] Sitting on the ground was a posture that denoted mourning and deep distress. The prophet Jeremiah, Lam. ii. 8. has given it the first place among many indications of sorrow in the following elegant description of the same state of distress of his country:—

"The elders of the daughter of Sion sit on the ground, they are silent:
They have cast up dust on their heads; they have girded themselves with sackcloth;
The virgins of Jerusalem have bowed down their heads to the ground."

"We find Judea," says Mr. Addison, (On Medals, Dial. II.) "on several coins of Vespasian and Titus, in a posture that denotes sorrow and captivity. I need not mention her sitting on the ground, because we have already spoken of the aptness of such a posture to represent an extreme affliction. I fancy the Romans might have an eye on the customs of the Jewish nation, as well as those of their country, in the several marks of sorrow they have set on this figure. The Psalmist describes the Jews lamenting their captivity in the same pensive posture. 'By the waters of Babylon we sat down and wept, when we remembered thee, O Sion.' But what is more remarkable, we find Judea represented as a woman in sorrow sitting on the ground, in a passage of the prophet that foretels the very captivity recorded on this medal." Mr. Addison, I presume, refers to this place of Isaiah; and therefore must have understood it as foretelling the destruction of Jerusalem and the Jewish nation by the Romans; whereas it seems plainly to relate, in its first and more immediate view at least, to the destruction of the city by Nebuchadnezzar, and the dissolution of the Jewish state under the captivity at Babylon.

[Several of the coins mentioned here by Mr. Addison are in my own collection: and to such I have already referred in this work. I shall describe one here. On the obverse a fine head of the Emperor Vespasian with this legend Imperator Julius Cæsar Vespasianus Augustus, Pontifex Maximus, Tribunitia Potestate Pater Patriæ, Consul VIII.

On the reverse a tall palm tree, emblem of the land of Palestine, the Emperor standing on the left, close to the tree, with a trophy behind him; on the right Judea under the figure of a female captive sitting on the ground, with her head resting on her hand, the elbow on her knee, weeping. Around is this legend Judea Capta. Senatus consulto. However this prediction may refer proximately to the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, I am fully of opinion that it ultimately refers to the final ruin of the Jewish state by the Romans. And so it has been understood by the general run of the best and most learned interpreters and critics.]

CHAPTER IV.

The havoc occasioned by war, and those other calamities which the Prophet had been describing in the preceding Chapter, are represented as so terribly great, that seven women should be left to one man, 1. Great blessedness of the remnant that shall be accounted worthy to escape these judgments, 2—4. The privileges of the gospel set forth by allusions to the glory and pomp of the Mosaic dispensation, 5, 6.

NOTES ON CHAP. IV.

Verse 1. And seven women] The division of the Chapters has interrupted the prophet's discourse, and broken it off almost in the midst of the sentence. "The numbers slain in battle shall be so great, that seven women shall be left to one man." The prophet has described the greatness of this distress by images and adjuncts the most expressive and forcible. The young women, contrary to their natural modesty, shall become suitors to the men: they will take hold of them, and use the most pressing importunity to be married. In spite of the natural suggestions of jealousy, they will be content with a share only of the rights of marriage in common with several others; and that on hard conditions, renouncing the legal demands of the wife on the husband, see Exod. xxi. 10. and begging only the name and credit of wedlock, and to be freed from the reproach of celibacy. See chap. liv. 4, 5. Like Marcia, on a different occasion, and in other circumstances:—

"Da tantum nomen inane

Marcia." LUCAN. ii. 342.

["This happened (says Kimchi) in the days of Ahaz, when Pekah the son of Remaliah slew in Judea one hundred and twenty thousand men in one day, see 2 Chron. xviii. 6. The widows which were left were so numerous, that the prophet said, 'They are multiplied beyond the sand of the sea.' Jer. xv. 8."]

In that day] These words are omitted in the Septuagint, and MSS.

Verse 2. The Branch of the Lord—(The Branch of JEHOVAH)] The Messiah of JEHOVAH, says the Chaldee. [And and the fruit of the earth shall be excellent and comely [a] for them that are escaped of Israel.

3 And it shall come to pass that he that is left in Zion, and he that remaineth in Jerusalem, [b] shall be called holy, even every one that is [c] written [d] among the living in Jerusalem.

Kimchi says, The Messiah the Son of David.] The Branch is an appropriated title of the Messiah; and the fruit of the land means the great Person to spring from the house of Judah; and is only a parallel expression signifying the same; or perhaps the blessings consequent upon the redemption procured by him. Compare chap. xlv. 8. where the same great event is set forth in similar images, and see the Note there.

Them that are escaped of Israel—(The escaped of the house of Israel)] A MS. has בית ישראל beith yishrael.

Verse 3. Written among the living] That is, whose name stands in the enrolment or register of the people; or every man living, who is a citizen of Jerusalem. See Ezek. xiii. 9. where "they shall not be written in the writing of the house of Israel," is the same with what immediately goes before, "they shall not be in the assembly of my people." Compare Psa. lxix. 28. lxxxvii. 6. Exod. xxxii. 32. To number and register the people was agreeable to the law of Moses, and probably was always practised; being, in sound policy, useful, and even necessary. David's design of numbering the people was of another kind; it was to enrol them for his army. Michaelis, Mosaisches Recht, Part iii. p. 227. See also his Dissert. de Censibus Hebræorum.

Verse 4. The spirit of burning] Means the fire of God's wrath, by which He will prove and purify His people; gathering them into His furnace, in order to separate the dross from the silver, the bad from the good. The severity of God's judgments, the fiery trial of His servants, Ezekiel, (chap. xxii. 18—22.) has set forth at large, after his manner, with great boldness of imagery and force of expression. God threatens to gather them into the midst of Jerusalem, as into the furnace; to blow the fire upon them, and to melt them. Malachi, chap. iii. 2, 3. treats the same subject, and represents the same event, under the like images:

> "But who may abide the day of His coming?
> And who shall stand when He appeareth?
> For He is like the fire of the refiner,
> And like the soap of the fullers.
> And He shall sit refining and purifying the silver;
> And He shall purify the sons of Levi;
> And cleanse them like gold, and like silver;
> That they may be JEHOVAH's ministers,
> Presenting unto Him an offering in righteousness."

[This is in allusion to a chemist purifying metals. He first judges of the state of the ore or adulterated metal. Secondly, he kindles the proper degree of fire, and applies the requisite test, and thus separates the precious from the vile.

Verse 5. And the Lord will create—One MS. the Septuagint, and the Arabic have יביא yabia, He shall bring—The cloud already exists—The Lord will bring it over. This is a blessed promise of the presence of God in all the assemblies of His people.]

Every dwelling place—(The station)] The Hebrew Text has, every station: but four MSS. (one ancient) omit כל col, all; very rightly, as it should seem: for the station was mount Sion itself, and no other. See Exod. xv. 17. And the Septuagint, Arabic, and MSS. add the same word כל col before מקראה mikraeh, probably right: the word has only changed its place by mistake. מקראיה mikrayeh, "the place where they were gathered together in their holy assemblies," says Sal. ben. Melec. [But twenty-five of Kennicott's MSS. and twenty-two of De Rossi's, fifty-three Editions, besides the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic, have the word in the plural number.]

A cloud and smoke by day] This is a manifest allusion to the pillar of a cloud and of fire, which attended the Israelites in their passage out of Egypt, and to the glory that rested on the tabernacle, Exod. xiii. 21. xl. 38. The prophet Zechariah, chap. ii. 5. applies the same image to the same purpose:

> "And I will be unto her a wall of fire round about;
> And a glory will I be in the midst of her."

That is, the visible presence of God shall protect her. Which explains the conclusion of this verse of Isaiah; where the makkaph between כל col, and כבוד cabor, connecting the two words in construction, which ought not to be connected, has thrown an obscurity upon the sentence, and misled most of the Translators.

[For upon all the glory shall be a defence.—Whatever God creates He must uphold, or it will fail. Every degree of grace brings with it a degree of power to maintain itself in the soul.]

Verse 6. A tabernacle] In countries subject to violent tempests, as well as to intolerable heat, a portable tent is a necessary part of a traveller's baggage, for defence and shelter. [And to such tents the words of the Text make evident allusion. They are to be met with in every part of Arabia and Egypt, and in various other places in the East.

CHAPTER V.

This Chapter begins with representing in a beautiful parable, the tender care of God for His people, and their unworthy returns to His goodness, 1—7. The parable or allegory is then dropped; and the prophet, in plain terms, reproves and threatens them for their wickedness; particularly for their covetousness, 8—10, intemperance, 11, and inattention to the warnings of Providence, 12. Then follows an enumeration of judgments as the necessary consequence. Captivity and famine appear with all their horrors, 13. Hades, or The Grave, like a ravenous monster, opens wide its jaws, and swallows down its myriads, 14. Distress lays hold on all ranks, 15, and God is glorified in the execution of His judgments, 16, till the whole place is left desolate, a place for the flocks to range in, 17. The prophet then pauses; and again resumes his subject, reproving them for several other sins, and threatening them with woes and vengeance, 18—24; after which he sums up the whole of his awful denunciation in a very lofty and spirited epiphonema or conclusion. The God of armies, having hitherto corrected to no purpose, is represented, with inimitable majesty, as only giving the hist and a swarm of nations hasten to His standard, 25—27. Upon a guilty race, unpitied by heaven or by earth, they execute their commission; and leave the land desolate and dark, without one ray of comfort to cheer the horrid gloom, 28—30.

This Chapter likewise stands single and alone, unconnected with the preceding or following. The subject of it is nearly the same with that of the first chapter. It is a general reproof of the Jews for their wickedness: but it exceeds that chapter in force, in severity, in variety, and elegance; and it adds a more express declaration of vengeance by the Babylonian invasion.

NOTES ON CHAP. V.

Verse 1. Now will I sing to my well-beloved a song of my beloved—(Let me sing now a song, &c.)] A MS., respectable for its antiquity, adds the word שור shir, a song, after נא na; which gives so elegant a turn to the sentence by the repetition of it in the next member, and by distinguishing the members so exactly in the style and manner of the Hebrew poetical composition, that I am much inclined to think it genuine.

A song of my beloved—(A song of loves)] דודי dodey for דודים dodim; status constructus pro absoluto, as the grammarians say, as Mic. vi. 16. Lam. iii. 14, 66. so Archbishop Secker. Or rather, in all these and the like cases, a mistake of the Transcribers, by not observing a small stroke, which in many MSS. is made to supply the ם mem, of the plural, thus דודי dodi. שירת דודים shirath dodim, is the same with שיר ידידת shir yedideth, Psal. xlv. 1. In this way of understanding it, we avoid the great impropriety of making the author of the song, and the person to whom it is addressed, to be the same.

In a very fruitful hill—(On a high and fruitful hill)] Heb. בקרן בן שמן be-keren ben shamen, "on a horn the son of oil." The expression is highly descriptive and poetical. "He calls the land of Israel a horn, because it is higher than all lands; as the horn is higher than the whole body: and the son of oil, because it is said to be a land flowing with milk and honey." Kimchi on the place. The parts of animals are, by an easy metaphor, applied to parts of the earth, both in common and poetical language. A promontory is called a cape, or head; the Turks call it a nose. "Dorsum immane mari summo:" Virgil, a back, or ridge of rocks.

> "Hanc latus angustum jam se cogentis in arctum
> Hesperiæ tenuem producit in æquora linguam, > Adriacas flexis claudit quæ cornibus undas."

Lucan. ii. 612. of Brundusium, i. e. Βρεντεσιον, which, in the ancient language of that country, signifies stag's head, says Strabo. A horn is a proper and obvious image for a mountain, or mountainous country. Solinus, cap. viii. says, "Italiam, ubi longius processerit, in cornua duo scindi;" that is, the high ridge of the Alps, which runs through the whole length of it, divides at last into two ridges, one going through Calabria, the other through the country of the Brutii. "Cornwall is called by the inhabitants in the British tongue Kernaw, as lessening by degrees like a horn, running out into promontories like so many horns. For the Britains call a horn corn, in the plural kern." Camden. "And Sammes is of opinion, that the country had this name originally from the Phœnicians, who traded hither for tin; keren, in their language, being a horn." Gibson.

Here the precise idea seems to be that of a high mountain standing by itself; "vertex montis, aut pars montis ab aliis divisa;" which signification, says I. H. Michaelis, Bibl. Hallens. Not. in loc. the word has in Arabic.

Judea was in general a mountainous country; whence Moses sometimes calls it The Mountain, "Thou shalt plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance." Exod. xv. 17. "I pray thee let me go over, and see the good land that is beyond Jordan; that goodly mountain, and Lebanon." Deut. iii. 25. And in a political and religious view it was detached and separated from all the nations round it. Whoever has considered the descriptions given of mount Tabor, (see Reland, Palæstin. Eugene Roger, Terre Sainte, p. 64.) and the views of it, which are to be seen in books of Travels, (Maundrell, p. 114. Egmont and Heyman, Vol. II. p. 25. Thevenot, Vol. I. p. 429.) its regular conic form, rising singly in a plain to a great height, from a base small in proportion, its beauty and fertility to the very top, will have a good idea of "a horn the son of oil;" and will perhaps be induced to think, that the prophet took his image from that mountain.

And gathered out the stones—(And he cleared it from the stones)] This was agreeable to the ancient husbandry: "Saxa, summa parte terræ, et vites et arbores lædunt; ima parte, refrigerant," Columell. de Arb. iii. "Saxosum facile est expedire lectione lapidum." Id. ii. 2. "Lapides, qui supersunt, [al. insuper sunt] hieme rigent, æstate fervescunt; idcirco satis, arbustis, et vitibus nocent." Pallad. i. 6. A piece of ground thus cleared of the stones Persius, in his hard way of metaphor, calls "exossatus ager." Sat. vi. 52.

The choicest vine—(Sorek)] Many of the ancient interpreters, the Septuagint, Aquila, and Theod. have retained this word as a proper name; I think very rightly. Sorek was a valley lying between Ascalon and Gaza, and running far up eastward in the tribe of Judah. Both Ascalon and Gaza were anciently famous for wine; the former is mentioned as such by Alexander Trallianus; the latter by several authors (quoted by Reland, Palæst. p. 589, and 986.) And it seems that the upper part of the valley of Sorek, and that of Eshcol, where the spies gathered the single cluster of grapes, which they were obliged to bear between two upon a staff, being both near to Hebron, were in the same neighbourhood; and that all this part of the country abounded with rich vineyards. Compare Numb. xiii. 22, 23. Judg. xvi. 3, 4. P. Nau supposes Eshcol and Sorek to be only different names for the same valley. Voyage Nouveau de la Terre Sainte, Liv. iv. chap 18. See likewise De Lisle's posthumous map of the Holy Land. Paris, 1763. See Bochart, Hieroz. ii. col. 725. Thevenot, i. p. 406. Michaelis (note on Judg. xvi. 4. German translation,) thinks it probable, from some circumstances of the history there given, that Sorek was in the tribe of Judah, not in the country of the Philistines.

The vine of Sorek was known to the Israelites, being mentioned by Moses, Gen. xlix. 11. before their coming out of Egypt. Egypt was not a wine country. "Throughout this country there are no wines." Sandys, p. 101. At least in very ancient times they had none. Herodotus, ii. 77. says, it had no vines, and therefore used an artificial wine made of barley. That is not strictly true; for the vines of Egypt are spoken of in Scripture. Psa. lxxviii. 47. cv. 33. and see Gen. xl. 11. by which it should seem, that they drank only in it: wherefore, when I looked that it should bring forth grapes, brought it forth wild grapes?

5 And now go to; I will tell you what I will do to my vineyard: [a] I will take away the hedge thereof, and it shall be eaten up; and break down [b] the the fresh juice pressed from the grape, which was called οἶνος ἀμπελίνος. Herodot. ii. 37.: but they had no large vineyards, nor was the country proper for them, being little more than one large plain, annually overflowed by the Nile. The Mareotic in later times is, I think, the only celebrated Egyptian wine, which we meet with in history. The vine was formerly, as Hasselquist tells us it is now, "cultivated in Egypt for the sake of eating the grapes, not for wine; which is brought from Candia, &c." "They were supplied with wine from Greece, and likewise from Phœnicia." Herodot. iii. 6. The vine and the wine of Sorek therefore, which lay near at hand for importation into Egypt, must in all probability have been well known to the Israelites, when they sojourned there. There is something remarkable in the manner in which Moses, Gen. xlix. 11. makes mention of it, which, for want of considering this matter, has not been attended to; it is in Jacob's prophecy of the future prosperity of the tribe of Judah:

> "Binding his foal to the vine,
> And his ass's colt to his own sorek;
> He washeth his raiment in wine,
> And his cloke in the blood of grapes."

I take the liberty of rendering שרקה sorekah, for שרקו soreko, his sorek, as the Masoretes do of pointing עירה éireh, for עירו éiro, his foal. עיר éir might naturally enough appear in the feminine form: but it is not at all probable that שרק sorek, ever should. By naming particularly the vine of Sorek, and as the vine belonging to Judah, the prophecy intimates the very part of the country, which was to fall to the lot of that tribe. Sir John Chardin says, "that at Casbin, a city of Persia, they turn their cattle into the vineyards, after the vintage, to brouse on the vines." He speaks also of vines in that country so large that he could hardly compass the trunks of them with his arms. Voyages, Tom. III. p. 12. 12mo. This shows, that the ass might be securely bound to the vine, and without danger of damaging the tree by brousing on it.

And built a tower in the midst of it.] Our Saviour, who has taken the general idea of one of his parables, Matt. xxi. 33. Mark xii. 1. from this of Isaiah, has likewise inserted this circumstance of building a tower; which is generally explained by commentators as designed for the keeper of the vineyard to watch and defend the fruits. But for this purpose it was usual to make a little temporary hut, (Isa. i. 8.) which might serve for the short season while the fruit was ripening, and which was removed afterwards. The tower therefore should rather mean a building of a more permanent nature and use; the farm, as we may call it, of the vineyard, containing all the offices and implements, and the whole apparatus necessary for the culture of the vineyard, and the making of the wine. To which image in the allegory, the situation, the manner of building, the use, and the whole service of the temple, exactly answered. And so the Chaldee paraphrast very rightly expounds it: "Et statui eos (Israelitas) ut plantam vineæ selectæ, et ædificavi Sanctuarium meum in medio illorum. [And I have appointed the Israelites as a plant of a chosen vine, and I have built my sanctuary in the midst of them."] So also Hieron. in loc. Ædificavit quoque turrim in medio ejus; templum videlicet in media civitate. ["He built also a tower in the midst of it, viz. his own temple in the midst of the city."] That they have still such towers or buildings for use or pleasure in their gardens in the East, see Harmer's Observations, II. p. 241.

And also made a wine press therein.—(And hewed out a lake therein.)] This image also our Saviour has preserved in his parable. יקב yekeb; the Septuagint render it here προληνιον, and in four other places ὑπολήνιον, Isa. xvi. 10. Joel iii. 13. Hag. ii. 17. Zech. xiv. 10., I think more properly; and this latter word St. Mark uses. It means not the wine-press itself, or calcatorium, which is called גת gath, or פורה poreh: but what the Romans called lacus, the lake; the large open place or vessel, which by a conduit or spout received the must from the wine-press. In very hot countries it was perhaps necessary, or at least very convenient, to have the lake under ground, or in a cave hewed out of the side of the rock for coolness, that the heat might not cause too great a fermentation, and sour the must. Vini confectio instituitur in cella, vel intimæ domus camera quadam a ventorum ingressu remota. Kempfer, of Shiras wine. Amœn. Exot. p. 376. For the wind, to which that country is subject, would injure the wine. "The wine-presses in Persia," says Sir John Chardin, "are formed by making hollow places in the ground, lined with mason's work." Harmer's Observations, I. p. 392. See a print of one in Kempfer, p. 377. Nonnus describes at large Bacchus hollowing the inside of a rock, and hewing out a place for the wine-press, or rather the lake:

> Καὶ σκοπελοὺς ελαχηνε· πεδοσκαφεος δε σιδηρου
> Θηγαλεῃ γλωχινι μυχον κοιληνατο πετρης·

And he looked—(And he expected)] Jeremiah, chap. ii. 21. uses the same image, and applies it to the same purpose, in an elegant paraphrase of this part of Isaiah's parable, in his flowing and plaintive manner:

"But I planted thee a sorek, a cion perfectly genuine:
How then art thou changed, and become to me the degenerate shoots of the strange vine!"

Wild grapes—(Poisonous berries)] באושים beushim, not merely useless unprofitable grapes, such as wild grapes; but grapes offensive to the smell, noxious, poisonous. By the force and intent of the allegory, to good grapes ought to be opposed fruit of a dangerous and pernicious quality; as in the explication of it, to judgment is opposed tyranny, and to righteousness oppression. גפן gephen, the vine, is a common name or genus, including several species under it; and Moses, to distinguish the true vine, or that from which wine is made from the rest, calls it, Numb. vi. 4. גפן היין gephen hayayin, the wine-vine. Some of the other sorts were of a poisonous quality, as appears from the story related among the miraculous acts of Elisha, 2 Kings iv. 39—41. "And one went out into the field to gather potherbs; and he found a field-vine, and he gathered from it wild fruit, his lap-full; and he went and shred them into the pot of pottage, for they knew them not. And they poured it out for the men to eat: and it came to pass as they were eating of the pottage, that they cried out and said, There is death in the pot, O man of God! and they could not eat of it. And he said, Bring meal; (leg. קחו kechu, nine MSS. one edition,) and he threw it into the pot. And he said, Pour out for the people, that they may eat. And there was nothing hurtful in the pot."

From some such sorts of poisonous fruits of the grape kind Moses has taken these strong and highly poetical images, with which he has set forth the future corruption and extreme degeneracy of the Israelites, in an allegory which has a near relation, both in its subject and imagery, to this of Isaiah:—Deut. xxxii. 32, 33.

"Their vine is from the vine of Sodom,
And from the fields of Gomorrah:
Their grapes are grapes of gall;
Their clusters are bitter:
Their wine is the poison of dragons,
And the cruel venom of aspics."

"I am inclined to believe," says Hasselquist, "that the prophet here, Isa. v. 2, 4. means the hoary nightshade, solanum incanum; because it is common in Egypt, Palestine, and the East; and the Arabian name agrees well with it. The Arabs call it aneb el dib, i. e. wolf-grapes. [The באושים beushim, says Rab. Chaï, is a well known species of the vine, and the worst of all sorts.] The Prophet could not have found a plant more opposite to the vine than this; for it grows much in the vineyards, and is very pernicious to them, wherefore they root it out: it likewise resembles a vine by its shrubby stalk." Travels, p. 289. See also Michelis, Questions aux Voyageurs Danois, No. 64.

Verse 3. Inhabitants] יושבי yoshebey, in the plural number; three MSS. (two ancient;) and so likewise the Septuagint and Vulgate.

Verse 6. There shall come up briars and thorns—(The thorn shall spring up in it)] One MS. has בשמיר beshamir. The true reading seems to be בו שמיר bo shemir, which is confirmed by the Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgate.

Verse 7. And he looked for judgment] The paranomasia, or play on the words, in this place is very remarkable; mishpat, mishpach; tsedekah, tseakah. There are many examples of it in the other Prophets: but Isaiah seems peculiarly fond of it. See chap. xiii. 6. xxiv. 17. xxvii. 7. xxxiii. 1. lvii. 6. lxi. 3. lxv. 11, 12. [Rabbi David Kimchi has noticed the paronomasia here: he expected משפט mishpat, judgment, but behold משפח mispach, oppression; he expected צדקה tsedekah, righteousness, but behold צעקה tseakah, a cry.] The Rabbins esteem it a great beauty;—their term for it is צחות הלשון tsachoth ha-leshon, elegance of language.

Oppression—(Tyranny)] משפח mishpach, from שפח shaphach, servum fecit, Arab. Houbigant: שפחה shaphchah, is serva, an handmaid or female slave. מספח mispach, eighteen MSS.

who lay field ... field)] Read תקריבו tekeribu, in the second person; to answer to the verb following. So Vulgate.

Verse 9. In mine ears—(To mine ear)] The sentence in the Hebrew Text seems to be imperfect in this place; as likewise in chap. xxii. 14. where the very same sense seems to be required as here. See the note there; and compare 1 Sam. ix. 15. In this place the Septuagint supply the word ηκουσθη and the Syriac אשתמע ashtamang, auditus est JEHOVAH in auribus meis, i. e. גלה niglah, as in chap. xxii. 14.

Many houses] This has reference to what was said in the preceding verse:—"In vain are ye so intent upon joining house to house, and field to field: your houses shall be left uninhabited, and your fields shall become desolate and barren; so that a vineyard of ten acres shall produce but one bath (not eight gallons) of wine, and the husbandman shall reap but a tenth part of the seed which he has sown." [Kimchi says this means such an extent of vineyard as would require ten yoke of oxen to plough in one day.]

Verse 11. Follow strong drink] Theodoret and Chrysostom on this place, both Syrians, and unexceptionable witnesses in what belongs to their own country, inform us that שכר siker, (σικερα in the Greek of both Testaments, rendered by us by the general term strong drink,) meant properly palm wine, or date wine, which was and is still much in use in the eastern countries. Judea was famous for the abundance and excellence of its palm-trees; and consequently had plenty of this wine. "Fiunt (vina) et è pomis:—primumque è palmis, quo Parthi et Indi utuntur, et oriens totus: maturarum modio in aquæ congiis tribus macerato expressoque." Plin. lib. xiv. 19. "Ab his cariotæ [palmæ] maxime celebrantur; et cibo quidem, sed et succo, uberrimæ. Ex quibus præcipua vina orienti; iniqua capiti, unde pomo nomen." Id. xiii. 9. Καρος signifies stupefaction: and in Hebrew likewise the wine has its name from its remarkable inebriating quality.

Verse 11. Woe unto them that rise up early] There is a likeness between this and the following passage of the prophet Amos, chap. vi. 3—6. who probably wrote before Isaiah. If the latter be the copier, he seems hardly to have equalled the elegance of the original:—

"Ye that put far away the evil day,
And affect the seat of violence;
Who lie upon beds of ivory,
And stretch yourselves upon your couches;
And eat the lambs from the flock,
And calves from the midst of the stall;
Who chaunt to the sound of the viol,
And like David invent for yourselves instruments of music;
Who quaff wine in large bowls,
And are anointed with the choicest ointments:
But are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph."

[Kimchi says, They consider not the heavens, nor their hosts:—they pray not the morning nor the evening prayer unto the Lord.]

Verse 13. And their honourable men—(And the nobles)] These verses have likewise a reference to the two preceding. They that indulged in feasting and drinking, shall perish with hunger and thirst; and Hades shall indulge his appetite as much as they had done, and devour them all. The image is strong and expressive in the highest degree. Habakkuk, chap. ii. 5. uses the same image with great force:—the ambitious and avaricious conqueror

"Enlargeth his appetite like Hades;
And he is like Death, and will never be satisfied."

But, in Isaiah, Hades is introduced to much greater advantage, in person; and placed before our eyes in the form of a ravenous monster, opening wide his unmeasurable jaws, and swallowing them all together. [Therefore Sheol hath dilated her soul, she hath opened her mouth beyond limit.—Destruction expects more than a common meal, when God visits Jerusalem for her iniquities. This seems to refer to the ruin brought on the Jews by the Romans. Our blessed Lord repeats this parable, and applies it to this very transaction. Matt. xxi. 33.

Verse 17. The lambs—(And the kids)] גרים gerim, strangers. The Septuagint read, more agreeably to the design of the prophet, כרים korim, αρνες, the lambs: גדים gedim, the kids, Dr. Durell; nearer to the present reading: and so Archbishop Secker. The meaning is, their luxurious habitations shall be so entirely destroyed as to become a pasture for flocks.

After their manner—(Without restraint)] כדברם kedebarim, secundum ductum eorum; i. e. suo ipsorum ductu; as their own will shall lead them.

Verse 18. With a cart rope—(As a long cable)] The Septuagint, Aquila Sym. and Theod. for בחבלי bechebeli read כחבלי kechebeli, ως σχοινιφ, or σχοινιοις· and the Septuagint, instead of שוא savê, read some other word signifying long; ὡς σχοινιφ μακρῳ· and so likewise the Syriac, אריכא arecha. Houbigant conjectures that the word which the Septuagint had in their copies was שרוע sheruâ, which is used Lev. xxi. 18. xxii. 23. for something in an animal body superfluous, lengthened beyond its natural measure. And he explains it of sin added to sin, and one sin drawing on another, till the whole comes to an enormous length and magnitude; compared to the work of a rope-maker still increasing and lengthening his rope, with the continued addition of new materials. "Eos propheta similes facit homini restiario, qui funem torquet, cannabe addita et contorta, eadem iterans, donec funem in longum duxerit, neque eum liceat protrahi longius." "An evil inclination," says Kimchi on this place, from the ancient Rabbins, "is at the beginning like a fine hair-string, but at the finishing like a thick cart-rope." By a long progression in iniquity, and a continued accumulation of sin, men arrive at length to the highest degree of wickedness; bidding open defiance to God, and scoffing at His threatened judgments, as it is finely expressed in the next verse. The Chaldee paraphrast explains it in the same manner, of wickedness increasing from small beginnings, till it arrives to a great magnitude.

[I believe neither the Rabbins nor Bishop Lowth have hit on the true meaning of this place: the prophet seems to refer to idol sacrifices. The victims they offered were splendidly decked out for the sacrifice. Their horns and hoofs were often gilded, and their heads dressed out with fillets and garlands. The cords of vanity may refer to the silken strings by which they were led to the altar, some of which were unusually thick. The offering for iniquity was adorned with fillets and garlands; the sin-offering with silken cords, like unto cart-ropes. Pride, in their acts of humiliation, had the upper hand.]

Verse 19. Let the counsel of the Holy One]—Tryphiodorus has an expression something like this:—

——— επει Διος ηλυθε βαλη.

TRYPH. Il. Excid. 239.

Because the counsel of Jupiter was come.

This expression, ηλυθε βαλη, is I believe something uncommon: but it is exactly paralleled and explained by a passage in Isaiah, chap. v. 19. The Septuagint has expressed it in the very same words with Tryphiodorus, και ελθοι η βαλη του αγιου Ισραηλ, ινα γνωμεν. Merrick's note, ad loc.

der that it has not been more frequently used. Virgil very elegantly intimates, rather than expresses, the image:

> "Ecce levis summo de vertice visus Iüli
> Fundere lumen apex; tractuque innoxia molli
> Lambere flamma comas, et circum tempora pasci."
> Æn. ii. 682.

> Strange to relate! from young Iülus' head
> A lambent flame arose, which gently spread > Around his brows, and on his temples fed.

And more boldly of Ætna darting out flames from its top:—

> "Interdumque atram prorumpit ad æthera nubem,
> Turbine fumantem picco, et candente favillâ
> Attollitque globos flammarum, et sidera lambit."
> Æn. iii. 574.

> By turns a pitchy cloud she rolls on high,
> By turns hot embers from her entrails fly
> And flakes of mountain flames, that lick the sky.

The disparted tongues, as it were, of fire, Acts ii. 3. which appeared at the descent of the Holy Spirit on the apostles, give the same idea; that is, of flames shooting diversely into pyramidal forms, or points, like tongues. It may be farther observed that the prophet in this place has given the metaphor its full force, in applying it to the action of fire in eating up and devouring whatever comes in its way, like a ravenous animal whose tongue is principally employed in taking in his food or prey; which image Moses has strongly exhibited in an expressive comparison:—"And Moab said to the elders of Midian, Now shall this collection of people lick up all that are round about us, as the ox licketh up the grass of the field." Numb. xxii. 4. See also 1 Kings xviii. 38.

[Their root shall be as rottenness—כמק ka-mak, like mak,—whence probably our word muck, dung, was derived.]

Verse 25. The hills did tremble—(And the mountains trembled)] Probably referring to the great earthquakes in the days of Uzziah king of Judah, in, or not long before, the time of the prophet himself; recorded as a remarkable æra in the title of the prophecies of Amos, chap. i. 1. and by Zechariah, chap. xiv. 5.

Verse 26. He will—hiss—(He will hist)] "The metaphor is taken from the practice of those that keep bees; who draw them out of their hives into the fields, and lead them back again, συριγμασι, by a hiss, or a whistle." Cyril, on this place; and to the same purpose Theodoret, ib. In chap. vii. 18. the metaphor is more apparent, by being carried further; where the hostile armies are expressed by the fly and the bee:

> "JEHOVAH shall hist the fly,
> That is in the utmost parts of Egypt;
> And the bee, that is in the land of Assyria."

On which place see Deut. i. 44. Psa. cxviii. 12. and God calls the locusts his great army, Joel ii. 25. Exod. xxiii. 28. See Huet. Quæst. Alnet. ii. 12. With speed] This refers to the nineteenth verse. As the scoffers had challenged God to make speed, and to hasten his work of vengeance; so now God assures them that with speed and swiftly it shall come.

Verse 27. None—among them] Kimchi has well illustrated this continued exaggeration, or hyperbole, as he rightly calls it, to the following effect: "Through the greatness of their courage, they shall not be fatigued with their march; nor shall they stumble, though they march with the utmost speed: they shall not slumber by day, nor sleep by night; neither shall they ungird their armour, or put off their sandals to take their rest. Their arms shall be always in readiness, their arms sharpened, and their bows bent. The hoofs of their horses are hard as a rock. They shall not fail, or need to be shod with iron: the wheels of their carriages shall move as rapidly as a whirlwind."

long and loose garments, were unfit for action, or business of any kind, without girding their clothes about them. When their business was finished, they took off their girdles. A girdle, therefore, denotes strength and activity; and to unloose the girdle is to deprive of strength, to render unfit for action. God promises to unloose the loins of kings before Cyrus, chap. xlv. 1. The girdle is so essential a part of a soldier's accoutrement, being the last that he puts on to make himself ready for action, that to be girded, ζωννυσθαι, with the Greeks, means to be completely armed, and ready for battle:

Ατρειδης δ' εδοησεν, ιδε ζωννυσθαι ανωγεν
Αργειους. Iliad. xi. 15.

Το δε ενδυναι τα οπλα εκαλουν οι παλαιοι ζωννυσθαι. Pausan. Bœot. It is used in the same manner by the Hebrews:—"Let not him that girdeth himself boast as he that unlooseth his girdle." 1 Kings xx. 11. that is, triumph not, before the war is finished.

Verse 28. Their horses' hoofs shall be counted like flint—(The hoofs of their horses shall be counted as adamant)] The shoeing of horses with iron plates nailed to the hoof is quite a modern practice, and was unknown to the ancients, as appears from the silence of the Greek and Roman writers, especially those that treat of horse-medicine; who could not have passed over a matter so obvious, and of such importance, that now the whole science takes its name from it, being called by us farriery. The horse-shoes of leather and iron, which are mentioned; the silver and the gold shoes, with which Nero and Poppæa shod their mules, used occasionally to preserve the hoofs of delicate cattle, or for vanity, were of a very different kind; they enclosed the whole hoof as in a case, or as a shoe does a man's foot, and were bound or tied on. For this reason the strength, firmness, and solidity of a horse's hoof was of much greater importance with them than with us; and was esteemed one of the first praises of a fine horse. Xenophon says, that a good horse's hoof is hard, hollow, and sounds upon the ground like a cymbal. Hence the χαλκοποδες ιπποι of Homer, and Virgil's "solido graviter sonat ungula cornu." And Xenophon gives directions for hardening the horse's hoofs, by making the pavement on which he stands in the stable, with round-headed stones. For want of this artificial defence to the foot which our horses have, Amos, chap. vi. 12. speaks of it as a thing as much impracticable to make horses run upon a hard rock, as to plough up the same rock with oxen:

"Shall horses run upon a rock?
Shall one plough it up with oxen?"

These circumstances must be taken into consideration in order to give us a full notion of the propriety and force of the image by which the prophet sets forth the strength and excellence of the Babylonish cavalry, which made a great part of the strength of the Assyrian army. Xenophon. Cyrop. lib. ii.

Like a whirlwind] כסופה ka-suphah, like the stormy blast. Here sense and sound are well connected.

Verse 30. If one look unto the land, &c.—(And these shall look to the heaven upward, and down to the earth.)] ונבט לארץ venabat le-aarets. Και εμβλεψονται εις την γην. So the Septuagint, according to the Vatican and Alexandrian copies: but the Complutensian and Aldine editions have it more fully, thus,—Και εμβλεψονται εις τον ουρανον ανω, και κατω—and the Arabic from the Septuagint, as if it had stood thus:—και εμβλεψονται εις τον ουρανον, και εις την γην κατω, both of which are plainly defective; the words εις την γην, unto the earth, being wanted in the former, and the word ανω, above, in the latter. But an ancient Coptic Version from the Septuagint, supposed to be of the second century, some fragments of which are preserved in the library of St. Germain des Prez at Paris, completes the sentence; for, according to this Version, it stood thus in the Septuagint,—Και εμβλεψονται εις τον ουρανον ανω, και εις την γην κατω, [and they shall look unto the heaven above and unto the earth beneath,] and so it stands in the Septuagint, MSS. Pachom. and 1. D. 11. according to which they must have read in their Hebrew Text in this manner: ונבט לשמים למעלה ולארץ למטה This is probably the true reading, with which I have made the translation agree. Compare chap. viii. 22. where the same sense is expressed in regard to both particulars, which are here equally and highly proper, the looking upwards, as well as down to the earth: but the form of expression is varied. I believe the Hebrew Text in that place to be right, though not so full as I suppose it was originally here; and that of the Septuagint there to be redundant, being as full as the Coptic Version and MSS. Pachom. and 1. D. II. represent it in this place, from which I suppose it has been interpolated.

Darkness—(The gloomy vapour)] The Syriac and Vulgate seem to have read בערפלח bearphalach: but Jarchi explains the present reading as signifying darkness; and so possibly the Syriac and Vulgate may have understood it in the same manner.

CHAP. VI.

This Chapter, by a particular designation of Isaiah to the prophetic office, 1—8, introduces, with great solemnity, a declaration of the whole tenor of the Divine conduct in reference to His people, who, on account of their unbelief and impenitence, should for a very long period be given up to a judicial blindness and hardness of heart, 9, 10; and visited with such calamities as would issue in the total desolation of their country and their general dispersion, 11, 12. The prophet adds, however, that under their repeated dispersions (by the Chaldeans, Romans, &c.) a small remnant would be preserved as a seed from which will be raised a people, in whom will be fulfilled all the Divine promises, 13.

As this vision seems to contain a solemn designation of Isaiah to the prophetic office, it is by most interpreters thought to be the first in order of his prophecies. But this perhaps may not be so; for Isaiah is said, in the general title of his prophecies, to have prophesied in the time of Uzziah, whose acts first and last he wrote, 2 Chron. xxvi. 22. which is usually done by a contemporary prophet; and the phrase, in the year when Uzziah died, probably means after the death of Uzziah; as the same phrase, chap. xiv. 28. means after the death of Ahaz. Not that Isaiah's prophecies are placed in exact order of time. Chapters ii. iii. iv. v. seem by internal marks to be antecedent to chap. i.; they suit the time of Uzziah, or the former part of Jotham's reign; whereas chap. i. can hardly be earlier than the last years of Jotham. See note on chap. i. 7. and ii. 1. This might be a new designation to introduce more solemnly a general declaration of the whole course of God's dispensations in regard to His people and the fates of the nation; which are even now still depending, and will not be fully accomplished till the final restoration of Israel.

In this vision the ideas are taken in general from royal majesty, as displayed by the monarchs of the East; for the prophet could not represent the ineffable presence of God by any other than sensible and earthly images. The particular scenery of it is taken from the temple. God is represented as seated on His throne above the ark in the most holy place, where the glory appeared above the cherubim, surrounded by His attendant ministers. This is called by God Himself "The place of His throne, and the place of the soles of His feet," Ezek. xliii. 7. "A glorious throne, exalted of old, is the place of our sanctuary," saith the prophet Jeremiah, chap. xvii. 12. The very posture of sitting is a mark of state and solemnity: Sed et ipsum verbum sedere regni significat potestatem, saith Jerom, Comment. in Eph. i. 20. See note on chap. lii. 2. St. John, who has taken many sublime images from the prophets of the Old Testament, and in particular from Isaiah, hath exhibited the same scenery, drawn out into a greater number of particulars, Rev. iv.

The veil, separating the most holy place from the holy, or outermost part of the temple, is here supposed to be taken away; for the prophet, to whom the whole is exhibited, is manifestly placed by the altar of burnt-offering, at the entrance of the temple, (compare Ezek. xliii. 5, 6.) which was filled with the train of the robe, the spreading and overflowing of the Divine glory. The Lord upon the throne, according to St. John, chap. xii. 41. was Christ; and the vision related to His future kingdom, when the veil of separation was to be removed, and the whole earth was to be filled with the glory of God, revealed to all mankind: which is likewise implied in the hymn of the seraphim; the design of which is, saith Jerom on the place, ut mysterium Trinitatis in unâ Divinitate demonstrent; et nequaquam templum Judaicum, sicut prius, sed omnem terram, illius gloria plenam esse testentur, ["That they may point out the mystery of the Trinity in one Godhead; and that the Jewish temple alone should not be, as formerly, the place of the Divine glory, for the whole earth should be filled with it."] It relates indeed primarily to the prophet's own time, and the obduration of the Jews of that age, and their punishment by the Babylonish captivity: but extends in its full latitude to the age of Messiah, and the blindness of the Jews to the Gospel, (see Matt. xiii. 14. NOTES ON CHAP. VI.

Verse 1. The Lord] Fifty-one MSS. [of Kennicott, and fifty-four of De Rossi,] and one edition; in the 8th verse, forty-four MSS. [of Kennicott, and forty-six of De Rossi,] and one edition; and in the 11th verse, thirty-three MSS. [of Kennicott, and many of De Rossi,] and one edition for אדני adonai, "the Lord," read יהוה, "JEHOVAH," which is probably the true reading; (compare verse 5th,) as in many other places, in which the superstition of the Jews has substituted אדני adonai, for יהוה yehovah. One of my own MSS., a very ancient and large folio, to which the points and the masora have been added by a later hand, has יהוה yehovah, in the 1st and 8th verses in the teeth of the masora, which orders it in both places to be read אדני adonai.]

Verse 2. Above it stood the seraphim]—שרפים seraphim, from שרף saraph, to burn. He saw, says Kimchi, the angels as flames of fire that the depravity of that generation might be exhibited, which was worthy of being totally burnt up.]

He covered his feet—(He covereth his feet)] By the feet the Hebrews mean all the lower parts of the body. But the people of the East generally wearing long robes reaching to the ground, and covering the lower parts of the body down to the feet, it may hence have been thought want of respect and decency to appear in public, and on solemn occasions, with even the feet themselves uncovered. Kempfer, speaking of the king of Persia giving audience, says, Rex in medio supremi atrii cruribus more patrio inflexis sedebat: corpus tunica investiebat flava, ad suras cum staret protensa; discumbentis vero pedes discalceatos pro urbanitate patria operiens. Amæn. Exot. p. 227.—["The king sat on the floor cross-legged, as is the custom of the country. He was covered with a yellow garment, which reached down to the feet when standing, but covered the feet for decency when sitting with his slippers off."] Sir John Chardin's MS. note on this place of Isaiah is as follows:—Grande marque de respect en orient de se cacher les pieds, quand on est assis, et de baisser le visage. Quand le souverain se montre en Chine et à Japon, chacun se jette le visage contre la terre, et il n'est pas permis de regarder le roi. ["It is a great mark of respect in the East to cover the feet, and to bow down the head in the presence of the king."]

Verse 3. Holy, holy, holy.] This hymn performed by the seraphim, divded into two choirs, the one singing responsively to the other; which Gregory Nazian. Carm. 18. very elegantly calls Συμφωνον, αντιφωνον, αγγελων στασιν, is formed upon the practice of alternate singing, which prevailed in the Jewish church from the time of Moses, whose Ode at the Red Sea was thus performed, (see Exod. xv. 20, 21.) to that of Ezra, under whom the priests and Levites sung alternately.

"O praise JEHOVAH, for He is gracious,
For His mercy endureth for ever."

Ezra iii. 11. See De Sac. Poes. Hebr. Præl. xix. at the beginning.

[Verse 5. Woe is me! for I am undone—נדמיתי nedimiti, I am become dumb. There is something exceedingly affecting in this complaint. I am a man of unclean lips—I cannot say Holy! holy! holy! which the seraphs exclaim. They are holy, I am not so; they see God, and live; I have seen Him and must die, because I am unholy. Only the pure in heart shall see God; and they only can live in His presence for ever. Reader, lay this to heart, and instead of boasting of thy excellence, and trusting in thy might, or comforting thyself in thy comparative innocence, thou wilt also be dumb before Him, because thou hast been a man of unclean lips, and because thou hast still an unclean heart.]

I am undone—(I am struck dumb)] נדמיתי nedimiti, twenty-eight MSS. (five ancient) and three editions.——I understand it as from דום dum, or דמם damam, silere, "to be silent;" and so it is rendered by the Syriac, Vulgate, Symmachus, and by some of the Jewish interpreters apud Sal. b. Melec. The rendering of the Syriac is תויר אני tavir ani, stupens, attonitus sum, "I am amazed." He immediately gives the reason, why he was struck dumb; because he was a man of polluted lips and dwelt among a people of polluted lips; and was unworthy either to join the seraphim in singing praises to God, or to be the messenger of God to His people. Compare Exod. iv. 10. vi. 12. Jer. 1. 6.

From off the altar] That is, from the altar of burnt-offerings, before the door of the temple; on which the fire that came down at first from heaven, Lev. ix. 24. 2 Chron. vii. 1. was perpetually kept burning. It was never to be extinguished, Lev. vi. 12, 13.

[Verse 9 And he said—לי li, to me, two MSS. and the Syriac.] Thirteen MSS. have ראה raah, in the regular form.

Verse 10. Make the heart of this people fat—(Gross)] The prophet speaks of the event, the fact as it would actually happen; not of God's purpose and act by His ministry. The prophets are in other places said to perform the thing, which they only foretel:

> "Lo! I have given thee a charge this day
> Over the nations, and over the kingdoms;
> To pluck up and to pull down;
> To destroy, and to demolish;
> To build, and to plant." Jer. i. 10.

And Ezekiel says, "When I came to destroy the city;" that is, as it is rendered in the margin of our Version, "when I came to prophesy that the city should be destroyed." Chap. xliii. 3. To hear, and not understand; to see, and not perceive; is a common saying in many languages. Demosthenes uses it, and expressly calls it a proverb: ὥστε το της παροιμιας ὁρωντας μη ὁραν, και ακουοντας μη ακουειν. Contra Aristogit. I. sub. fin. The prophet, by the bold figure in the sentiment abovementioned, and the elegant form and construction of the sentence, has raised it from a common proverb into a beautiful mashal, and given it the sublime air of poetry.

[Or the words may be understood thus, according to the Hebrew idiom: Ye certainly hear, but do not understand; ye certainly see, but do not acknowledge. Seeing this is the case, make the heart of this people fat—declare it to be stupid and senseless; and remove from them the means of salvation, which they have so long abused.

There is a saying precisely like this in Eschylus:

> ——— βλεποντες εβλεπον ματην,
> Κλυοντες ακ ηκουον. Æsch. Prom. Vinct. 456.
> "Seeing, they saw in vain; and hearing they did not understand."]

And shut—(Close up)] השע hashâ. This word Sal. b. Melec explains to this sense, in which it is hardly used elsewhere, on the authority of Onkelos. He says it means closing up the eyes, so that one cannot see; that the root is שוע shavâ, by which word the Targum has rendered the word טח tach, Lev. xiv. 42. וטח את בית vetach et beith, "and shall plaster the house." And the word טח tach, is used in the same sense, Isa. xliv. 18. So that it signifies to close up the eyes by some matter spread upon the lids. Mr. Harmer very ingeniously applies to this passage a practice of sealing up the eyes as a ceremony, or as a kind of punishment used in the East, from which the image may possibly be taken. Observations II. 278.

With their heart—(With their hearts)] ובלבבו ubelabbu, fifteen MSS. [of Kennicott's and fourteen of De Rossi's] and two editions, [with the Septuagint, Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate.]

And be healed.—(And I should heal)] וארפא vearpha, Septuagint, Vulgate. So likewise Matt. xiii. 14. John xii. 40. Acts xxviii. 27.

Verse 11. Be utterly desolate—(Be left)] For תשאה tishaeh, the Septuagint, and Vulgate read תשאר tishaer.

Verse 13. A tenth] This passage, though somewhat obscure and variously explained by various interpreters, yet, I think, has been made so clear by the accomplishment of the prophecy, that there remains little room to doubt of the sense of it. When Nebuchadnezzar had carried away the greater and better part of the people into captivity, there was yet a tenth remaining in the land, the poorer sort left to be vinedressers and husbandmen, under Gedaliah, 2 Kings xxv. 12, 22. and the dispersed Jews gathered themselves together, and returned to him, Jer. xl. 12. yet even these, fleeing into Egypt after the death of Gedaliah, contrary to the warning of God given by the prophet Jeremiah, miserably perished there. Again, in the subsequent and more remarkable completion of the prophecy in the destruction of Jerusalem and the dissolution of the commonwealth by the Romans, when the Jews, after the loss of above a million of men, had increased from the scanty residue that was left of them, and had become very numerous again in their country; Hadrian, provoked by their rebellious behaviour, slew above half a million more of them, and a second time almost extirpated the nation. Yet after these signal and almost universal destructions of that nation, and after so many other repeated exterminations and massacres of them in different times and on various occasions since, we yet see, with astonishment, that the stock still remains, from which God, according to His promise frequently given by His prophets, will cause His people to shoot forth again, and to flourish.

[A tenth, עשיריה âsiriyah. The meaning, says Kimchi, of this word is, there shall yet be in the land ten kings from the time of declaring this prophecy. The names of the ten kings are, Jotham, Ahaz, Hezekiah, Manasseh, Amon, Josiah, Jehoahaz, Jehoiachin, Jehoiakim, and Zedekiah: then there shall be a general consumption; the people shall be carried into captivity, and Jerusalem shall be destroyed.]

For בם bem, in them, above seventy MSS. eleven of Kennicott, and thirty-four of De Rossi, read בה bah, in it; and so the Septuagint.

CHAPTER VII.

The king of Judah and the royal family being in the utmost consternation on receiving accounts of the invasion of the kings of Syria and Israel, the prophet is sent to assure them that God would make good His promises to David and his house; so that, although they might be corrected, they could not be destroyed, while these prophecies remained to be accomplished, 1—9. The Lord gives Ahaz a sign that the confederacy against Judah shall be broken, which sign strikingly points out the miraculous conception of the Messiah, who was to spring from the tribe of Judah, 10—16. Prediction of very heavy calamities which the Assyrians would inflict upon the land of Judea, 17—25.

[a] 2 Kings 16. 5. 2 Chron. 23. 5, 6.

[b] 2 Kings 15. 25, 30, 37.

The confederacy of Retsin king of Syria, and Pekah king of Israel, against the kingdom of Judah, was formed in the time of Jotham; and perhaps the effects of it were felt in the latter part of his reign, see 2 Kings xv. 37. and Note on chap. i. 7—9. However, in the very beginning of the reign of Ahaz, they jointly invaded Judah with a powerful army, and threatened to destroy, or to dethrone, the house of David. The king and royal family being in the utmost consternation on receiving advices of their designs, Isaiah is sent to them to support and comfort them in their present distress, by assuring them, that God would make good His promises to David and his house. This makes the subject of this, and the following, and the beginning of the ninth Chapters; in which there are many and great difficulties.

Chap. vii. begins with an historical account of the occasion of this prophecy: and then follows, ver. 4—16. a prediction of the ill success of the designs of the Israelites and Syrians against Judah; and, from thence to the end of the Chapter, a denunciation of the calamities to be brought upon the king and the people of Judah by the Assyrians, whom they had now hired to assist them. Chap. viii. has a pretty close connexion with the foregoing: it contains a confirmation of the prophecy before given of the approaching destruction of the kingdoms of Israel and Syria by the Assyrians; of the denunciation of the invasion of Judah by the same Assyrians. Ver. 9, 10. give a repeated general assurance, that all the designs of the enemies of God's people shall be in the end disappointed, and brought to nought; ver. 11. &c.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VII.

[Verse 3. Now—נא na, is omitted by two MSS. the Septuagint, Syriac, Arabic, and Vulgate.]

Verse 4. The Syriac, omits וארם vearam; the Vulgate reads מלך ארם melek aram; one or the other seems to be the true reading. I prefer the former: or, instead of וארם ובן vearam uben, read ופקח בן, vepakach ben, MS.

[Verse 5. Because—Remaliah] All these words are omitted by one MS. and the Syriac; a part of them also by the Septuagint.]

Verses 8, 9. For the head of Syria, &c.

"Though the head of Syria be Damascus,
And the head of Damascus Retsin;
Yet within threescore and five years
Ephraim shall be broken, that he be no more a people:
And the head of Ephraim be Samaria;
And the head of Samaria Remaliah's son."

"Here are six lines; or three distichs, the order of which seems to have been disturbed by a transposition, occasioned by three of the lines beginning with the same word וראש ve-rosh, and the head, which three lines ought not to have been separated by any other line intervening: but a copyist, having written the first of them, and casting his eye on the third, might easily proceed to write after the first line beginning with וראש ve-rosh, that which ought to have followed the third line beginning with וראש ve-rosh. Then finding his mistake, to preserve the beauty of his copy, added at the end the distich, which should have been in the middle; making that the second distich, which ought to have been the third. For the order as it now stands is preposterous: the destruction of Ephraim is denounced, and then their grandeur is set forth; whereas naturally the representation of the grandeur of Ephraim should precede that of their destruction. And the destruction of Ephraim has no coherence with the grandeur of Syria, simply as such, which it now follows: but it naturally and properly follows the grandeur of Ephraim, joined to that of Syria their ally.

"The arrangement then of the whole sentence seems originally to have been thus:

Though the head of Syria be Damascus;
And the head of Damascus Retsin;
And the head of Ephraim be Samaria;
And the head of Samaria Remaliah's son:
Yet within threescore and five years
Ephraim shall be broken that he be no more a people."

Threescore and five years] It was sixty-five years from the beginning of the reign of Ahaz, when this prophecy was delivered, to the total depopulation of the kingdom of Israel by Esarhaddon, who carried away the remains of the ten tribes which had been left by Tiglath Pilèser, and Shalmaneser, and who planted the country with new inhabitants. That the country was not wholly stripped of its inhabitants by Shalmaneser appears from many passages of the history of Josiah; where Israelites are mentioned as still remaining there, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 6, 7, 33.; xxxv. 18. 2 Kings xxiii. 19, 20. This seems to be the best explanation of the chronological difficulty in this place, which has much embarrassed the commentators: see Usserii Annal. V. T. ad an. 3327. and Sir I. Newton, Chronol. p. 283.

"That the last deportation of Israel by Esarhaddon was in the sixty-fifth year after the second of Ahaz is probable, for the following reasons. The Jews, in Seder Olam Rabba, and the Talmudists, in D. Kimchi on Ezek. iv. say, that Manasseh king of Judah was carried to Babylon by the king of Assyria's captains, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11. in the twenty-second year of his reign; that is, before Christ 676. according to Dr. Blair's tables. And they are probably right in this. It could not be much earlier; as the king of Assyria was not king of Babylon till 680, ibid. As Esarhaddon was then in the neighbourhood of Samaria, it is highly probable, that he did then carry away the last remains of Israel; and brought those strangers thither, who mention him as their founder, Ezra iv. 2. But this year is just the sixty-fifth from the second of Ahaz, which was 740 before Christ. Now the carrying away the remains of Israel, (who, till then, though their kingdom was destroyed forty-five years before, and though small in number, yet might keep up some form of being a people, by living according to their own laws,) entirely put an end to the people of Israel, as a people separate from all others: for from this time they never returned to their own country in a body, but were confounded with the people of Judah in the Captivity; and the whole people, the ten tribes included, were called Jews." DR. JUBB. [Two MSS. have twenty-five instead of sixty-five; and two others omit the word five, reading only sixty.]

If ye will not believe—(If ye believe not)] "This clause is very much illustrated, by considering the captivity of Manasseh as happening at the same time with this predicted final ruin of Ephraim as a people. The near connexion of the two facts makes the prediction of the one naturally to cohere with the prediction of the other. And the words are well suited to this event in the history of the people of Judah. 'If ye believe not, ye shall not be established:' that is, unless ye believe this prophecy of the destruction of Israel, ye Jews also, as well as the people of Israel, shall not remain established as a kingdom and people; ye also shall be visited with punishment at the same time. As our Saviour told the Jews in His time, 'Unless ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish:' intimating their destruction by the Romans; to which also as well as to the captivity of Manasseh, and to the Babylonish captivity, the views of the prophet might here extend. The close connexion of this threat to the Jews, with the prophecy of the destruction of Israel, is another strong proof, that the order of the preceding lines above proposed is right." DR. JUBB.

(If ye believe not in me)] The exhortation of Jehoshaphat, 2 Chron. xx. 20. to his people, when God had promised to them, by the prophet Jahaziel, victory over the Moabites and Ammonites, is very like this both in sense and expression, and seems to be delivered in verse:—

"Hear me, O Judah; and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem;
Believe in JEHOVAH your God, and ye shall be established:
Believe His prophets, and ye shall prosper."

Where both the sense and construction render very probable a conjecture of Archbishop Secker on this place; that instead of כי ki, we should read בי bi. "If ye will not believe in me, ye shall not be established." So likewise Dr. Durell. The Chaldee has, "If ye will not believe in the words of the prophet;" which seems to be a paraphrase of the reading here proposed. In favour of which it may be farther observed, that in one MS. כי ki, is upon a rasure; and another for the last לא lo, reads ולא velo, which would properly follow בי bi, but could not follow כי ki.

[Some translate thus, and paraphrase thus: If ye will not believe, surely ye shall not be established. Or, If ye do not give credit, it is because ye are unfaithful. Ye have not been faithful to the grace already given: therefore ye are now incapable of crediting my promises.]

to it by the most learned. And this obscure incoherence is given to it by the false rendering of a Hebrew particle, viz. ל le, in לדעתו ledaâto. This has been generally rendered, either 'that he may know,' or 'till he know.' It is capable of either version, without doubt. But either of these versions makes ver. 15. incoherent and inconsistent with ver. 16. For ver. 16. plainly means to give a reason for the assertion in ver. 15.; because it is subjoined to it by the particle כי ki, for. But it is no reason why a child should eat butter and honey till he was at an age to distinguish, that before that time the land of his nativity should be free from its enemies. This latter supposition indeed implies what is inconsistent with the preceding assertion. For it implies, that in part of that time of the infancy spoken of, the land should not be free from enemies, and consequently these species of delicate food could not be attainable, as they are in times of peace. The other version 'that he may know' has no meaning at all; for what sense is there in asserting, that a child shall eat butter and honey that he may know to refuse evil and choose good? Is there any such effect in this food? Surely no. Besides, the child is thus represented to eat those things, which only a state of peace produces, during its whole infancy, inconsistently with ver. 16. which promises a relief from enemies only before the end of this infancy: implying plainly, that part of it would be passed in distressful times of war and siege, which was the state of things when the prophecy was delivered.

"But all these objections are cut off, and a clear coherent sense is given to this passage, by giving another sense to the particle ל le, which never occurred to me till I saw it in Harmer's Observat. Vol. I. p. 299. See how coherent the words of the prophet run, with how natural a connexion one clause follows another, by properly rendering this one particle. 'Behold this Virgin shall conceive and bear a Son, and thou shalt call his name Immanuel; butter and honey shall he eat, when he shall know to refuse evil, and choose good. For, before this child shall know to refuse evil and choose good, the land shall be desolate, by whose two kings thou art distressed.' Thus ver. 16. subjoins a plain reason why the child should eat butter and honey, the food of plentiful times, when he came to a distinguishing age; viz. because before that time the country of the two kings, who now distressed Judea, should be desolated; and so Judea should recover that plenty which attends peace. That this rendering, which gives perspicuity and rational connexion to the passage, is according to the use of the Hebrew particle, is certain. Thus לפנות בקר lepanoth boker, 'at the appearing of morning, or, when morning appeared;' Exod. xiv. 27. לעת האכל le êt haacal, 'at meal-time, or, when it was time to eat,' Ruth, ii. 14. In the same manner, לדעתו le daâto, 'at his knowing, that is, when he knows.'

"Harmer (ibid.) has clearly shown, that these articles of food are delicacies in the East; and as such denote a state of plenty. See also Josh. v. 6. They therefore naturally express the plenty of the country, as a mark of peace restored to it. Indeed, ver. 22. it expresses a plenty arising from the thinness of the people: but that it signifies, ver. 15. a plenty arising from deliverance from war then present is evident, because otherwise there is no expression of this deliverance. And that a deliverance was intended to be here expressed is plain, from calling the child, which should be born Immanuel, God with us. It is plain also, because it is before given to the prophet in charge to make a declaration of the deliverance, ver. 3—7; and it is there made; and this prophecy must undoubtedly be conformable to that in this matter." Dr. Jubb.

The circumstance of the child's eating butter and honey is explained by Jarchi, as denoting a state of plenty. "Butter and honey shall this child eat because our land shall be full of all good." Comment. in locum. The infant Jupiter, says Callimachus, was tenderly nursed with goat's milk and honey. Hymn. in Jov. 48. Homer, of the orphan daughters of Pandareus;

Agreably to the observations communicated by the learned person above mentioned, which perfectly well explain the historical sense of this much disputed passage, not excluding a higher secondary sense, the obvious and literal meaning of the prophecy is this: 'that within the time that a young woman, now a virgin, should conceive and bring forth a child, and that child should arrive at such an age as to distinguish between good and evil, that is within a few years, (compare chap. viii. 4.) the enemies of Judah should be destroyed.' But the prophecy is introduced in so solemn a manner; the sign is so marked, as a sign selected and given by God himself, after Ahaz had rejected the offer of any sign of his own choosing out of the whole compass of nature; the terms of the prophecy are so peculiar, and the name of the child so expressive, containing in them much more than the circumstances of the birth of a common child required, or even admitted: that we may easily suppose that, in minds prepared by the general expectation of a great Deliverer to spring from the house of David, they raised hopes far beyond what the present occasion suggested; especially when it was found that in the subsequent prophecy delivered immediately afterward, this child, called Immanuel, is treated as the Lord and Prince of the land of Judah. Who could this be, other than the Heir of the throne of David? under which character a great and even a Divine person had been promised. No one of that age answered to this character except Hezekiah: but he was certainly born nine or ten years before the delivery of this prophecy. That this was so understood at that time, is collected I think, with great probability, from a passage of Micah, a prophet contemporary with Isaiah, but who began to prophesy after him; and who, as I have already observed, imitated him, and sometimes used his expressions. Micah having delivered that remarkable prophecy, which determines the place of the birth of Messiah, "the Ruler of God's people, whose goings forth have been of old, from everlasting;" that it should be Bethlehem Ephratah; adds immediately, that nevertheless, in the mean time, God would deliver his people into the hands of their enemies; "He will give them up, till she, who is to bear a child, shall bring forth," Mic. v. 3. This obviously and plainly refers to some known prophecy concerning a woman to bring forth a child; and seems much more properly applicable to this passage of Isaiah than to any others of the same prophet, to which some interpreters have applied it. St. Matthew therefore, in applying this prophecy to the birth of Christ, does it not merely in the way of accommodating the words of the prophet to a suitable case not in the prophet's view; but takes it in the strictest, clearest, and most important sense; and applies it according to the original design and principal intention of the prophet.

[After all this learned criticism, I think something is still wanting to diffuse the proper light over this important prophecy. On Matt. i. 24. I have given what I judge to be the true meaning and right application of the whole passage, as there quoted by the evangelist, the substance of which it will be necessary to repeat here:

At the time referred to, the kingdom of Judah, under the government of Ahaz, was reduced very low. Pekah, king of Israel, had slain in Judea one hundred and twenty thousand persons in one day; and carried away captive two hundred thousand, including women and children, together with much spoil. To add to their distress, Rezin, king of Syria, being confederate with Pekah, had taken Elath, a fortified city of Judah, and carried the inhabitants away captive to Damascus. In this critical conjuncture, need we wonder that Ahaz was afraid that the enemies who were now united against him must prevail, destroy Jerusalem, end the kingdom of Judah, and annihilate the family of David? To meet and remove this fear, apparently well grounded, Isaiah is sent from the Lord to Ahaz, swallowed up now both by sorrow and by unbelief, in order to assure him that the counsels of his enemies should not stand; and that they should be utterly discomfited. To encourage Ahaz, he commands him to ask a sign or miracle, which should be a pledge in hand, that God should, in due time, fulfil the predictions of his servant, as related in the context. On Ahaz humbly refusing to ask any sign, it is immediately added, Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign; Behold a virgin shall conceive and bear a son; and shall call his name Immanuel. Butter and honey shall he eat, &c. Both the divine and human nature of our Lord, as well as the miraculous conception, appear to be pointed out in the prophecy quoted here by the Evangelist:—He shall be called עִמָּנוּ-אֵל IMMENU-EL; literally, The STRONG GOD WITH US: similar to those words in the New Testament—The word which was God—was made flesh, and dwelt among us, full of grace and truth; John i. 1, 14. And God was manifested in the flesh, 1 Tim. iii. 16. So that we are to understand God with us to imply God incarnated—God in human nature. This seems farther evident from the words of the prophet, ver. 15, Butter and honey shall he eat—he shall be truly man, grow up and be nourished in a human natural way; which refers to His being WITH US, i. e. incarnated. To which the prophet adds That he may know to refuse the evil, and choose the good:—or rather, According to his knowledge, לְדַעְתּוֹ ledaâto, reprobating the evil, and choosing the good:—this refers to him as GOD; and is the same idea, given by this prophet, chap. liii. 11. By (or in) his knowledge (the knowledge of Christ crucified, בְּדַעְתּוֹ be-daâto) shall my righteous servant justify many; for he shall bear their offences. Now this union of the divine and human nature is termed a sign or miracle, אוֹת oth, i. e. something which exceeds the power of nature to produce. And this miraculous union was to be brought about in a miraculous way: Behold a VIRGIN shall conceive: the word is very emphatic, הָעַלְמָה ha-âlmah, THE virgin; the only one that ever was, or ever shall be, a mother in this way. But the Jews, and some called Christians, who have espoused their desperate cause, assert, that "the word עלמה âlmah does not signify a VIRGIN only; for it is applied Prov. xxx. 19. to signify a young married woman." I answer, that this latter text is no proof of the contrary doctrine: the words דרך גבר בעלמה derec geber be-âlmah, the way of a man with a maid, cannot be proved to mean that for which it is produced. Besides, one of De Rossi's MSS. reads בעלמיו be-âlmaiv, the way of a strong, or stout, man (גבר geber) IN HIS YOUTH; and in this reading the Syriac, Septuagint, Vulgate, and Arabic agree; which are followed by the first Version in the English language, as it stands in a MS. in my own possession—the WAYS of a man in his waning youth: so that this place, the only one that can with any probability of success, be produced, were the interpretation contended for correct, which I am by no means disposed to admit, proves nothing. Besides, the consent of so many Versions in the opposite meaning deprives it of much of its influence in this question.

The word עלמה âlmah, comes from עלם âlam, to lie hid, be concealed: and we are told that "virgins were so called, because they were concealed or closely kept up in their fathers' houses till the time of their marriage." This is not correct: see the case of Rebecca, Gen. xxiv. 43. and my note there; that of Rachel, Gen. xxix. 6, 9. and the note there also; and see the case of Miriam, the sister of Moses, Exod. ii. 3. and also the Chaldee paraphrase on Lam. i. 4. where the virgins are represented as going out in the dance. And see also the whole history of Ruth. This being concealed, or kept at home, on which so much stress is laid, is purely fanciful; for we find that young unmarried women drew water, kept sheep, gleaned publicly in the fields, &c. &c. and the same works they perform among the Turcomans to the present day. This reason, therefore, does not account for the radical meaning of the word; and we must seek it elsewhere. Another well known and often used root in the Hebrew tongue will cast light on this subject. This is גלה galah, which signifies to reveal, make manifest, or uncover; and is often applied to matrimonial connexions in different parts of the Mosaic law: עלם âlam, therefore, may be considered as implying the concealment of the virgin, as such, till lawful marriage had taken place. A virgin was not called עלמה âlmah, because she was concealed by being kept at home in her father's house, which is not true, but literally and physically, because as a woman she had not been uncovered—she had not known man. This fully applies to the blessed virgin, see Luke i. 34. "How can this be, seeing I know no man?" And this text throws much light on the subject before us. This also is in perfect agreement with the ancient prophecy, "The Seed of the woman shall bruise the head of the serpent," Gen. iii. 15. for the person who was to destroy the work of the devil was to be the Progeny of the woman, without any concurrence of the man. And hence the text in Genesis speaks as fully of the virgin state of the person from whom Christ, according to the flesh, should come, as that in the Prophet, or this in the Evangelist. According to the original promise there was to be a seed, a human being, who should destroy sin: but this seed or human being, must come from the woman ALONE; and no woman ALONE could produce such a human being without being a virgin. Hence, A virgin shall bear a son, is the very spirit and meaning of the original text, independently of the illustration given by the Prophet; and the fact recorded by the Evangelist is the proof of the whole. But how could that be a sign to Ahaz, which was to take place so many hundreds of years after? I answer, the meaning of the prophet is plain: not only Rezin and Pekah should be unsuccessful against Jerusalem at that time, which was the fact; but Jerusalem, Judea, and the house of David, should be both preserved, notwithstanding their depressed state, and the multitude of their adversaries, till the time should come when a VIRGIN should bear a son. This is a most remarkable circumstance—the house of David could never fail, till a virgin should conceive and bear a son—nor did it: but when that incredible and miraculous fact did take place, the kingdom and house of David became extinct! This is an irrefragable confutation of every argument a Jew can offer in vindication of his opposition to the Gospel of Christ. Either the prophecy in Isaiah has been fulfilled, or the kingdom and house of David are yet standing. But the kingdom of David, we know, is destroyed; and where is the man, Jew or Gentile, that can show us a single descendant of David on the face of the earth? The prophecy could not fail—the kingdom and house of David have failed—the virgin, therefore, must have brought forth her son—and this Son is Jesus, the Christ. Thus Moses, Isaiah, and Matthew, concur; and facts the most unequivocal have confirmed the whole! Behold the wisdom and providence of God!

Notwithstanding what has been said above, it may be asked, In what sense could this name Immanuel be applied to Jesus Christ, if he be not truly and properly GOD?

Shall the Lord shave with a razor that is hired—(JEHOVAH shall shave by the hired razor)] To shave with the hired razor the head, the feet, and the beard, is an expression highly parabolical, to denote the utter devastation of the country from one end to the other; and the plundering of the people, from the highest to the lowest, by the Assyrians, whom God employed as His instrument to punish the Jews. Ahaz himself, in the first place, hired the king of Assyria to come to help him against the Syrians, by a present made to him of all the treasures of the temple, as well as his own. And God Himself considered the great nations, whom He thus employed, as His mercenaries; and paid them their wages. Thus He paid Nebuchadnezzar for his services against Tyre, by the conquest of Egypt, Ezek. xxix. 18—20. The hairs of the head are those of the highest order in the state; those of the feet, or the lower parts, are the common people; the beard is the king, the high priest, the very supreme in dignity and majesty. The eastern people have always held the beard in the highest veneration, and have been extremely jealous of its honour. To pluck a man's beard is an instance of the greatest indignity that can be offered. See Isa. l. 6. The king of the Ammonites, to show the utmost contempt of David 'cut off half the beards of his servants, and the men were greatly ashamed; and David bade them tarry at Jericho till their beards were grown.' 2 Sam. x. 4, 5. Niebuhr, Arabie, p. 275, gives a modern instance of the very same kind of insult. "The Turks," says Thevenot, "greatly esteem a man who has a fine beard: it is a very great affront to take a man by his beard, unless it be to kiss it; they swear by the beard." Voyages, I. p. 57. D'Arvieux gives a remarkable instance of an Arab, who having received a wound in his jaw, chose to hazard his life, rather than suffer his surgeon to take off his beard. Memoires, Tom. III. p. 214. See also Niebuhr, Arabie, p. 61.

The remaining verses of this chapter, 21—25. contain an elegant and very expressive description of a country depopulated, and left to run wild, from its adjuncts and circumstances: the vineyards and corn-fields, before well cultivated, now overrun with briers and thorns; much grass, so that the few cattle that are left, a young cow and two sheep, have their full range, and abundant pasture, so as to yield milk in plenty to the scanty family of the owner; the thinly scattered people living not on corn, wine, and oil, the produce of cultivation; but on milk and honey, the gifts of nature, and the whole land given up to the wild beasts, so that the miserable inhabitants are forced to go out armed with bows and arrows, either to defend themselves against the wild beasts, or to supply themselves with necessary food by hunting.

being laid before the Reader; though they are in some respects different from my own view of the subject.]

"To establish the primary and literal meaning of a passage of Scripture is evidently laying the true foundation for any subsequent views or improvements from it.

"The kingdom of Judah, under the government of Ahaz, was reduced very low. Pekah, king of Israel, had slain in Judea one hundred and twenty thousand in one day; and carried away captive two hundred thousand, including women and children, with much spoil. To add to this distress, Rezin, king of Syria, being confederate with Pekah, had taken Elath, a fortified city of Judah, and carried the inhabitants to Damascus. I think it may also be gathered from the sixth verse of chap. viii. that the kings of Syria and Israel had a considerable party in the land of Judea, who, regardless of the Divine appointment and promises, were disposed to favour the elevation of Tabeal, (a stranger,) to the throne of David. In this critical conjuncture of affairs, Isaiah was sent with a message of mercy, and a promise of deliverance to Ahaz. He was commanded to take with him Shearjashub, his son, whose name contained a promise respecting the captives lately made by Pekah, whose return from Samaria, effected by the expostulation of the prophet Oded and the concurrence of the princes of Ephraim, was now promised as a pledge of the Divine interposition offered to Ahaz in favour of the house of David. And as a further token of this preservation, (notwithstanding the incredulity of Ahaz,) Isaiah was directed to predict the birth of another son which should be born to him within the space of a year, and to be named Emmanuel, signifying thereby the protection of God to the land of Judah and family of David at this present conjuncture, with reference to the promise of the Messiah who was to spring from that family, and be born in that land. Compare chap. viii. 8. Hence Isaiah testifies, chap. viii. 18. 'Behold I and the children whom the Lord hath given me are for signs and for types in Israel.' Compare Zech. iii. 8.—'Thy companions are men of sign and type:' see Dr. Lowth on this verse. The message of Divine displeasure against Israel is in like manner expressed by the names the prophet Hosea was directed to give his children, see Hos. i. and ii.

"Concerning this child, who was to be named Emmanuel, the prophet was commissioned to declare, that notwithstanding the present scarcity prevailing in the land from its being harassed by war, yet within the space of time wherein this child should be of age to discern good and evil, both these hostile kings, (viz. of Israel and Syria,) should be cut off; and the country enjoy such plenty that butter and honey, food accounted of peculiar delicacy, should be a common repast. See Harmer's Observations, Vol. i. p. 299.

"To this it may be objected, that Isaiah's son was not named Emmanuel, but Maher-shalal-hash-baz; the signification of which bore a threatening aspect, instead of a consolatory one. To this I think a satisfactory answer may be given. Ahaz, by his unbelief and disregard of the message of mercy sent to him from God, (for instead of depending upon it he sent and made a treaty with the king of Assyria,) drew upon himself the Divine displeasure, which was expressed by the change of the child's name, and the declaration that though Damascus and Samaria should, according to the former prediction, fall before the king of Assyria, yet that this very power, (i. e. Assyria) in whom Ahaz trusted for deliverance, see 2 Kings xvi. 7, &c. should afterwards come against Judah, and 'fill the breadth of the land,' which was accomplished in the following reign, when Jerusalem was so endangered as to be delivered only by miracle. The sixth and seventh verses of chap. viii. I think indicate, as I before observed, that the kings of Syria and Israel had many adherents in Judah, who are said to refuse the peaceful waters of Shiloh or Siloam (Him that is to be sent, who ought to have been their confidence, typified by the fountain at the foot of Mount Zion, whose stream watered the city of Jerusalem,) and therefore since the splendour of victory, rather than the blessings of peace, was the object of their admiration (compared to a swelling river which overflowed its banks) God threatens to chastise them by the victorious armies of Ashur. The prophet at the same time addresses words of consolation to such of the people who yet feared and trusted in Jehovah, whom he instructs and comforts with the assurance (verse 10.) that they shall prove the fulfilment of the promise contained in the name Emmanuel.

"But it may still be objected, that according to this interpretation of the fourteenth verse of chap. vii. nothing miraculous occurs, which is readily admitted: but the objection rests upon the supposition that something miraculous was intended; whereas the word אות oth, sign, does by no means generally imply a miracle, but most commonly an emblematic representation, (see Ezek. iv. 3—12. xi. xx. 20. Zech. vi. 14.) either by actions or names, of some future event either promised or threatened. Exod. iii. 12. 1 Sam. ii. 34. 2 Kings xix. 29. Jer. xliv. 29, 30. are all examples of a future event given as a sign or token of something else which is also future. The birth of Isaiah's son was indeed typical of Him whose name he was (at first) appointed to bear, viz. Immanuel, (even as Oshea the son of Nun had his name changed to Jehoshua, the same with Jesus, of whom he was an eminent type.) Hence the prophet in the ninth chapter, breaks forth into a strain of exultation,—'To us a child is born;' after which follows denunciations against Rezin and the kingdom of Israel, which are succeeded by declarations that when Assyria had completed the appointed chastisement upon Judah and Jerusalem, that empire should be destroyed. The whole of the tenth chapter is a very remarkable prophecy, and probably delivered about the time of Sennacherib's invasion.

"But still it will be urged that St. Matthew, when relating the miraculous conception of our Lord, says, 'Now all this was done that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet,' &c. To this it may readily be answered that what was spoken by the prophet was indeed now fulfilled in a higher, more important, and also in a more literal sense, than the primary fulfilment could afford, which derived all its value from its connexion with this event, to which it ultimately referred.

"In like manner, the prophecy of Isaiah contained in the second Chapter, received a complete fulfilment in our Saviour's honouring Capernaum with His residence, and preaching throughout Galilee; though there appears reason to interpret the passage as having a primary respect to the reformation wrought by Hezekiah, and which, at the eve of the dissolution of the kingdom of Israel by the captivity of the ten tribes, extended to the tribes of Asher and Zebulon, and many of the inhabitants of Ephraim and Manasseh, who were hereby stirred up to destroy idolatry in their country. See 2 Chron. xxxi. 1. And without doubt the great deliverance wrought afterwards for Judah by the miraculous destruction of Sennacherib's army, and the recovery of Hezekiah in so critical a conjuncture from a sickness which had been declared to be unto death, contributed not a little to revive the fear of God in that part of Israel which, through their defection from the house of David, had grievously departed from the temple and worship of the true God; and as Galilee lay contiguous to countries inhabited by Gentiles, they had probably sunk deeper into idolatry than the southern part of Israel.

"In several passages of St. Matthew's Gospel our translation conveys the idea of things being done in order to fulfil certain prophecies: but I apprehend that if the words ἵνα καὶ ὅπως were rendered as simply denoting the event, so that, and thus was fulfilled, the sense would be much clearer. For it is obvious that our Lord did not speak in parables or ride into Jerusalem previous to his last pass-over, simply for the purpose of fulfilling the predictions recorded, but also from other motives: and in chap. ii. the Evangelist only remarks that the circumstance of our Lord's return from Egypt corresponded with the prophet Hosea's relation of that part of the history of the Israelites. So in the twenty-third verse Joseph dwelt at Nazareth because he was directed so to do by God Himself; and the sacred historian having respect to the effect afterwards produced, (see John vii. 41, 42, 52.) remarks that this abode in Nazareth was a means of fulfilling those predictions of the prophets which indicate the contempt and neglect with which by many the Messiah should be treated. Galilee was considered by the inhabitants of Judea as a degraded place, chiefly from its vicinity to the Gentiles; and Nazareth seems to have been proverbially contemptible; and from the account given of the spirit and conduct of the inhabitants by the evangelists, not without reason."

E. M. B.

[To my Correspondent, as well as to many learned men, there appears some difficulty in the text: but I really think this is quite done away by that mode of interpretation which I have already adopted; and as far as the miraculous conception is concerned, the whole is set in the clearest and strongest light, and the objections and cavils of the Jews, entirely destroyed.]

CHAPTER VIII.

Prediction respecting the conquest of Syria and Israel by the Assyrians, 1—4. Israel, for rejecting the gentle stream of Siloah, near Jerusalem, is threatened to be overflowed by the great river of Assyria, manifestly alluding by this strong figure to the conquests of Tiglath-pileser and Shalmaneser over that kingdom, 5—7. The invasion of the kingdom of Judah by the Assyrians under Sennacherib foretold, 8. The prophet assures the Israelites and Syrians that their hostile attempts against Judah shall be frustrated, 9, 10. Exhortation not to be afraid of the wrath of man, but to fear the displeasure of God, 11—13. Judgments which shall overtake those who put no confidence in Jehovah, 14, 15. The Prophet proceeds to warn his countrymen against idolatry, divination, and the like sinful practices, exhorting them to seek direction from the word of God, professing in a beautiful apostrophe that this was his own pious resolution. And to enforce this counsel, and strengthen their faith, he points to his children, whose symbolic names were signs or pledges of the Divine promises, 16—20. Judgments of God against the finally impenitent, 21, 22.

[a] Ch. 30. 8. Hab. 2. 2.——[b] Heb. in making speed to the spoil he hasteneth the prey, or, make speed, &c.——[c] 2 Kings 16. 10.

The prophecy of the foregoing Chapter relates directly to the kingdom of Judah only: the first part of it promises them deliverance from the united invasion of the Israelites and Syrians; the latter part from ver. 17. denounces the desolation to be brought upon the kingdom of Judah by the Assyrians. The sixth, seventh, and eighth verses of this Chapter seem to take in both the kingdoms of Israel and Judah. This people, that refuseth the waters of Siloah, may be meant of both: the Israelites despised the kingdom of Judah, which they had deserted, and now attempted to destroy; the people of Judah, from a consideration of their own weakness, and a distrust of God's promises, being reduced to despair, applied to the Assyrians for assistance against the two confederate kings. But how could it be said of Judah, that they rejoiced in Retsin and the son of Remaliah, the enemies confederated against them? If some of the people were inclined to revolt to the enemy, which however does not clearly appear from any part of the history or the prophecy, yet there was nothing like a tendency to a general defection. This therefore must be understood of Israel. The prophet denounces the Assyrian invasion, which should overwhelm the whole kingdom of Israel under Tiglath-Pileser, and Shalmaneser; and the subsequent invasion of Judah by the same power under Sennacherib, which would bring them into the most imminent danger, like a flood reaching to the neck, in which a man can but just keep his head above water. The two next verses, (9 and 10,) are addressed by the prophet, as a subject of the kingdom of Judah, to the Israelites and Syrians, and perhaps to all the enemies of God's people; assuring them that their attempts against that kingdom shall be fruitless; for that the promised Immanuel, to whom he alludes, by using his name to express the signification of it, for God is with us, shall be the defence of the house of David, and deliver the kingdom of Judah out of their hands. He then proceeds to warn the people of Judah against idolatry, divination, and the like forbidden practices; to which they were much inclined, and which would soon bring down God's judgments upon Israel. The prophecy concludes, at the sixth verse of chap. ix., with promises of blessings in future times, by the coming of the great Deliverer already pointed out by the name of Immanuel, whose person and character is set forth in terms the most ample and magnificent.

And here it may be observed that it is almost the constant practice of the prophet to connect in like manner deliverances temporal with spiritual. Thus the eleventh chapter, setting forth the kingdom of Messiah, is closely connected with the tenth, which foretels the destruction of Sennacherib. So likewise the destruction of nations enemies to God, in the thirty-fourth chapter, introduces the flourishing state of the kingdom of Christ in the thirty-fifth. And thus the chapters from xl. to xlix. inclusive, plainly relating to the deliverance from the captivity of Babylon, do in some parts plainly relate to the greater deliverance by Christ.

NOTES ON CHAP. VIII.

Verse 1. Take thee a great roll—(Take unto thee a large mirror)] The word גליון golion is not regularly formed from גלל galal, to roll, but from גלה galah; as פדיון pedion from פדה padah, כליון kelion from כלה kalah, נקיון nekion from נקה nakah, עליון elion from עלה alah, &c. the י yod supplying the place of the radical ה he. גלה galah signifies to show, to reveal; properly, as Schroëderus says, (De Vestitu Mulier. Hebr. p. 294.) to render clear and bright by rubbing; to polish. גליון gelion, therefore, according to this derivation, is not a roll or volume: but may very well signify a polished tablet of metal, such as was anciently used for a mirror. The Chaldee paraphrast renders it by לוח luach, a tablet; and the same word, though somewhat differently pointed, the Chaldee paraphrast and the Rabbins render a mirror; chap. iii. 23. The mirrors of the Israelitish women were made of brass finely polished, Exod. xxxviii. 8. from which place it likewise appears, that what they used were little hand-mirrors which they carried with them even when they assembled at the door of the tabernacle. I have a metalline mirror found in Herculaneum, which is not above three inches square. The prophet is commanded to take a mirror, or brazen polished tablet, not like these little hand-mirrors, but a large one; large enough for him to engrave upon it in deep and lasting characters, בחרט אנוש becharat enosh, with a workman's graving tool, the prophecy which he was to deliver. חרט charat in this place certainly signifies an instrument to write or engrave with: but חריט charit, the same word, only differing a little in the form, means something belonging to a lady's dress, chap. iii. 22. (where however five MSS. leave out the י yod, whereby only it differs from the word in this place;) either a crisping-pin, which might be not unlike a graving tool, as some will have it, or a purse as others infer from 2 Kings v. 23. It may therefore be called here חרט אנוש charat enosh, a workman's instrument, to distinguish it from חרט אשה charat ishah, an instrument of the same name, used by the women. In this manner he was to record the prophecy of the destruction of Damascus and Samaria by the Assyrians; the subject and sum of which prophecy is here expressed with great brevity in four words. מהר שלל חש בז maher shalal hash baz; i. e. to hasten the spoil, to take quickly the prey; which are afterwards applied as the name of the prophet's son, who was made a sign of the speedy completion of it; Maher-shalal Hash-baz; Haste-to-the-spoil, Quick-to-the-prey. And that it might be done with the greater solemnity, and to preclude all doubt of the real delivery of the prophecy before the event, he calls witnesses to attest the recording of it.

[The prophet it commanded to take a great roll, and yet four words only are to be written in it. מהר שלל חש בז Maher-shalal-hash-baz, Make haste to the spoil: Fall upon the prey. The great volume points out the Land of Judea; and the few words the small number of inhabitants, after the ten tribes were carried into captivity.

The words were to be written with a man's pen; i. e though the prophecy be given in the visions of God, yet the writing must be real; the words must be transcribed on the great roll, that they may be read and publicly consulted. Or, חרט אנוש charat enosh, the pen, or graver of the weak miserable man, may refer to the already condemned Assyrians, who, though they should be the instruments of chastening Damascus and Samaria, they themselves should shortly be overthrown. The four words may be considered as the commission given to the Assyrians to destroy and spoil the cities. Make haste to the spoil; Fall upon the prey! &c.]

Verse 4. For before the child]—[For my father and my mother, one MSS. and the Vulgate have his father and his mother.] The prophecy was accordingly accomplished within three years; when Tiglath-Pileser, king of Assyria, went up against Damascus and took it, and carried the people of it captive to Kir, and slew Retsin, and also took the Reubenites and the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Mannasseh, and carried them captive to Assyria, 2 Kings xv. 29. xvi. 9. 1 Chron. v. 26.

Verse 6. Forasmuch as this people refuseth—(Because this people have rejected)] The gentle waters of Siloah, a small fountain and brook just without Jerusalem, which supplied a pool within the city for the use of the inhabitants, is an apt emblem of the state of the kingdom and house of David, much reduced in its apparent strength, yet supported by the blessing of God; and is finely contrasted with the waters of the Euphrates, great, rapid, and impetuous; the image of the Babylonian empire, which God threatens to bring down like a mighty flood upon all these apostates of both kingdoms, as a punishment for their manifold iniquities, and their contemptuous disregard of His promises. The brook and the river are put for the kingdoms to which they belong, and the different states of which respectively they most aptly represent. Juvenal, inveighing against the corruption of Rome by the importation of Asiatic manners, says, with great elegance, that "the Orontes has been long discharging itself into the Tiber:"—

Jampridem Syrus in Tiberim defluxit Orontes.

And Virgil, to express the submission of some of the Eastern countries to the Roman arms, says,— Euphrates ibat jam mollior undis.

Æn. viii. 726.

"The waters of the Euphrates now flowed more humbly and gently."

But the happy contrast between the brook and the river gives a peculiar beauty to this passage of the prophet, with which the simple figure in the Roman poets, however beautiful, yet uncontrasted, cannot contend.

Verse 8. He shall reach even to the neck] He compares Jerusalem, says Kimchi, to the head in the human body. As when the waters come up to a man's neck, he is very near drowning; for a little increase of them would go over his head: so the king of Assyria coming up to Jerusalem was like a flood reaching to the neck; the whole country was overflowed, and the capital was in imminent danger. Accordingly the Chaldee renders reaching to the neck by reaching to Jerusalem.

Verse 9. Associate yourselves—(Know ye this)] God by His prophet plainly declares to the confederate adversaries of Judah, and bids them regard and attend to His declaration, that all their efforts shall be in vain. The present reading, רעו rêu, is subject to many difficulties: I follow that of the Septuagint, דעו dêu, γνωτε. Archbishop Secker approves this reading. דעו dêu, know ye this, is parallel and synonymous to האזינו heazinu, give ear to it, in the next line. The Septuagint have likewise very well paraphrased the conclusion of this verse: "When ye have strengthened yourselves, ye shall be broken; and though ye again strengthen yourselves, again shall ye be broken;" taking חתו chatu as meaning the same with נשברו neshaberu, ye shall be broken.

Verse 11. With a strong hand—(As taking me by the hand)] Eleven MSS. (two ancient) of Kennicott's and thirty-four of De Rossi's, and seven Editions,] read כחזקת ke-chazakath; and so Symmachus, the Syriac, and Vulgate. [Or rather, with a strong hand, that is, with a strong and powerful influence of the prophetic Spirit.]

Verse 12. Say ye not, A confederacy—(Say ye not, It is holy)] קשר kasher. Both the reading and the sense of this word are doubtful. The Septuagint manifestly read קשה kashah; for they render it by σκληρον, hard. The Syriac and Chaldee render it מרדא mereda, and מרוד merod, rebellion. How they came by this sense of the word, or what they read in their copies, is not so clear. But the worst of it is, that neither of these readings or renderings gives any clear sense in this place. For why should God forbid His faithful servants to say with the unbelieving Jews, It is hard; or, There is a rebellion; or, as our translators render it, a confederacy? And how can this be called "walking in the way of this people?" ver. 11. which usually means, following their example; joining with them in religious worship. Or what confederacy do they mean? The union of the kingdoms of Syria and Israel against Judah? That was properly a league between two independent states; not an unlawful conspiracy of one part against another in the same state; this is the meaning of the word קשר kasher. For want of any satisfactory interpretation of this place that I can meet with, I adopt a conjecture of Archbishop Secker, which he proposes with great diffidence; and even seems immediately to give up, as being destitute of any authority to support it. I will give it in his own words:—"Videri potest ex cap. v. 16. et hujus cap. 13, 14, 19. legendum קרש kadesh vel קריש kedosh, eadem sententia, qua אלהינו eloheinu, Hos. xiv. 3. Sed nihil necesse est. Vide enim Jer. xi. 9. Ezek. xxii. 25. Optimè tamen sic responderent huic versiculo versiculi 13, 14." The passages of Jeremiah and Ezekiel above referred to seem to me not at all to clear up the sense of the word קשר kasher in this place. But the context greatly favours the conjecture here given, and makes it highly probable: "Walk not in the way of this people; call not their idols holy, nor fear ye the object of their fear:" (that is, the σεβασματα, or gods of the idolaters; for so fear here signifies, to wit, the things feared. So God is called 'The Fear of Isaac,' Gen. xxxi. 42. 53.) "but look up to JEHOVAH as your Holy One; and let Him be your fear, and let Him be your dread; and He shall be a holy Refuge unto you." Here there is a harmony and consistency running through the whole sentence; and the latter part naturally arises out of the former, and answers to it. Observe that the difference between קשר kasher and קרש kadosh is chiefly in the transposition of the two last letters; for the letters ר resh and ד daleth are hardly distinguishable in some copies, printed as well as MS.; so that the mistake, in respect of the letters themselves, is a very easy and a very common one.

Verse 14. And he shall be for a sanctuary—(And he shall be unto you a sanctuary)] The word לכם lacem, unto you, absolutely necessary as I conceive to the sense, is lost in this place: it is preserved by the Vulgate, "et erit vobis in sanctificationem." The Septuagint have it in the singular number; εσται σοι εις ἁγιασμον, it shall be to THEE. Or else instead of מקרש mikadosh, a sanctuary, we must read מוקש mokesh, a snare, which would then be repeated without any propriety or elegance, at the end of the verse. The Chaldee reads instead of it משפט mishpat, judgment; for he renders it by פורען poran, which word frequently answers to כשפט mishpat in his paraphrase. One MS. has instead of מקדש ולאבן mikedesh ve-laben, להם לאבן lahem le-aben; which clears the sense and construction. But the reading of the Vulgate is I think the best remedy to this difficulty; and is in some degree authorised by להם lahem, the reading of the MS above-mentioned.

Verse 16. Among my disciples.] בלמדי be-limedey. "The Septuagint render it του μη μαθειν. Bishop Chandler, Defence of Christianity, p. 308. thinks they read מלמד melamed, that it be not understood; and approves this reading." Abp. Secker.

Verse 18. LORD of hosts.] One MS. reads אלהי צבאות elohai tsebaoth, God of hosts.

Verse 19. Should not a people seek—(Should they seek)] After ידרש yedrosh, the Septuagint, repeating the word, read היידרש he-yedrosh: Ουκ εθνος προς Θεον αυτου εκζητησουσι; τι εκζητησουσι περι των ζωντων τους νεκρους; Should not a nation seek unto its God? Why should you seek unto the dead concerning the living? and this repetition of the verb seems necessary to the sense; and, as Procopius on the place observes, it strongly expresses the prophet's indignation at their folly.

Verse 20. To the law, and to the testimony—(Unto the command, and unto the testimony)] "Is not תעודה ta-âvedeh here the attested prophecy, ver. 1—4.? and perhaps תורה torah the command? ver. 11—15. for it means sometimes a particular, and even a human command, see Prov. vi. 20. and vii. 1, 2. where it is ordered to be hid, that is, secretly kept." Abp. Secker. So Deschamps, in his translation, or rather paraphrase, understands it: Tenons nous à l'instrument authentique, mis en dépôt par ordre du Seigneur, "Let us stick to the authentic instrument laid up by the command of the Lord." If this be right, the sixteenth verse must be understood in the same manner.

Because there is no light in them—(In which there is no obscurity)] שחר shacher, as an adjective, frequently signifies dark, obscure; and the noun שחר shecher, signifies darkness, gloominess, Joel ii. 2., if we may judge by the context:—

> "A day of darkness and obscurity;
> Of cloud, and of thick vapour;
> As the gloom spread upon the mountains:
> A people mighty and numerous;"

Where the gloom, (שחר shacher) seems to be the same with the cloud and thick vapour, mentioned in the line preceding. See Lam. iv. 8. and Job. xxx. 30. See this meaning of the word שחר shacher well supported in Christ. Muller. Sat. Observat. Phil. p. 53. Lugd. Bat. 1752. The morning seems to be an idea wholly incongruous in the passage of Joel: and in this of Isaiah the words in which there is no morning, (for so it ought to be rendered if שחר shacher in this place signifies, according to its usual sense, morning) seem to give no meaning at all. It is because there is no light in them, says our translation. If there be any sense in these words, it is not the sense of the original; which cannot justly be so translated. Qui n'a rien d'obscur, "which has no obscurity." Deschamps. The reading of the Septuagint and Syriac שחד shachad, gift, affords no assistance towards the clearing up of any this difficult place. [R. D. Kimchi says this was the form of an oath:—"By the law and by the testimony such and such things are so." Now if they had sworn this falsely, it is because there is no light, no illumination, (שחר shacher) no scruple of conscience in them.]

Verse 21. Hardly bestead—(Distressed)] Instead of נקשה nekasheh, distressed, the Vulgate, Chaldee, and Symmachus, manifestly read נכשל nekashel, stumbling, tottering through weakness, ready to fall; a sense which suits very well with the place.

And look upward—(And he shall cast his eyes upward)]

The learned professor Michaelis, treating of this place, (Not in de Sacr. Poes. Hebr. Præl. ix.) refers to a passage in the Koran, which is similar to it. As it is a very celebrated passage, and on many accounts remarkable, I shall give it here at large, with the same author's farther remarks upon it in another place of his writings. It must be noted here that the learned professor renders נבט nebet in this and the parallel place, chap. v. 30. which I translate he looketh, by it thundereth, from Schultens, Orig. Ling. Hebr. Lib. i. cap. 2., of the justness of which rendering I much doubt. This brings the image of Isaiah more near in one circumstance to that of Mohammed, than it appears to be in my translation:

"Labid, contemparary with Mohammed, the last of the seven Arabian poets who had the honour of having their poems, one of each, hung up in the entrance of the temple of Mecca, struck with the sublimity of a passage in the Koran, became a convert to Mohammedism; for he concluded that no man could write in such a manner unless he were divinely inspired.

"One must have a curiosity to examine a passage which had so great an effect upon Labid. It is, I must own, the finest that I know in the whole Koran: but I scarce think it will have a second time the like effect, so as to tempt any one of my readers to submit to circumcision. It is in the second chapter; where he is speaking of certain apostates from the faith. 'They are like,' saith he, 'to a man who kindleth a light. As soon as it begins to shine, God takes from them the light, and leaves them in darkness that they see nothing. They are deaf, dumb, and blind; and return not into the right way. Or they fare, as when a cloud, full of darkness, thunder, and lightning, covers the heaven. When it bursteth, they stop their ears with their fingers, with deadly fear; and God hath the unbelievers in His power. The lightning almost robbeth them of their eyes: as often as it flasheth they go on by its light; and when it vanisheth in darkness they stand still. If God pleased, they would retain neither hearing nor sight.' That the thought is beautiful no one will deny; and Labid, who had probably a mind to flatter Mohammed, was lucky in finding a passage in the Koran so little abounding in poetical beauties, to which his conversion might with any propriety be ascribed. It was well that he went no further; otherwise his taste for poetry might have made him again an infidel." Michaelis, Erpenii Arabische Grammatik abgekurzt, Vorrede, s. 32.

CHAPTER IX.

This Chapter contains an illustrious prophecy of the Messiah. He is represented under the glorious figure of the sun, or light, rising on a benighted world, and diffusing joy and gladness wherever he sheds his beams, 1—3. His conquests are astonishing and miraculous, as in the day of Midian; and the peace which they procure is to be permanent, as denoted by the burning of all the implements of war, 4, 5. The person and character of this great Deliverer are then set forth in the most magnificent terms which the language of mankind could furnish, 6. The extent of His kingdom is declared to be universal, and the duration of it eternal, 7. The The Prophet foretels most awful calamities which were ready to fall upon the Israelites on account of their manifold impieties, 8—21.

Verse 1. Dimness—(Accumulated darkness)] Either מנרחה mindechah, fem. to agree with אפלה apelach; or אפל המנדח apel hamindach, alluding perhaps to the palpable Egyptian darkness, Exod. x. 21.

The land of Zebulun] Zebulun, Naphtali, Manasseh, that is, the country of Galilee all round the sea of Gennesareth, were the parts that principally suffered in the first Assyrian invasion under Tiglath Pileser; see 2 Kings xv. 29. 1 Chron. v. 26. And they were the first that enjoyed the blessing of Christ's preaching the Gospel, and exhibiting His miraculous works among them. See Mede's Works, p. 101, and 457. [This, which makes the twenty-third verse of Chap. viii. in the Hebrew, is the first verse in Chap. ix. in our Authorised Version. Bishop Lowth follows the division in the Hebrew.]

The joy in harvest] כשמחת בקציר ke-shimchath be-katsir. For בקציר be-katsir one MS. of Kennicott's and one of De Rossi's have קציר katsir, and another הקציר ha-katsir, "the harvest;" one of which seems to be the true reading, as the noun preceding is in regimine.

Verse 5. Every battle of the warrior—(The greaves of the armed warrior)] סאון סאן seon soen. This word, occurring only in this place, is of very doubtful signification. Schindler fairly tells us that we may guess at it by the context. The Jews have explained it, by guess I believe, as signifying battle, conflict: the Vulgate renders it violenta prædatio. But it seems as if something was rather meant, which was capable of becoming fuel for the fire, together with the garments mentioned in the same sentence. In Syriac the word, as a noun, signifies a shoe, or a sandal, as a learned friend suggested to me some years ago. See Luke xv. 22. Acts xii. 8. I take it therefore to mean that part of the armour which covered the legs and feet; and I would render the two words in Latin by caliga caligati. The burning of heaps of armour, gathered from the field of battle, as an offering made to the god supposed to be the giver of victory, was a custom that prevailed among some heathen nations; and the Romans used it as an emblem of peace, which perfectly well suits with the design of the prophet in this place. A medal struck by Vespasian on finishing his wars both at home and abroad, represents the goddess Peace holding an olive branch in one hand, and with a lighted torch in the other, setting fire to a heap of armour. Virgil mentions the custom:—

"Cum primam aciem Præneste sub ipsa Stravi, scutorumque incendi victor acervos."
Æn. lib. viii. 561.

"Would heaven (said he) my strength and youth recal,
Such as I was beneath Præneste's wall—
Then when I made the foremost foes retire,
And set whole heaps of conquered shields on fire."
DRYDEN.

See Addison on Medals, Series ii. 18. And there are notices of some such practice among the Israelites, and other nations of the most early times. God promises to Joshua victory over the kings of Canaan. "To-morrow I well deliver them up all slain before Israel: thou shalt hough their horses, and burn their chariots with fire," Josh. xi. 6. See also Nahum ii. 13. And the Psalmist employs this image to express complete victory, and a perfect establishment of peace:—

"He maketh wars to cease, even to the end of the land:
He breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear in sunder;
And burneth the chariots in the fire." Psa. xlvi. 9.

עגלות îgeloth, properly plaustra, the baggage-wagons: which however the Septuagint and Vulgate render scuta, "shields;" and the Chaldee, "round shields," to show the propriety of that sense of the word from the etymology; which, if admitted, makes the image the same with that used by the Romans.

Ezekiel, chap. xxxix. 8—10. in his bold manner, has carried this image to a degree of amplification, which, I think, hardly any other of the Hebrew poets would have attempted. He describes the burning of the arms of the enemy, in consequence of the complete victory to be obtained by the Israelites over Gog and Magog:—

"Behold, it is come to pass, and it is done,
Saith the Lord JEHOVAH.
This is the day of which I spoke:
And the inhabitants of the cities of Israel shall go forth;
And shall set on fire the armour, and the shield,
And the buckler, and the bow, and the arrows,
And the clubs, and the lances;
And they shall set them on fire for seven years.
And they shall not bear wood from the field;
Neither shall they hew from the forest:
For of the armour shall they make their fires;
And they shall spoil their spoilers,
And they shall plunder their plunderers."

[Rab. D. Kimchi on this verse says, this refers simply to the destruction of the Assyrians. Other battles are fought man against man, and spear against spear; and the garments are rolled in blood through the wounds given and received:—but this was with burning, for the angel of the Lord smote them by night, and there was neither sword nor violent commotion,

Verse 6. The government shall be upon his shoulder] That is, the ensign of government; the sceptre, the sword, the key, or the like, which was borne upon, or hung from the shoulder. See Note on Chap. xxii. 22.

[And his name shall be called—אל גבור El gibbor, the prevailing or conquering God.

The everlasting Father—(The Father of the everlasting age)—Or, אבי עד abi âd the Father of eternity. The Septuagint have μεγαλης βουλης Αγγελος, the Messenger of the Great Counsel. But instead of אבי עד abi âd, a MS. of De Rossi has אבעזר abezer, the helping father; evidently the corruption of some Jew, who did not likesuch an evidence in favour of the Christian Messiah.

Prince of Peace—שר שלום Sar Shalom—The Prince of prosperity—the Giver of all blessings.

A MS. of the thirteenth century in Kennicott's Collection has a remarkable addition here. "He shall be a stumbling block; המכשלה the government is on His shoulder." This reading is no where else acknowledged, as far as I know.

Verse 7. Of the increase] In the common Hebrew Bibles, and in many MSS., this word is written with the close or final ם לרבה But in twelve of Kennicott's MSS., and twelve of De Rossi's, it is written with the open מ mem: but here it is supposed to contain mysteries, viz. that Jerusalem shall be shut up, closed, and confined, till the days of the Messiah.

This is an illustrious prophecy of the incarnation of Christ; with an enumeration of those characters in which He stands most nearly related to mankind as their Saviour: and of others, by which His infinite majesty and Godhead are shown. He shall appear as a child, born of a woman, born as a Jew, under the Law, but not in the way of ordinary generation. He is a Son given—the human nature, in which the fulness of the Godhead was to dwell, being produced by the creative energy of the Holy Ghost in the womb of the Virgin. See Matt. i. 20, 21, 23, 25. and Luke i. 35. and Isa. vii. 14. and the Notes on those passages. As being God manifested in the flesh, He was wonderful in His conception, birth, preaching, miracles, sufferings, death, resurrection, and ascension; wonderful in His Person, and wonderful in His working. He is the Counsellor that expounds the Law; shows its origin, nature, and claims; instructs, pleads for the guilty; and ever appears in the presence of God for men. He is the mighty God: God essentially and efficiently prevailing against His enemies, and destroying our's. He is the Father of eternity—the Origin of all being, and the Cause of the existence, (and particularly the Father) of the spirits of all flesh. The Prince of peace,—not only the Author of peace, and the Dispenser of peace; but also He that rules by peace, whose rule tends always to perfection, and produces prosperity. Of the increase of his government—This Prince has a government,—for He has all power both in heaven and in earth; and His government increases, and is daily more and more extended, and will continue till all things are put under His feet. His kingdom is ordered,—every act of government regulated according to wisdom and goodness; is established so securely as not to be overthrown; and administered in judgment and justice, so as to manifest His wisdom, righteousness, goodness, and truth. Reader, such is that Jesus who came into the world to save sinners! Trust in HIM!]

Chap. ix. 8.—chap. x. 4. This whole passage reduced to its proper and entire form, and healed of the dislocation which it suffers by the absurd division of the chapters, makes a distinct prophecy, and a just poem; remarkable for the regularity of its disposition, and the elegance of its plan. It has no relation to the preceding or the following prophecy; though the parts, violently torn asunder, have been, on the one side and the other, patched on to them. Those relate principally to the kingdom of Judah; this is addressed exclusively to the kingdom of Israel. The subject of it is a denunciation of vengeance awaiting their crimes. It is divided into four parts, each threatening the particular punishment of some grievous offence; of their pride; of their perseverance in their vices; of their impiety; and of their injustice. To which is added a general denunciation of a further reserve of Divine wrath, contained in a distich, before used by the prophet on a like occasion, chap. v. 25. and here repeated after each part. This makes the intercalary verse of the poem; or, as we call it, the burden of the song.

Verse 8. Lord—(JEHOVAH.)] For אדני adonai, thirty MSS. of Kennicott, and many of De Rossi's, and three editions, read יהוה yehovah.

Verse 9. Pride and stoutness of heart—(Carry themselves haughtily)] וידעו va-yadêu, and they shall know: so ours and the Versions in general. But what is it that they shall know? The verb stands destitute of its object; and the sense is imperfect. The Chaldee is the only one, as far as I can find, that expresses it otherwise. He renders the verb in this place by ואתרברבו ve-ethrabrabu, they exalt themselves, or carry themselves haughtily; the same word by which he renders נבהו nebahu, chap. iii. 16. He seems therefore in this place to have read ויגבהו va-yigbehu; which agrees perfectly well with what follows, and clears up the difficulty. Archbishop Secker conjectured וידברו va-yedaberu, referring it to לאמר lemor in the next verse; which shows, that he was not satisfied with the present reading. Houbigant reads וירעו va-yereu, et pravi facti sunt, they are become wicked, which is found in a MS.: but I prefer the reading of the Chaldee, which suits much better with the context.

[Houbigant approves of this reading: but it is utterly unsupported by any evidence from antiquity: it is a mere mistake of ר resh for ד daleth; and I am surprised that it should be favoured by Houbigant.]

Verse 10. The bricks] "The eastern bricks," says Sir John Chardin, see Harmer Observ. I. p. 176. "are only clay well moistened with water, and mixed with straw, and dried in the sun." So that their walls are commonly no better than our mud walls; See Maundrell, p. 124. That straw was a necessary part in the composition of this sort of bricks, to make the parts of the clay adhere together, appears from Exod. chap. v. These bricks are properly opposed to hewn stone, so greatly superior in beauty and durableness. The sycamores, which, as Jerom on the place says, are timber of little worth, with equal propriety are opposed to the cedars. "As the grain and texture of the sycamore is remarkably coarse and spongy, it could therefore stand in no competition at all (as it is observed, Isa. ix. 10.) with the cedar, for beauty and ornament." Shaw, Supplement to Travels, p. 96. We meet with the same opposition of cedars to sycamores, 1 Kings x. 27. where Solomon is said to have made silver as the stones, and cedars as the sycamores in the vale for abundance. By this mashal, or figurative and sententious speech, they boast, that they shall easily be able to repair their present losses, suffered perhaps by the first Assyrian invasion under Tiglath Pileser; and to bring their affairs to a more flourishing condition than ever.

Verse 11. The adversaries of Rezin against him—(The princes of Retsin against him)] For צרי tsarey, enemies, Houbigant by conjecture reads שרי sarey, princes; which is confirmed by thirty of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. (two ancient,) [one of my own, ancient;] and nine more have צ tsaddi, upon a rasure, and therefore had probably at first שרי sarey. The princes of Retsin, the late ally of Israel; that is, the Syrians, expressly named in the next verse, shall now be excited against Israel.

The Septuagint in this place gives us another variation; for רצין Retsin, they read הר ציון har tsion, ορος Σιων, mount Sion; of which this may be the sense: but JEHOVAH shall set up the adversaries of mount Sion against him, (i. e. against Israel) and will strengthen his enemies together: the Syrians—the Philistines—who are called the adversaries of mount Sion. See Simonis Lex. in voce סכך sacak.

Verse 12. With open mouth—(On every side)] בכל פה becol peh, in every corner; in every part of their country, pursuing them to the remotest extremities, and the most retired parts. So the Chaldee בכל אתר becol atar, in every place.

Verse 14. In one day] Thirteen MSS. of Kennicott and De Rossi read ביום beyom; and another has a rasure in the place of the letter ב beth.

18 For wickedness [e] burneth as the fire: it shall devour the briers and thorns, and shall kindle in the thickets of the forest, and they shall mount up like the lifting up of smoke.

Verse 17. The Lord—(Jehovah)] For אדני adonai, a great number of MSS. read יהוה yehovah.

Verse 18. For wickedness] Wickedness rageth like a fire, destroying and laying waste the nation: but it shall be its own destruction, by bringing down the fire of God's wrath, which shall burn up the briers and the thorns; that is, the wicked themselves. Briers and thorns are an image frequently applied in Scripture, when set on fire, to the rage of the wicked; violent, yet impotent, and of no long continuance. "They are extinct as the fire of thorns," Psa. cxviii. 12. To the wicked themselves, as useless and unprofitable, proper objects of God's wrath, to be burned up, or driven away by the wind. "As thorns cut up they shall be consumed in the fire," Isa. xxxiii. 12. Both these ideas seem to be joined in Psa. lviii. 9.

> "Before your pots shall feel the thorn,
> As well the green as the dry, the tempest shall bear them away."

The green and the dry is a proverbial expression, meaning all sorts of them, good and bad, great and small, &c. So Ezekiel: "Behold, I will kindle a fire, and it shall devour every green tree, and every dry tree," chap. xx. 47. D'Herbelot quotes a Persian poet describing a pestilence under the image of a conflagration: "This was a lightning that, falling upon a forest, consumed there the green wood with the dry." See Harmer's Observations, Vol. ii. p. 187.

Verse 20. The flesh of his own arm—(The flesh of his neighbour)] "Του βραχιονος του αδελφου αυτου, the Septuagint, Alexand. Duplex versio, quarum altera legit רעי rêi quæ vox extat Jer. vi. 21. Nam רע râ, αδελφος, Gen. xliii. 33. Recte, ni fallor." Secker. I add to this excellent remark, that the Chaldee manifestly reads רעו râo, not זרע zerâo; for he renders it by קריבה keribiah, his neighbour. And Jeremiah has the very same expression: ואיש בשר רעהו יאכלו veish baser rêcho yokelu, "And every one shall eat the flesh of his neighbour," chap. xix. 9. This observation, I think, gives the true reading and sense of this place: and the context strongly confirms it, by explaining the general idea by particular instances, in the following verse,—"Every man shall devour the flesh of his neighbour;" that is, they shall harass and destroy one another. "Manasseh shall destroy Ephraim, and Ephraim Manasseh;" which two tribes were most closely connected both in blood and situation as brothers and neighbours; "and both of them in the midst of their own dissensions shall agree in preying upon Judah." The common reading, "shall devour the flesh of his own arm," in connexion with what follows, seems to make either an inconsistency, or an anticlimax; whereas by this correction the following verse becomes an elegant illustration of the foregoing.

CHAPTER X.

God's judgments against oppressive rulers, 1—4. The Prophet foretels the invasion of Sennacherib, and the destruction of his army. That mighty monarch is represented as a rod in the hand of God to correct His people for their sins; and his ambitious purposes, contrary to his own intentions, are made subservient to the great designs of Providence, 5—11. Having accomplished this work, the Almighty takes account of his impious vauntings, 12—14; and threatens utter destruction to the small and great of his army, represented by the thorns, and the glory of the forest, 15—19. This leads the prophet to comfort his countrymen with the promise of this signal interposition of God in their favour, 20—27. Brief description of the march of Sennacherib towards Jerusalem, and of the alarm and terror which he spread every where as he hastened forward, 28—32. The spirit and rapidity of the description is admirably suited to the subject. The affrighted people are seen fleeing, and the eager invader pursuing. The cries of one city are heard by those of another, and groan swiftly succeeds to groan, till at length the rod is lifted over the last citadel. In this critical situation, however, the promise of a Divine interposition is seasonably renewed. The scene instantly changes; the uplifted arm of this mighty conqueror is at once arrested and laid low by the hand of heaven; the forest of Lebanon, (a figure by which the immense Assyrian host is elegantly pointed out) is hewn down by the axe of the Divine vengeance; and the mind is equally pleased with the equity of the judgment, and the beauty and majesty of the description, 33, 34.

NOTES ON CHAP. X.

[Verse 2. My people—Instead of עמי âmmi, my people, many MSS. and one of my own, ancient, read עמו âmmo, his people. But this is manifestly a corruption.]

Verse 4. Without me] That is, without my aid: they shall be taken captive even by the captives, and shall be subdued even by the vanquished. "The י yod, in בלתי belti, is a pronoun, as in Hos. xiii. 4." Kimchi on the place. [One MS. has לבלתי lebilti.

[As the people had hitherto lived without God in worship and obedience; so they should now be without His help, and should perish in their transgressions.]

Verse 5. O Assyrian—(Ho to the Assyrian)] Here begins a new and distinct prophecy; continued to the end of the twelfth Chapter: and it appears from ver. 9—11. of this chapter, that this prophecy was delivered after the taking of Samaria by Shalmaneser; which was in the sixth year of the reign of Hezekiah: and as the former part of it foretels the invasion of Sennacherib, and the destruction of his army, which makes the whole subject of this Chapter, it must have been delivered before the fourteenth of the same reign.

The staff in their hand—(The staff in whose hand)] The word הוא hu, the staff itself, in this place seems to embarrass the sentence. I omit it on the authority of the Alexandrine copy of the Septuagint: nine MSS. (two ancient,) [and one of my own, ancient] for ומטה הוא umittah hu, read מטהו mittaho, his staff. Archbishop Secker was not satisfied with the present reading. He proposes another method of clearing up the sense, by reading ביום beyom, instead of בירם beyadem: "And he is a staff in the day of mine indignation."

xiii. 19. sed confer Prov. i. 31.; xxxi. 16, 31." SECKER. The Chaldee renders the word פרי peri, by עובדי ôbedi, works; which seems to be the true sense; and I have followed it.

Verse 13. Like a valiant man—(Strongly seated) Twelve MSS. agree with the Keri in reading כביר kebir, without the א aleph. And Sal. ben Melec and Kimchi thus explain it:—"them who dwelled in a great and strong place I have brought down to the ground."

Verse 15. No wood—(Its master)] I have here given the meaning, without attempting to keep to the expression of the original, לא עץ lo êts, the no-wood; that which is not wood like itself, but of a quite different and superior nature. The Hebrews have a peculiar way of joining the negative particle לא lo to a noun, to signify in a strong manner a total negation of the thing expressed by the noun.

"How hast thou given help (ללא כח le-lo coach) to the no-strength?
And saved the arm (לא עז lo âz) of the no-power?
How hast thou given counsel (ללא חכמה le-lo chocmah) to the no-wisdom?" Job xxvi. 2, 3.

That is, to the man totally deprived of strength, power, and wisdom.

"Ye that rejoice (ללא דבר le-lo debar) in no-thing." Amos vi. 13.

That is, in your fancied strength, which is none at all, a mere nonentity.

"For I am God, (ולא איש ve-lo ish) and no-man;
The Holy One in the midst of thee, yet do not frequent cities." Hos. xi. 9.

"And the Assyrian shall fall by a sword (לא איש lo ish) of no-man;
And a sword of (לא אדם lo adam) no-mortal, shall devour him." Isa. xxxi. 8.

"Wherefore do ye weigh out your silver (כלוא לחם be-lo lechem) for the no-bread." Isa. lv. 2.

So here לא עץ lo êts means him who is far from being an inert piece of wood, but is an animated and active being; not an instrument, but an agent.

Verse 16. The Lord—(JEHOVAH)] For אדני adonai, fifty-two MSS., eleven Editions, [and two of my own, ancient,] read יהוה yehovah, as in other cases.

And under his glory] That is, all that he could boast of as great and strong in his army, (Sal. ben Melec. in loc.) expressed afterwards, ver. 18, by the glory of his forest, and of his fruitful field.

Verse 17. And it shall burn and devour his thorns—(And he shall burn and consume his thorn)] The briers and thorns are the common people; the glory of His forest are the nobles and those of highest rank and importance. See note on chap. ix. 17. and compare Ezek. xx. 47. The fire of God's wrath shall destroy them both great and small, it shall consume them from the soul to the flesh; a proverbial expression; soul and body, as we say; it shall consume them entirely and altogether; and the few that escape shall be looked upon as having escaped from the most imminent danger; "as a firebrand plucked out of the fire," Amos iv. 11. ὡς διὰ πυρος, so as by fire, 1 Cor. iii. 15. as a man when a house is burning is forced to make his escape by running through the midst of the fire.

[Verse 21. The remnant shall return—unto the mighty God] אל גבור el gibbor, the mighty or conquering God; the Messiah, the same Person mentioned in ver. 6. of the preceding chapter.]

Verse 22. For though thy people Israel] I have endeavoured to keep to the letter of the Text as nearly as I can in this obscure passage: but it is remarkable that neither the Septuagint, nor St. Paul, Rom. ix. 28. who (except in a few words of no great importance) follows them nearly in this place, nor any one of the ancient Versions, take any notice of the word שוטף shotaph, overflowing; which seems to give an idea not easily reconcileable with those with which it is here joined. I. S. Mœrlius (Schol. Philolog. ad Selecta S. Cod. loca) conjectures that the two last letters of this word are by mistake transposed, and that the true reading is שפט shophet, judging, with strict justice. The Septuagint might think this sufficiently expressed by εν δικαιοσυνη, in righteousness. One MS., with St. Paul and Septuagint Alex. omits בו bo in ver. 22.; sixty-nine of Kennicott's and seventeen of De Rossi's MSS. and eight Editions, omit כל col in ver. 23; and so St. Paul, Rom. ix. 28.

The learned Dr. Bagot, Dean of Christ Church, Oxford, in some observations on this place which he has been so kind as to communicate to me, and which will appear in their proper light when he himself shall give them to the public, renders the word כלין kelion by accomplishment, and makes it refer to the predictions of Moses; the blessing and the curse which he laid before the people; both conditional, and depending on their future conduct. They had by their disobedience incurred those judgments which were now to be fully executed upon them. His translation is,—The accomplishment determined overflows with justice; for it is accomplished, and that which is determined the Lord God of hosts doeth in the midst of the land." [Some think that the words might be paraphrased thus:—The determined destruction of the Jews shall overflow with righteousness (צדקה tsedekah) justification, the consequence of the Gospel of Christ being preached and believed on in the world. After the destruction of Jerusalem this word or doctrine of the Lord had free course, did run,—and was glorified.]

Verse 24. After the manner of Egypt.]—In the way of Egypt.)] I think there is a designed ambiguity in these words. Sennacherib, soon after his return from his Egyptian expedition, which, I imagine, took him up three years, invested Jerusalem He is represented by the prophet as lifting up his rod in his march from Egypt, and threatening the people of God, as Pharaoh and the Egyptians had done when they pursued them to the Red Sea. But God in his turn will lift up His rod over the sea, as he did at that time, in the way, or after the manner of Egypt: and as Senacherib has imitated the Egyptians in his threats, and came full of rage against them from the same quarter; so God will act over again the same part that he had taken formerly in Egypt, and overthrow their enemies in as signal a manner. It was all to be, both the attack and the deliverance, ברך bederec, or כדרך kederec, as a MS. has it in each place, in the way, or after the manner, of Egypt.

Verse 25. The indignation—(Mine indignation)] Indignatio mea, Vulg. η οργη, Sept, Μου η οργη η κατα σου, MS. Pachom. Μου η οργη κατα σου. MS. I. D. II. So that זעמי zaâmi, or הועם hazaâm, as one MS. has it, seems to be the true reading.

Verse 26. And as his rod was upon the sea—(And like his rod which he lifted up over the sea)] The Jewish interpreters suppose here an ellipsis of כ ke, the particle of similitude, before מטהו metteho, to be supplied from the line above: so that here are two similitudes, one comparing the

> "And it shall come to pass in that day,

> And his yoke off thy neck:
> Yea, the yoke shall perish from off your shoulders."

on which he gives us the following note:] I follow here the Septuagint, who for מפני שמן mipeney shomen read משכמיכם mishecemeycem, απο των ωμων ὑμων, from your shoulders, not being able to make any good sense out of the present reading. I will add here the marginal conjectures of Archbishop Secker, who appears like all others to have been at a loss for a probable interpretation of the Text as it now stands. Vel potest legi* מפני שמי mipeni shami."

Verse 28. He is come to Aiath] A description of the march of Sennacherib's army approaching Jerusalem in order to invest it, and of the terror and confusion spreading and increasing through the several places as he advanced; expressed with great brevity, but finely diversified. The places here mentioned are all in the neighbourhood of Jerusalem; from Ai northward, to Nob westward of it; from which last place he might probably have a prospect of Mount Sion. Anathoth was within three Roman miles of Jerusalem, according to Eusebius, Jerom, and Josephus. Onomast. Loc. Hebr. et Antiq. Jud. x. 7, 3. Nob probably still nearer. And it should seem from this passage of Isaiah that Sennacherib's army was destroyed near the latter of these places. In coming out of Egypt, he might perhaps join the rest of his army at Ashdod, after the taking of that place, which happened about that time, (see chap. xx.) and march from thence near the coast by Lachish and Libnah, which lay in his way from south to north, and both which he invested till he came to the northwest of Jerusalem, crossing over to the north of it, perhaps by Joppa and Lydda; or still more north through the plain of Esdraelon.

Verse 29. They are gone over the passage—(They have passed the strait)] The strait here mentioned is that of Michmas, a very narrow passage between two sharp hills or rocks, see 1 Sam. xiv. 4, 5. where a great army might have been opposed with advantage by a very inferior force. The author of the book of Judith might perhaps mean this pass, at least among others: "Charging them to keep the passages of the hill country: for by them there was an entrance into Judea: and it was easy to stop them that would come up; because the passage was strait for two men at the most," Judith iv. 7. The enemies having passed the strait without opposition, shows that all thoughts of making a stand in the open country were given up, and that their only resource was in the strength of the city.

Their lodging] The sense seems necessarily to require, that we read למו lamo, instead of לנו lanu. These two words are in other places mistaken one for the other. Thus Isa. xliv. 7. for למו lamo, read לנו lanu, with the Chaldee; and in the same manner, Psa. lxiv. 6. with the Syriac, and Psa. lxxx. 7. on the authority of the Septuagint and Syriac, besides the necessity of the sense.

Verse 30. Cause it to be heard unto Laish, O poor Anathoth—(Hearken unto her, O Laish; answer her O Anathoth!)] I follow in this the Syriac Version. The prophet plainly alludes to the name of the place, and with a peculiar propriety, if it had its name from its remarkable echo. "ענתות anathoth, responsiones: eadem ratio nominis, quæ in בית ענת beith anath, locus echûs; nam hodienum ejus rudera ostenduntur in valle, scil. in medio montium, ut referunt Robertus in Itiner. p. 70. et Monconnysius, p. 301." *Simonis Onomasticon Vet. NOTES ON CHAP. XI.

The prophet had described the destruction of the Assyrian army under the image of a mighty forest, consisting of flourishing trees, growing thick together, and of a great height; of Lebanon itself crowned with lofty cedars, but cut down and laid level with the ground by the axe wielded by the hand of some powerful and illustrious agent. In opposition to this image he represents the great Person, who makes the subject of this Chapter, as a slender twig, shooting out from the trunk of an old tree, cut down, lopped to the very root, and decayed: which tender plant, so weak in appearance, should nevertheless become fruitful and prosper. This contrast shows plainly the connexion between this and the preceding chapter; which is moreover expressed by the connecting particle: and we have here a remarkable instance of that method so common with the prophets and particularly with Isaiah, of taking occasion, from the mention of some great temporal deliverance, to launch out into the display of the spiritual deliverance of God's people by the Messiah: for that this prophecy relates to the Messiah, we have the express authority of St. Paul, Rom. xv. 12. "He joins this paragraph, which respects the days of the Messiah, with the fidelity that was in the days of Hezekiah." Kimchi, in ver. 1. Thus in the latter part of Isaiah's prophecies the subject of the great redemption, and of the glories of the Messiah's kingdom, arises out of the restoration of Judah by the deliverance from the captivity of Babylon, and is all along connected and intermixed with it.

Verse 4. With the rod of his mouth—(By the blast of his mouth)] For בשבט bishbet, by the rod, Houbigant reads בשבת beshabet, by the blast of his mouth, from נשב nashab, to blow. The conjecture is ingenious and probable; and seems to be confirmed by the Septuagint and Chaldee, who render it by the word of his mouth, which answers much better to the correction than to the present reading. Add to this, that the blast of his mouth is perfectly parallel to the breath of his lips in the next line.

Verse 5. The girdle—(The cincture)] All the ancient Versions, except that of Symmachus, have two different words for girdle in the two hemistichs. It is not probable that Isaiah would have repeated אזור azor, when a synonymous word so obvious as חגור chagor occurred. The tautology seems to have arisen from the mistake of some transcriber. The meaning of this verse is, that a zeal for justice and truth shall make him active and strong in executing the great work which he shall undertake. See Note on chap. v. 27.

Verse 6. The wolf also shall, &c.—(Then shall the wolf, &c.)] The idea of the renewal of the golden age, as it is called, is much the same in the Oriental writers, with that of the Greeks and Romans:—the wild beasts grow tame; serpents and poisonous herbs become harmless; all is peace and harmony, plenty and happiness:—

[There shall be a time when the ravenous wolf shall see the kid lying at ease, and shall feel no desire to do it an injury.]

I have laid before the Reader these common passages from the most elegant of the ancient poets; that he may see how greatly the prophet on the same subject has the advantage upon the comparison; how much the former fall short of that beauty and elegance, and variety of imagery, with which Isaiah has set forth the very same ideas. The wolf and the leopard not only forbear to destroy the lamb and the kid, but even take their abode and lie down together with them. The calf, and the young lion, and the fatling, not only come together, but are led quietly in the same band, and that by a little child. The heifer and the she-bear not only feed together, but even lodge their young ones, for whom they used to be most jealously fearful, in the same place. All the serpent kind is so perfectly harmless, that the sucking infant and the newly weaned child puts his hand on the basilisk's den, and plays upon the hole of the aspic. The lion not only abstains from preying on the weaker animals, but becomes tame and domestic, and feeds on straw like the ox. These are all beautiful circumstances, not one of which has been touched upon by the ancient poets. The Arabian and Persian poets elegantly apply the same ideas to show the effects of justice impartially administered, and firmly supported, by a great and good king:—

9 [b] They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for [c] the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the LORD, as the waters cover the sea.

10 [d] And in that day [e] there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the [f] Gentiles seek: and [g] his rest shall be [h] glorious.

11 And it shall come to pass [i] in that day, that the LORD shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, [k] from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea.

12 And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together [l] the dispersed of Judah from the four [m] corners of the earth.

The application is extremely ingenious and beautiful: but the exquisite imagery of Isaiah is not equalled.

[Verse 8. The cockatrice' den—This is supposed, both by the Targum and by Kimchi, to mean the pupil of this serpent's eye. When, says Kimchi, he is in the mouth of his den, in an obscure place, then his eyes sparkle exceedingly: the child, seeing this, and supposing it to be a piece of crystal, or precious stone, puts forth his hand to take it. What would be very dangerous at another time, shall be safe in the days of the Messiah; for, the serpent will not hurt the child.]

Verse 10. A root of Jesse, which shall stand, &c.—(The root of Jesse, which standeth, &c.)] St. John hath taken this expression from Isaiah, Rev. v. 5. and xxii. 16. where Christ had twice applied it to Himself. Seven MSS. have עמד ômed, the present participle. Radix Isæi dicitur jam stare, et aliquantum stetisse, in signum populorum. VITRINGA. "The root of Jesse is said to stand, and for some time to have stood, for an ensign to the people." Which rightly explains either of the two readings. [The one hundred and tenth Psalm is a good comment on this verse. See the Notes there.]

Verse 11. And it shall come to pass in that day] This part of the Chapter contains a prophecy which certainly remains yet to be accomplished.

Verse 15. The LORD shall smite it in the seven streams. (Smite with a drought)] The Chaldee reads החריב hacherib; and so perhaps the Septuagint, who have ερημωσει, the word by which they commonly render it. Vulg. desola- bit; "shall desolate." The Septuagint, Vulgate, and Chaldee read הדריכהו hadericehu, "shall make it passable," adding the pronoun, which is necessary: [but this reading is not confirmed by any MS.]

Here is a plain allusion to the passage of the Red Sea. And the Lord's shaking His hand over the river with his vehement wind, refers to a particular circumstance of the same miracle:—for he caused the sea to go back by a strong east wind all that night, and made the sea dry land, Exod. xiv. 21. The tongue; a very apposite and descriptive expression for a bay such as that of the Red Sea. It is used in the same sense, Josh. xv. 2, 5. xviii. 19. The Latins gave the same name to a narrow strip of land running into the sea: tenuem procit in æquora linguam. LUCAN, ii. 613. [He shall smite the river in its seven streams—This has been supposed to refer to the Nile, because it falls into the Mediterranean Sea, by seven mouths: but R. Kimchi understands it of the Euphrates, which is the opinion of some good judges. See the Targum. See below.]

Herodotus, lib. i. 189, tells a story of his Cyrus, (a very different character from that of the Cyrus of the Scriptures and Xenophon,) which may somewhat illustrate this passage, in which it is said that God would inflict a kind of punishment and judgment on the Euphrates; and render it fordable, by dividing it into seven streams. "Cyrus being impeded in his march to Babylon by the Gyndes, a deep and rapid river which falls into the Tigris; and having lost one of his sacred white horses that attempted to pass it, was so enraged against the river that he threatened to reduce it, and make it so shallow that it should be easily fordable even by women, who should not be up to their knees in passing it. Accordingly he set his whole army to work! and cutting three hundred and sixty trenches, from both sides of the river, turned the waters into them, and drained them off."

[b] Psa. 83. 18.——[c] Exod. 15. 2.

This hymn seems, by its whole tenor, and by many expressions in it, much better calculated for the use of the Christian church, than for the Jewish in any circumstances, or at any time that can be assigned. The Jews themselves seem to have applied it to the times of Messiah. On the last day of the feast of tabernacles they fetched water in a golden pitcher from the fountain of Siloah, springing at the foot of Mount Sion without the city: they brought it through the water-gate into the Temple, and poured it, mixed with wine, on the sacrifice as it lay upon the altar, with great rejoicing. They seem to have taken up this custom, for it is not ordained in the law of Moses, as an emblem of future blessings, in allusion to this passage of Isaiah, Ye shall draw waters with joy from the fountains of salvation, expressions that can hardly be understood of any benefits afforded by the Mosaic dispensation. Our Saviour applied the ceremony, and the intention of it, to Himself, and the effusion of the Holy Spirit, promised, and to be given, by Him. The sense of the Jews in this matter is plainly shown by the following passage of the Jerusalem Talmud:—"Why is it called the place, or house, of drawing?" (for that was the term for this ceremony, or for the place where the water was taken up;) "because from thence they draw the Holy Spirit; as it is written, And ye shall draw water with joy from the fountains of salvation." See Wolf. Curæ Philol. in N. T. on John vii. 37, 39. [The water is Divine knowledge, says Kimchi; and the wells the teachers of righteousness. The Targum renders this in a very remarkable manner:—"Ye shall receive with joy, (אולפן חדת ulephan chadath,) a new doctrine, from the chosen among the righteous." Does not this mean the Gospel, the New Covenant? And did not the Targumist speak as a prophet?]

Verse 2. My song] The pronoun is here necessary; and it is added by the Septuagint, Vulgate, and Syriac, who read זמרתי zimrati, as it is in a MS. Two MSS. omit יה yah, see Houbigant, not. in loc. Another MS. has it in one word, זמרתיה zimratiah. Seven others omit יהוה yehovah. See Exod. xv. 2. with Var. Lect. Kennicott.

[The LORD JEHOVAH—The word יה yah, read here is probably a mistake; and arose originally from the custom of the Jewish scribes, who, when they found a line too short for the word, wrote as many letters as filled it, and then began the next line with the whole word. In writing the word יהוה yehovah, the line might terminate with יה the two first letters; and then at the beginning of the next line the whole word, יהוה yehovah would be written. This might give rise to יה יהוה Jah Jehovah. The jah is wanting here in two of Dr. Kennicott's MSS., in one ancient MS. of my own, and in the Septuagint, Vulgate, Syriac, and Arabic. See Houbigant and De Rossi.

This and the following Chapter, (striking off the five last verses of the latter, which belong to a quite different subject,) contain one entire prophecy, foretelling the destruction of Babylon by the Medes and Persians; delivered probably in the reign of Ahaz, (see Vitringa, i. 380.) about two hundred years before the completion of it. The captivity itself of the Jews at Babylon (which the prophet does not expressly foretel, but supposes, in the spirit of prophecy as what was actually to be effected,) did not fully take place till about one hundred and thirty years after the delivery of this prophecy: and the Medes, who are expressly mentioned chap. xiii. 17. as the principal agents in the overthrow of the Babylonian monarchy, by which the Jews were released from that captivity, were at this time an inconsiderable people: having been in a state of anarchy ever since the fall of the great Assyrian empire, of which they had made a part, under Sardanapalus; and did not become a kingdom under Deioces till about the seventeenth of Hezekiah.

The former part of this prophecy is one of the most beautiful examples that can be given of elegance of composition, variety of imagery, and sublimity of sentiment and diction, in the prophetic style; and the latter part consists of an ode of supreme and singular excellence.

The prophecy opens with the command of God to gather together the forces which he had destined to this service, ver. 2, 3. Upon which the prophet immediately hears the tumultuous noise of the different nations crowding together to his standard; he sees them advancing, prepared to execute the Divine wrath, ver. 4, 5. He proceeds to describe the dreadful consequences of this visitation; the consternation which will seize those that are objects of it; and transferring unawares the speech from himself to God, ver. 11. sets forth under a variety of the most striking images, the dreadful destruction of the inhabitants of Babylon, which will follow, ver. 11—16; and the everlasting desolation to which that great city is doomed, ver. 17—22.

The deliverance of Judah from captivity, the immediate consequence of this great revolution, is then set forth, without being much enlarged upon, or greatly amplified, chap. xiv. 1, 2. This introduces, with the greatest ease and the utmost propriety, the triumphant song on that subject, ver. 4—28. The beauties of which, the various images, scenes, persons introduced, and the elegant transitions from one to another, I shall here endeavour to point out in their order, leaving a few remarks upon particular passages of these two Chapters to be given after these general observations on the whole.

A chorus of Jews is introduced, expressing their surprise and astonishment at the sudden downfall of Babylon; and the great reverse of fortune that had befallen the tyrant, who, like his predecessors, had oppressed his own, and harassed the neighbouring kingdoms. These oppressed kingdoms, or their rulers, are represented under the image of the firtrees and the cedars of Libanus, frequently used to express any thing in the political or religious world that is supereminently great and majestic: the whole earth shouteth for joy; the cedars of Libanus utter a severe taunt over the fallen tyrant, and boast their security now he is no more.

The scene is immediately changed, and a new set of persons is introduced. The regions of the dead are laid open, and Hades is represented as rousing up the shades of the departed monarchs: they rise from their thrones to meet the king of Babylon at his coming; and insult him on his being reduced to the same low estate of impotence and dissolution with themselves. This is one of the boldest prosopopœias that ever was attempted in poetry; and is executed with astonishing brevity and perspicuity, and with that peculiar force, which in a great subject naturally results from both. The image of the state of the dead, or the infernum poeticum of the Hebrews, is taken from their custom of burying, those at least of the higher rank, in large sepulchral vaults hewn in the rock. Of this kind of sepulchres there are remains at Jerusalem now extant; and some that are said to be the sepulchres of the kings of Judah. See Maundrell, p. 76. You are to form to yourself an idea of an immense subterraneous vault, a vast gloomy cavern, all round the sides of which there are cells to receive the dead bodies: here the deceased monarchs lie in a distinguished sort of state, suitable to their former rank, each on his own couch, with his arms beside him, his sword at his head, and the bodies of his chiefs and companions round about him. See Ezek. xxxii. 27. On which place Sir John Chardin's MS. note is as follows: "En Mingrelie ils dorment tous avec leur epées sous leurs têtes, et leurs autres armes à leur coté; et on les enterre de même, leurs armes posées de cette façon." [In Mingrelia they always sleep with their swords under their heads, and their other arms by their sides; and they bury their dead with their arms placed in the same manner.] These illustrious shades rise at once from their couches, as from their thrones; and advance to the entrance of the cavern to meet the king of Babylon, and to receive him with insults on his fall.

The Jews now resume the speech; they address the king of Babylon as the morning-star fallen from heaven, as the first in spendour and dignity in the political world, fallen from his high state: they introduce him as uttering the most extravagant vaunts of his power and ambitious designs in his former glory. These are strongly contrasted in the close with his present low and abject condition.

Immediately follows a different scene, and a most happy image, to diversify the same subject, to give it a new turn, and an additional force. Certain persons are introduced who light upon the corpse of the king of Babylon, cast out and lying naked on the bare ground, among the common slain, just after the taking of the city; covered with wounds, and so disfigured, that it is some time before they know him. They accost him with the severest taunts; and bitterly reproach him with his destructive ambition, and his cruel usage of the conquered; which have deservedly brought him this ignominious treatment, so different from that which those of his rank usually meet with, and which shall cover his posterity with disgrace.

To complete the whole, God is introduced, declaring the fate of Babylon, the utter extirpation of the royal family, and the total desolation of the city; the deliverance of His people, and the destruction of their enemies; confirming the irreversible decree by the awful sanction of His oath.

I believe it may with truth be affirmed, that there is no poem of its kind extant in any language, in which the subject is so well laid out, and so happily conducted, with such a richness of invention, with such variety of images, persons, and distinct actions, with such rapidity and ease of transition, in so small a compass, as in this ode of Isaiah. For beauty of disposition, strength of colouring, greatness of sentiment, brevity, perspicuity, and force of expression, it stands among all the monuments of antiquity unrivalled.

NOTES ON CHAP. XIII.

[Verse 1. The burden of Babylon—The prophecy that foretels its destruction by the Medes and Persians: see the preceding observations.]

Verse 2. Exalt the voice] The word להם lahem, to them, which is of no use, and rather weakens the sentence, is omitted by an ancient MS. and the Vulgate.

[Verse 3. I have commanded my sanctified ones—מקדשׁי mekudashai, the persons consecrated to this very purpose. Nothing can be plainer than, that the verb קדשׁ kadash, to make holy, signifies also to consecrate or appoint to a particular purpose. Bishop Lowth translates, my enroll'd warriors.—This is the sense.]

Verse 4. Of the battle.—(For the battle.)] The Bodley MS. has למלחמה lemilchamah. Cyrus' army was made up of many different nations. Jeremiah calls it "an assembly of great nations from the north country," chap. l. 9. And afterwards mentions the kingdoms of "Ararat, Minni, and Ashchenaz, (i. e. Armenia, Corduene, Pontus or Phrygia, Vitring.) with the kings of the Medes," chap. li. 27, 28. See Xenophon. Cyrop.

[Verse 5. They come from a far country—The word מארץ mearets, is wanting in one MS. and in the Syriac. They come from afar.

From the end of heaven—Kimchi says, Media, the end of heaven, in Scripture phrase means, the EAST.]

Verse 8. And they shall be afraid—(And they shall be terrified)] I join this verb, ונבהלו ve-nebehelu, to the preceding verse, with the Syriac and Vulgate.

Pangs and sorrows shall take hold of them—(Pangs shall seize them)] The Septuagint, Syriac, and Chaldee, read יאחזם ye-echazom, instead of יאחזון ye-echazun, which does not express the pronoun them, necessary to the sense.

Verse 10. For the stars of heaven—(Yea, the stars of heaven)] The Hebrew poets, to express happiness, prosperity, the instauration and advancement of states, kingdoms, and potentates, make use of images taken from the most striking parts of nature, from the heavenly bodies, from the sun, moon, and stars: which they describe as shining with increased splendour, and never setting. The moon becomes like the meridian sun, and the sun's light is augmented sevenfold, see Isa. xxx. 26. new heavens and a new earth are created, and a brighter age commences. On the contrary, the overthrow and destruction of kingdoms is represented by opposite images. The stars are obscured, the moon withdraws her light, and the sun shines no more? The earth quakes, and the heavens tremble; and all things seem tending to their original chaos. See Joel ii. 10.; iii. 15, 16. Amos viii. 9. Matt. xxiv. 29. and De S. Poes. Hebr. Præl. VI. et IX.

in its farther reference, may belong to the Jewish polity both in church and state, which should be totally eclipsed, and perhaps shine no more, in its distinct state, for ever.]

Verse 11. I will punish the world—(I will visit the world)] That is, the Babylonish empire: as ἡ οικουμενη, for the Roman empire, or for Judea, Luke ii. 1. Acts xi. 28. So universus orbis Romanus, for the Roman empire; Salvian, lib. v. Minos calls Crete his world: "Creten, quæ meus est orbis." Ovid. Metamorph. viii. 99.

[Verse 12. I will make a man more precious than fine gold—wedge of Ophir.—The Medes and Persians will not be satisfied with the spoils of the Babylonians. They seek either to destroy or enslave them; and they will accept no ransom for any man—either for אנוש enosh, the poor man; or for אדם adam, the more honourable person. All must fall by the sword, or go into captivity together: for the Medes, ver. 17. regard not silver, and delight not in gold.]

Verse 14. (And the remnant)]—Here is plainly a defect in this sentence, as it stands in the Hebrew text; the subject of the proposition is lost. What is it that shall be like a roe chased? The Septuagint happily supply it; οι καταλελειμμενοι, שאר shaar, the remnant. A MS. here supplies the word ישב yosheb, the inhabitant; which makes a tolerable good sense: but I much prefer the reading of the Septuagint.

They shall—turn—(They shall look)] That is, the forces of the king of Babylon, destitute of their leader, and all his auxiliaries, collected from Asia Minor, and other distant countries, shall disperse and flee to their respective homes.

Verse 15. Every one that is found—(Every one that is overtaken)] That is, none shall escape from the slaughter: neither they who flee singly, dispersed and in confusion; nor they who endeavour to make their retreat in a more regular manner, by forming compact bodies: they shall all be equally cut off by the sword of the enemy. The Septuagint have understood it in this sense; which they have well expressed:—

"Ος γαρ αν αλῳ ηττηθησεται, Και οιτινες συνηγμενοι πεσουνται μαχαιρᾳ."

[Whosoever is caught shall be overthrown,
And all that are collected together shall fall by the sword.]

Where for ηττηθησεται, MS. Pachom. has εκκενθησεται; et οι Γ Cod. Marchal. in margine, et MS. I. D. II, εκκεντηθησεται: which seems to be right, being properly expressive of the Hebrew.

Verse 17. Which shall not regard silver—(Who shall hold silver of no account)] That is, who shall not be induced by large offers of gold and silver for ransom, to spare the lives of those whom they have subdued in battle; their rage and cruelty will get the better of all such motives. We have many examples in the Iliad and in the Æneid of addresses of the vanquished to the pity and avarice of the vanquishers, to induce them to spare their lives.

Est domus alta: jacent penitus defossa talenta
Cœlati argenti: sunt auri pondera facti

With piles of labour'd and unlabour'd gold.
These, to procure my ransom, I resign;
The war depends not on a life like mine;
One, one poor life can no such difference yield,
Nor turn the mighty balance of the field.
Thy talents, (cried the prince,) thy treasured store,
Keep for thy sons." Pitt.

It is remarkable, that Xenophon makes Cyrus open a speech to his army, and in particular to the Medes, who made the principal part of it, with praising them for their disregard of riches. Ανδρες Μηδοι, και παντες οι παροντες, εγω υμας οιδα σαφως, οτι ουτε χρηματων δεομενοι συν εμοι εξηλθετε— "Ye Medes, and others who now hear me, I well know, that you have not accompanied me in this expedition with a view of acquiring wealth." Cyrop. lib. v.

Verse 18. Their bows also shall dash—[Their bows shall dash)] Both Herodotus, i. 61. and Xenophon, Anab. iii. mention, that the Persians used large bows; τοξα μεγαλα: and the latter says particularly, that their bows were three cubits long, Anab. iv. They were celebrated for their archers, see chap. xxii. 6. Jer. xlix. 35. Probably their neighbours and allies, the Medes, dealt much in the same sort of arms. In Psa. xviii. 35. and Job xx. 24. mention is made of a bow of brass; if the Persian bows were of metal, we may easily conceive that with a metalline bow of three cubits length, and proportionably strong, the soldiers might dash and slay the young men, the weaker and unresisting part of the inhabitants (for they are joined with the fruit of the womb and the children,) in the general carnage on taking the city. [תרטשנה terattashenah, shall be broken or shivered to pieces. This seems to refer, not to נערים neârim, young men, but to קשתות keshatoth, their bows. The bows of the young men shall be broken to pieces.]

On the fruit, &c.—(And on the fruit, &c.)] A MS. of Dr. Kennicott's, reads ועל פרי veâl peri, and on the fruit. And nine MSS. (three ancient) and two editions, with the Septuagint, Vulgate, and Syriac, add likewise the conjunction ו vau, and, to על âl, upon, afterwards.

Verse 19. And Babylon] The great city of Babylon was at this time rising to its height of glory, while the prophet Isaiah was repeatedly denouncing its utter destruction. From the first of Hezekiah to the first of Nebuchadnezzar, under whom it was brought to the highest degree of strength and splendour, are about one hundred and twenty years. I will here very briefly mention some particulars of the greatness of the place, and note the several steps by which this remarkable prophecy was at length accomplished in the total ruin of it.

It was, according to the lowest account given of it by ancient historians, a regular square, forty-five miles in compass, inclosed by a wall two hundred feet high, fifty broad; in which there were a hundred gates of brass. Its principal ornaments were the temple of Belus, in the middle of which was a tower of eight stories of building, upon a base of a quarter of a mile square; a most magnificent palace; and the famous hanging gardens; which were an artificial mountain, raised upon arches, and planted with trees of the largest as well as the most beautiful sorts.

Cyrus took the city, by diverting the waters of the Euphrates, which ran through the midst of it, and entering the place at night by the dry channel. The river being never restored afterward to its proper course, overflowed the whole country, and made it little better than a great morass: this and the great slaughter of the inhabitants, with other bad consequences of the taking of the city, was the first step to the ruin of the place. The Persian monarchs ever regarded it with a jealous eye; they kept it under, and took care to prevent its recovering its former greatness. Darius Hystaspis not long afterward most severely punished it for a revolt, greatly depopulated the place, lowered the walls, and demolished the gates. Xerxes destroyed the temples; and with the rest the great temple of Belus, Herod iii. 159. Arrian. Exp. Alexandri, lib. vii. The building of Seleucia on the Tigris exhausted Babylon by its neighbourhood, as well as by the immediate loss of inhabitants taken away by Seleucus to people his new city, Strabo lib. xvi. A king of the Parthians soon after carried away into slavery a great number of the inhabitants, and burned and destroyed the most beautiful parts of the city, Valesii Excerpt. Diodori, p. 377. Strabo (ibid.) says, that in his time great part of it was a mere desert: that the Persians had partly destroyed it; and that time, and the neglect of the Macedonians, while they were masters of it, had nearly completed its destruction. Jerom (in loc.) says, that in his time it was quite in ruins, and that the walls served only for the inclosure of a park or forest for the king's hunting. Modern travellers, who have endeavoured to find the remains of it, have given but a very unsatisfactory account of their success. What Benjamin of Tudela and Pietro della Valle supposed to have been some of its ruins, Tavernier thinks are the remains of some late Arabian building. Upon the whole, Babylon is so utterly annihilated, that even the place, where this wonder of the world stood, cannot now be determined with any certainty! See also note on chap. xliii. 14.

We are astonished at the accounts which ancient historians of the best credit give of the immense extent, height, and thickness of the walls of Nineveh and Babylon: nor are we less astonished, when we are assured, by the concurrent testimony of modern travellers, that no remains, not the least traces, of these prodigious works are now to be found!

Our wonder will, I think, be moderated in both respects, if we consider the fabric of these celebrated walls, and the nature of the materials of which they consisted. Buildings in the East have always been, and are to this day, made of earth or clay mixed, or beat up, with straw to make the parts cohere, and dried only in the sun. This is their method of making bricks. See note on chap. ix. 9. The walls of the city were built of the earth digged out on the spot, and dried upon the place; by which means both the ditch and the wall were at once formed; the former furnishing materials for the latter. That the walls of Babylon were of this kind is well known; and Berosus expressly says, (apud Joseph. Antiq. x. 11.) that Nebuchadnezzar added three new walls both to the old and new city, partly of brick and bitumen, and partly of brick alone. A wall of this sort must have a great thickness in proportion to its height, otherwise it cannot stand. The thickness of the walls of Babylon is said to have been one fourth of their height; which seems to have been no more than was absolutely necessary. Maundrel, speaking of the garden walls of Damascus: "They are," says he, "of a very singular structure. They are built of great pieces of earth, made in the fashion of brick, and hardened in the sun. In their dimensions they are two yards long each, and somewhat more than one broad, and half a yard thick." And afterward, speaking of the walls of the houses; "From this dirty way of building they have this among other inconveniences, that upon any violent rain the whole city becomes, by the washing of the houses, as it were a quagmire," p. 124. And see note on chap. xxx. 13. When a wall of this sort comes to be out of repair, and is neglected, it is easy to conceive the necessary consequences; namely, that in no long course of ages it must be totally destroyed by the heavy rains; and at length washed away, and reduced to its original earth.

Verse 22. In their pleasant palaces—(In their palaces)] באלמנותיו beal-menotaiv; a plain mistake, I presume, for בארמנותיו bear-menotaiv. It is so corrected [in two MSS., the Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate.]

Πουλυποδες δ' εν εμοι θαλαμοις, φωκαιτε μελαιναι,

Of which the following passage of Milton may be taken for a translation, though not so designed:—

"And in their palaces,
Where luxury late reign'd, sea monsters whelp'd,
And stabled." Par. Lost, xi. 750.

[This image of desolation, is handled with great propriety and force by some of the Persian poets:—

پرده داري ميكند در قصر قيصر عنكبوت
بومي نوبت ميزند بر گنبد افراسياب

"The spider holds the veil in the palace of Cæsar:
The owl stands sentinel on the watchtower of Afrasiab."

On this quotation Sir W. Jones observes, نوبت noubet is an Arabic word, signifying a turn, a change, a watch; hence نوبت زدن noubet zudun, in Persian, signifies, to relieve the guards by the sounds of drums and trumpets. Their office is given by the poet to the owl; as that of پرده دار purdeh dar, or chamberlain, is elegantly assigned to the spider.]

NOTES ON CHAP. XIV.

Verse 1. And will yet choose Israel] That is, will still regard Israel as His chosen people; however He may seem to desert them, by giving them up to their enemies, and scattering them among the nations. Judah is sometimes called Israel, see Ezek. xiii. 16. Mal. i. 1.; ii. 11.: but the name of Jacob, and of Israel, used apparently with design in this place; each of which names includes the twelve tribes; and the other circumstances mentioned in this and the next verse, which did not in any complete sense accompany the return from the captivity of Babylon; seem to intimate that this whole prophecy extends its views beyond that event.

[Verse 2. For servants and handmaids—For thralls and thralleggeg. OLD BIBLE.]

Verse 3. In the day—(In that day)] ביום ההוא bayom hahu, The word ההוא hahu, is added in two MSS. [of Kennicott's,] and was in the copies from which the Septuagint and Vulgate translated: εν τῃ ἡμερᾳ εκεινῃ, in die illâ (ᾗ αναπαυσει, MS. Pachom. adding ᾗ.) This is a matter of no great consequence: however it restores the Text to the common form, almost constantly used on such occasions; and is one among many instances of a word apparently lost out of the printed copies.

Verse 4. This proverb—(This parable)] Mashal משל I take this to be the general name for poetic style among the Hebrews, including every sort of it, as ranging under one, or other, or all of the characters, of sententious, figurative, and sublime; which are all contained in the original notion, or in the use and application of the word mashal. Parables or proverbs, such as those of Solomon, are always expressed in short pointed sentences; frequently figurative, being formed on some comparison; generally forcible, and authoritative, both in the matter and the form. And such in general is the style of the Hebrew poetry. The verb mashal signifies to rule; to exercise authority; to make equal; to compare one thing with another; to utter parables, or acute, weighty, and powerful speeches, in the form and manner of parables, though not properly such. Thus Balaam's first prophecy, Numb. xxiii. 7—10. is called his mashal; though it has hardly any thing figurative in it: but it is beautifully sententious; and, from the very form and manner of it, has great spirit, force, and energy. Thus Job's last speeches, in answer to the three friends, chap. xxvii—xxxi. are called mashals; from no one particular character, which discriminates them from the rest of the poem; but from the sublime, the figurative, the sententious manner, which equally prevails through the whole poem, and makes it one of the first and most eminent examples extant of the truly great and beautiful, in poetic style. [See the Note on Prov. i. 1.]

The Septuagint in this place render the word by θρηνος, a lamentation. They plainly consider the speech here introduced as a piece of poetry; and of that species of poetry which we call the elegiac: either from the subject, it being a poem on the fall and death of the king of Babylon; or from the form of the composition, which is of the longer sort of Hebrew verse, in which the Lamentations of Jeremiah, called by the Septuagint Θρηνοι, are written.

[The golden city ceased—מרהבה madehebah, which is here translated golden city, is a Chaldee word. Probably it means that golden coin or ingot which was given to the Babylonians by way of tribute. So the word is understood by the Vulgate, where it is rendered tributum; and by Montanus, who translates it aurea pensio, the golden pension.

[m] Or, did not let his prisoners loose homewards.

Kimchi seems to have understood the word in the same sense. De Rossi translates it auri dives, rich in gold; or auri exactrix, the exactor of gold—the same as the exactor of tribute.

Verse 9. Hell from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee—That is, Nebuchadnezzar. "It (hell) hath raised up from their thrones all the kings of the earth;—the ghosts (rephaim) of all the mighty ones, or goats (עתודי âtudey,) of the earth—all the oppressors of mankind. What a most terrible idea is here! Tyrannical kings, who have oppressed and spoiled mankind, are here represented as enthroned in hell;—and as taking a Satanic pleasure in seeing others of the same description enter these abodes of misery.]

Verse 11. Cover thee—(Thy covering)] Twenty-eight MSS. (ten ancient) [of Kennicott's, thirty-nine of De Rossi's, twelve editions,] with the Septuagint and Vulgate, read ומכסך u-mecaseca, in the singular number.

[Verse 12. O Lucifer, son of the morning—The Versions in general agree in this translation; and render הילל heilel, as signifying Lucifer, Φωσφορος, the morning star, whether Jupiter or Venus; as these are both bringers of the morning light, or morning stars, annually in their turn. And, although the context speaks explicitly concerning Nebuchadnezzar; yet this has been, I know not why, applied to the chief of the fallen angels, who is most incongruously denominated Lucifer, (the bringer of light!) an epithet as common to him as those of Satan and Devil. That the Holy Spirit, by His prophets should call this arch-enemy to God and man the Light-bringer, would be strange indeed. But the truth is, the Text speaks nothing at all concerning Satan, nor his fall, nor the occasion of that fall, which many divines have with great confidence deduced from this Text. O how necessary it is to understand the literal meaning of Scripture, that preposterous Comments may be prevented. Besides, I doubt much whether our translation be correct. הילל heilel, which we translate Lucifer, comes from ילל yalal, yell, howl, or shriek; and should be translated, "Howl, son of the morning"—and so the Syriac has understood it: and for this meaning Michaelis contends, see his reasons in Parkhurst, under הלל hallal.

Verse 13 I will ascend into heaven—I will get the empire of the whole world. I will exalt my throne above the stars of God—above the Israelites, who are here termed the stars of God. So the Targum of Jonathan; and Rab. D. Kimchi. This Chapter speaks not of the ambition and fall of Satan: but of the pride, arrogance, and fall, of Nebuchadnezzar.]

The mount of the congregation—(The mount of the Divine presence)] It appears plainly from Exod. xxv. 22. and xxix. 42, 43. where God appoints the place of meeting with Moses, and promises to meet with him before the ark, to commune with him, and to speak unto him; and to meet the children of Israel at the door of the tabernacle; that the tabernacle, and afterward the door of the temple, and mount Sion, (or Moriah, which is reckoned a part of Mount Sion,) whereon it stood, was called the tabernacle, and the mount of convention or of appointment; not from the people's assembling there to perform the services of their religion, (which is what our translation expresses by calling it the tabernacle of the congregation,) but because God appointed that for the place where He Himself would meet with Moses, and commune with him, and would meet with the people. Therefore הר מועד har moéd, or אהל מועד ohel moéd, means the place appointed by God, where He would present Himself: agreeably to which I have rendered it in this place, the mount of the Divine presence.

Verse 19. Like an abominable branch—(Like the tree abominated)] That is, an object of abomination and detestation; such as the tree is, on which a malefactor has been hanged. "It is written," saith St. Paul, Gal. iii. 23. "Cursed is every man that hangeth on a tree," from Deut. xxi. 23. The Jews therefore held also as accursed and polluted the tree itself on which a malefactor had been executed, or on which he had been hanged after having been put to death by stoning. Non suspendunt super arbore, quæ radicibus solo adhæreat; sed super ligno eradicato, ut ne sit excisio molesta: nam lignum, super quo fuit aliquis suspensus, cum suspendioso sepelitur; ne maneat illi malum nomen, et dicant homines, Istud est lignum, in quo suspensus este ille, ὁ ἐπικατάρατος. Sic lapis, quo aliquis fuit lapidatus; et gladius, quo fuit occisus is qui est occisus; et sudarium sive mantile, quo fuit aliquis strangulatus; omnia hæc cum iis, qui perierunt, sepeliuntur." Maimonides, apud Casaub. in Baron. Exercitat. xvi. An. 34. Num. 134. "Cum itaque homo suspensus maximæ esset abominationi,—Judæi quoque præ cæteris abominabantur lignum quo fuerat suspensus, ita ut illud quoque terra tegerent, tanquam rem abominabilem. Unde interpres Chaldæus hæc verba transtulit כהש טמיר cahat tamir, sicut virgultum absconditum, sive sepultum." Kalinski, Vaticinia Observationibus Illustrata, p. 342.

[The Jews never hang any malefactor upon a tree that is growing in the earth, but upon a post fixed in the ground, that it might never be said, "that is the tree on which such a one was hanged;" for custom required that the tree should be buried with the malefactor. In like manner, the stone by which a criminal was stoned to death, or the sword by which he was beheaded, or the napkin or handkerchief by which he was strangled, should be buried with him in the same grave. For as the hanged man was considered the greatest abomination, so the very post or wood on which he was hanged was deemed a most abominable thing, and therefore buried under the earth.]

Agreeably to which Theodoret, Hist. Ecclesiast. i, 17, 18. in his account of the finding of the cross by Helena, says, "That the three crosses were buried in the earth near the place of our Lord's sepulchre." [And this circumstance seems to confirm the relation of the discovery of the cross of Christ. The crosses were found where custom required that they should be buried.]

Verse 19. The raiment of those that are slain—(Clothed with the slain)] Thirty-five MSS. (ten ancient,) and three editions, have the word fully written, לבוש lebosh. It is not a noun, but a participle passive; thrown out among the common slain, and covered with the dead bodies. So ver. 11. the earth-worm is said to be his bed-covering. [This reading is confirmed by two ancient MSS. in my own collection.]

Verse 20. Because thou hast destroyed thy land, &c.—(Because thou hast destroyed thy country, thou hast slain thy people.)] Xenophon gives an instance of this king's wanton cruelty in killing the son of Gobrias, on no other provocation than that, in hunting, he struck a boar and a lion which the king had missed. Cyrop. iv. p. 309.

Verse 23. I will sweep it with the besom of destruction—(I will plunge it in the miry gulf of destruction)] I have here very nearly followed the Version of the Septuagint: the reasons for which see in the last note on De Poesi Hebr. Prælect. xxviii.

[The besom of destruction, as our Version renders it. במטאטא be-mataté.—This, says Kimchi, is a Chaldee word: —and it is worthy of remark that the Prophet, writing to the Chaldeans, uses several words peculiar to their own language, to point out the nature of the Divine judgments, and the causes of them. See the note on Jer. x. 11. Sixteen of Kennicott's MSS., and seventeen of De Rossi's, and one ancient of my own, have the word במטאטי be-matatey, in the plural—I will sweep her with the besoms of destruction.]

Verse 25. I will break the Assyrian—upon my mountains—(To crush the Assyrian—on my mountains)] The Assyrians and Babylonians are the same people, Herod. i. 199, 200. Babylon is reckoned the principal city in Assyria, ibid. 178. Strabo says the same thing, lib. xvi. sub init. The circumstance of this judgment's being to be executed on God's mountains is of importance: it may mean the destruction of Sennacherib's army near Jerusalem; and have a still further view, compare Ezek. xxxix. 4. and see Lowth on this place of Isaiah.

Verse 28. In the year that king Ahaz died was this burden] Uzziah had subdued the Philistines, 2 Chron. xxvi. 6, 7.: but taking advantage of the weak reign of Ahaz, they invaded Judea, and took and held in possession some cities in the southern part of the kingdom. On the death of Ahaz, Isaiah delivers this prophecy, threatening them with the destruction that Hezekiah, his son, and great-grandson of Uzziah, should bring upon them: which he effected; for "he smote the Philistines, even unto Gaza, and the borders thereof," 2 Kings xviii. 8. Uzziah therefore must be meant by the rod that smote them, and by the serpent, from whom should spring the flying fiery serpent, ver. 29. That is, Hezekiah, a much more terrible enemy, than even Uzziah had been.

[The Targum renders the twenty-ninth verse in a singular way. For, from the sons of Jesse shall come forth the Messiah. And his works among you shall be as the flying serpent.

Verse 30. And the first born of the poor, &c.—The Targum goes on applying all to the Messiah.—And the poor of the people shall he feed, and the humble shall dwell securely in his days: and he shall kill thy children with famine, and the remnant of thy people shall he slay.]

I will kill—(He will slay)] The Septuagint reads יהמית hemith, in the third person, ἀνελεῖ; and so the Chaldee. The Vulgate remedies the confusion of persons in the present Text, by reading both the verbs in the first person.

Verse 31. There shall come from the north a smoke—(From the north cometh a smoke)] That is, a cloud of dust raised by the march of Hezekiah's army against Philistia; which lay to the south-west from Jerusalem. A great dust raised has, at a distance, the appearance of smoke, "fumantes pulvere campi." VIRG. Æn. xi. 908. [The fields smoking with dust.]

Verse 32. The messengers of the nations—(The ambassadors of nations)] The Septuagint read גוים goyim, ἐθνων, plural; and so the Chaldee, and one MS. The ambassadors of the neighbouring nations, that send to congratulate Hezekiah, on his success; which in his answer he will ascribe to the protection of God. See 2 Chron. xxxii. 23. Or, if גוי goi, singular, the reading of the Text, be preferred, the ambassadors sent by the Philistines to demand peace.

[The Lord hath founded Zion—Kimchi refers this to the state of Zion under Hezekiah, when the rest of the cities of Judea had been taken, and this only was left for a hope to the poor of God's people; and God defended it so, that Rabshakeh could not prevail against it.

The true church of God is a place of safety: for as all its members are devoted to God, and walk in His testimonies, so they are continually defended and supported by Him. In the congregations of His people, God dispenses His light and salvation; hence His poor or humble ones expect in His ordinances the blessings they need.]

This and the following Chapter, taken together, make one entire prophecy, very improperly divided into two parts. The time of the delivery, and consequently of the completion of it, which was to be in three years from that time, is uncertain: the former not being marked in the prophecy itself, nor the latter recorded in history. But the most probable account is, that it was delivered soon after the foregoing, in the first year of Hezekiah; and that it was accomplished in his fourth year, when Shalmaneser invaded the kingdom of Israel. He might probably march through Moab; and, to secure every thing behind him, possess himself of the whole country, by taking their principal strong places, Ar and Kirhares. [The Authorized Version, which we have followed in the Margin, places the prophecy in this Chapter fourteen years earlier than that contained in the two preceding.]

Jeremiah has happily introduced much of this prophecy of Isaiah into his own larger prophecy against the same people in his forty-eighth chapter, denouncing God's judgments on Moab, subsequent to the calamity here foretold, and to be executed by Nebuchadnezzar: by which means several mistakes [of transcribers] in the present Text of both prophets may be rectified.

NOTES ON CHAP. XV.

Verse 1. Because in the night] בליל beleil. That both these cities should be taken in the night is a circumstance somewhat unusual; and not so material, as to deserve to be so strongly insisted upon. Vitringa, by his remark on this word, shows, that he was dissatisfied with it in its plain and obvious meaning; and is forced to have recourse to a very hard metaphorical interpretation of it. Noctu vel nocturno impetu; vel metaphorice, repente, subito, inexpectata destructione: placet posterius. Calmet conjectures, and I think it probable, that the true reading is כליל ke-leil, as the night. There are many mistakes in the Hebrew Text arising from the very great similitude of the letters ב beth and כ caph, which in many MSS. and some printed Editions, are hardly distinguishable. Admitting this reading, the translation will be,—

"Because Ar is utterly destroyed, Moab is undone!
Because Kir is utterly destroyed, Moab is undone!"

[Verse 2. He is gone to Bajith and to Dibon—עלה הבית âlah ha-beith, should be rendered, he is gone to the HOUSE, i. e. to their chief temple, where they practised idolatry. Dibon was the name of a tower, where also was an idolatrous temple—thither they went to weep and pray before their idols, that they might interpose and save them from their calamities. So Rab. D. Kimchi He is gone to Bajith and to Dibon: but Bishop Lowth reads] Beth Dibon,—this is the name of one place; and the two words are to be joined together, without the ו vau intervening. So the Chaldee and Syriac. [This reading is not supported by any MS. or Version: but some MSS. instead of עֹר âr, have עִיר âir, a city—others have עַר âd, unto, and some Editions have עַל âl, upon. But all these help little, though they show that the place puzzled both the scribes and the Editors.]

On all their heads shall be baldness, &c.—(On every head there is baldness, &c.)] Herodotus, ii. 36. speaks of it as a general practice among all men, except the Egyptians, to cut off their hair as a token of mourning. "Cut off thy hair and cast it away," says Jeremiah, vii. 29. "and take up a lamentation."

similitude of the letters ד daleth and ר resh, has likewise occasioned many mistakes. In the present case, the sense is pretty much the same with either reading. The Text of Jer. lxviii. 37. has the latter, [diminished. The former reading is found in twelve of Dr. Kennicott's MSS. forty of De Rossi's, and two of my own. A great number of Editions have the same reading.

Verse 3. With sackcloth] שק sak. The word is in the plural, שקים sakim, sacks, in one of De Rossi's MSS.]

Verse 4. The armed soldiers—(The very loins)] So the Septuagint, ἡ ὀσφυς, and the Syriac. They cry out violently, with their utmost force.

Verse 5. My heart shall cry out for Moab. (The heart of Moab crieth within her.)] For לבי lebi, my heart, the Septuagint reads לבו lebo, his heart, or לב leb; the Chaldee, לבו lebo. For בריחיה berichieh, the Syriac reads ברוחה berocheh; and so likewise the Septuagint rendering it ἐν αὐτῃ, Edit. Vat. or ἐν ἑαυτῃ, Edit. Alex. and MSS. 1. D. 11.

An heifer of three years old—(A young heifer)] Hebrew, a heifer three years old, in full strength; as Horace uses equa trima, for a young mare just coming to her prime. Bochart observes from Aristotle, Hist. Animal. lib. iv. that, in this kind of animals alone the voice of the female is deeper than that of the male; therefore, the lowing of the heifer, rather than of the bullock, is chosen by the Prophet, as the more proper image to express the mourning of Moab. But I must add, that the expression here is very short and obscure; and the opinions of interpreters are various in regard to the meaning. Compare Jer. xlviii. 34.

Shall they go it up—(They shall ascend)] For יעלה yaâleh, the Septuagint and a MS. read in the plural יעלו yaâlo. And from this passage the parallel place in Jer. xlviii. 5. must be corrected; where for יעלה בכי yaâleh beki, which gives no good sense, read יעלה בו yaâleh bo.

Verse 7. (Shall perish)] אברו abadu, or אברה abadeh. This word seems to have been lost out of the Text: it is supplied by the parallel place, Jer. xlviii. 36. The Syriac expresses it by עבר aber, præteriit; and the Chaldee by יתבזון yithbazazon, diripientur.

To the brook of the willows—(To the valley of willows)] That is, to Babylon. Hieron. and Jarchi in loc. both referring to Psa. cxxxvii. 2. So likewise Prideaux, Le Clerc, &c.

[Verse 9. The waters of Dimon—Some have Dibon, others have Ribon, and Rimon. St. Jerom observes that the same town was called both Dibon and Dimon. The reading is therefore indifferent.]

Upon him that escapeth of Moab, &c.—(Upon the escaped of Moab, and Ariel, and the remnant of Admah)] The Septuagint for אריה arieh, read אריאל ariel. Ar Moab was called also Ariel or Areopolis, Hieron. and Theodoret. See Cellarius. They make אדמה Admah, also a proper name. Michaelis thinks that the Moabites might be called the remnant of Admah, as sprung from Lot and his daughters escaped from the destruction of that and the other cities; or metaphorically, as the Jews are called princes of Sodom, and people of Gomorrah, chap. i. 10. Bibliothek Orient. Part v. p. 195. The reading of this verse is very doubtful; and the sense, in every way in which it can be read, very obscure. [Calmet thinks there may be a reference to 1 Chron. xi. 22., where it is said, Benaiah slew two lion-like men of Moab, or the two Ariels of Moab, and would therefore translate I will bring down the remnant of Moab like Ariel (which Benaiah smote) and them that are escaped, like Adamah. They shall be exterminated, as were the inhabitants of those two cities. Ariel was a double city—the river Arnon dividing it in two. This is the two Ariels of Moab—not two lion-like men, much less two lions. See Calmet on this place.]

NOTES ON CHAP. XVI.

Verse 1. Send ye the lamb, &c.—(I will send forth the son, &c.)] Both the reading and meaning of this verse are still more doubtful than those of the preceding. The Septuagint and Syriac read אשלח eshelach, I will send, in the first person singular, future tense: the Vulgate and Talmud Babylon, read שלח shelach, send, singular imperative, [some read שלחו shelacho, send ye forth, or, they send forth.] The Syriac for כר kar, a lamb, reads בר bar, a son, which is confirmed by five MSS. [of Kennicott and De Rossi.] The two first verses describe the distress of Moab on the Assyrian invasion; in which even the son of the prince of the country is represented as forced to flee for his life through the desert, that he may escape to Judea; and the young women are driven forth, like young birds cast out of the nest, and endeavouring to wade through the fords of the river Arnon. [Perhaps there is not so much difficulty in this verse as appears at first view.—Send the lamb to the ruler of the land, may receive light from 2 Kings iii. 4, 5. "And Mesha, king of Moab, was a sheepmaster, and rendered unto the king of Israel one hundred thousand lambs with their wool, and one hundred thousand rams: but when Ahab was dead, the king of Moab rebelled against Israel."—Now, the prophet exhorts them to begin paying the tribute as formerly, that their punishment might be averted, or mitigated.]

Verse 3. Take counsel—(Impart counsel)] The Vulgate renders the verbs in the beginning of this verse in the singular number. So the Keri; and so likewise sixty-one MSS. [of Kennicott's and De Rossi's] have it, and nineteen editions, and the Syriac. The verbs throughout the verse are also in the feminine gender; agreeing with Sion, which I suppose to be understood.

Verse 4. Let mine outcasts dwell with thee, Moab—(The outcasts of Moab)] Setting the points aside, this is by much the most obvious construction of the Hebrew, as well as most agreeable to the context, and the design of the prophet. And it is confirmed by the Septuagint, οι φυγαδες Μωαβ, and Syriac.

The oppressors—(The oppressor)] Perhaps the Israelites, who in the time of Ahaz invaded Judah, defeated his army, slaying one hundred and twenty thousand men; and brought the kingdom to the brink of destruction. Judah being now in a more prosperous condition, is represented as able to receive and protect the fugitive Moabites. And with those former times of distress the security and flourishing state of the kingdom under the government of Hezekiah is contrasted.

[Verse 5. In mercy shall the throne be established—May not this refer to the throne of Hezekiah? Here we have the character of such a king as cannot fail to be a blessing to the people. 1. He sitteth on the throne in truth—He does not merely profess to be the father and protector of his people: but he is actually such.—2. He is judging.—He is not a man of war or blood, who wastes his subjects' lives and treasures, in contentions with neighbouring nations, in tabernacle of David, [a] judging and seeking judgment, and hasting righteousness,

6 We have heard of the [b] pride of Moab; he is very proud: even of his haughtiness, and his pride, and his wrath: [c] but his lies shall not be so.

7 Therefore shall Moab [d] howl for Moab, every one shall howl: for the foundations [e] of Kir-hareseth shall ye [f] mourn; surely they are stricken.

order to satisfy his ambition by the extension of his territory. On the contrary, his whole life is occupied in the distribution of justice. 3. He seeketh judgment.—He seeks out the poor distressed ones, who cannot make their way to him, and avenges them on their oppressors. 4. He hastens righteousness.—He does not suffer any of the courts of justice to delay the determination of the causes brought before them: he so orders that the point in litigation be fairly, fully, and speedily heard; and then judgment pronounced. Delays in the execution of justice answer little end, but the enriching of unprincipled lawyers.]

Verse 6. We have heard of the pride of Moab—(We have heard the pride of Moab)] For נא ge, read גאה gah; two MSS. (one ancient,) and Jer. xlviii. 29. Zephaniah chap. ii. 8—10., in his prophecy against Moab, the subject of which is the same with that of Jeremiah in his forty-eighth chapter, (see the Note on chap. xv. 1.) enlarges much on the pride of Moab, and their insolent behaviour towards the Jews:—

"I have heard the reproach of Moab;
And the revilings of the sons of Ammon:
Who have reproached my people;
And have magnified themselves against their borders.
Therefore as I live, saith JEHOVAH God of hosts, the God of Israel:
Surely Moab shall be as Sodom,
And the sons of Ammon as Gomorrah:
A possession of nettles, and pits of salt,
And a desolation for ever.
The residue of my people shall spoil them,
And the remnant of my nation shall dispossess them:
This shall they have for their pride;
Because they have raised a reproach, and have magnified themselves,
Against the people of JEHOVAH God of hosts."

Verse 7. For the foundations of Kir-haraseth—(For the men of Kirhares)] A palpable mistake in this place is happily corrected by the parallel text of Jer. xlviii. 31. where, instead of אשישׁ ashishey, foundations, or flagons, we read אנשׁי enoshey, men. In the same place of Jeremiah, and in ver 36., and here in ver. 11. the name of the city is Kir-hares, not Kir-haresheth.

Verse 8. Languish—(Are put to shame)] Here the text of Jeremiah leaves us much at a loss, in a place that seems to be greatly corrupted. The Septuagint join the two last words of this verse with the beginning of the following. Their rendering is:—και ουκ εντραπηση τα πεδια Εσεβων. For אך ak, they must have read אל al: otherwise, how came they by the negative, which seems not to belong to this place? Neither is it easy to make sense of the rest without a small alteration, by reading, instead of εντραπηση τα, εντραπησεται. In a word, the Arabic version, taken from the Septuagint, plainly authorises this reading of the Septuagint, and without the negative; and it is fully confirmed by MSS. Pachom. and I. D. II. which have both of them εντραπησεται πεδια Εσεβων, without the negative; which makes an excellent sense, and, I think, gives us the true reading of the Hebrew text; אך נכלמו שדמות חשבון ak nekalmo shadmoth cheshbon. They frequently render the verb נכלם nekalam, by εντρεπομαι, and נכלמו nekalmo, answers perfectly well to אמלל umelal, the parallel word in the next line. The MSS. vary in expressing the word נכאים nekaim, which gives no tolerable sense in this place: one reads נוכאים nokaim; two others בכאים becaim; in another the כ caph is upon a rasure of two letters; and the Vulgate instead of it reads מכותם mecotham, plagas suas.

Her branches are stretched out—(Her branches extended themselves)] For נטשׁו nitshu, a MS. has נגשׁו nigeshu; which may perhaps be right. Compare Jer. xlviii. 32. which has in this part of the sentence the synonymous word נגע nigêa.

The meaning of this verse is, that the wines of Sibmah and Heshbon were greatly celebrated, and in high repute with all the great men and princes of that and the neighbouring countries; who indulged themselves even to intemperance in the use of them. So that their vines were so much in request as not only to be propagated all over the country of Moab, to the sea of Sodom; but to have cions of them sent even beyond the sea into foreign countries.

9 Therefore [a] I will bewail with the weeping of Jazer the vine of Sibmah: I will water thee with my tears, [b] O Heshbon, and Elealeh: for [c] the shouting for thy summer fruits and for thy harvest is fallen.

10 And [d] gladness is taken away, and joy out of the plentiful field; and in the vineyards there shall be no singing, neither shall there be shouting: the treaders shall tread out no wine in their presses; I have made their vintage-shouting to cease.

11 Wherefore [e] my bowels shall sound like a harp for Moab, and mine inward parts for Kir-haresh.

הלמו halemu, knocked down, demolished; that is, overpowered, intoxicated. The drunkards of Ephraim are called by the prophet, chap. xxviii. 1. הלומי יין halomey yayin, drinkers of wine. See Schultens on Prov. xxiii. 25. Grotius, speaking of the Mareotic wine, says of it,

Pharios quæ fregit noxia reges. CYNEG. 312.

Verse 9. With the weeping—(As with the weeping)] For בכי bibeki, a MS. reads בכי beki. In Jer. xlviii. 32. it is מבכי mibeki. The Septuagint read כבכי ke-beki, which I follow.

For thy summer fruits and for thy harvest is fallen—(And upon thy vintage the destroyer hath fallen)] ועל קצירך הידד נפל veâl ketsirek heided naphal. In these few words there are two great mistakes; which the text of Jer. xviii. 32. rectifies. For קצירך ketsirek, it has בצירך betsirek; and for הידד heided, שדד saded; both which corrections the Chaldee in this place confirms. As to the first,

"Hesebon and Eleale, and

were never celebrated for their harvests; it was the vintage that suffered by the irruption of the enemy: and so read the Septuagint and Syriac. הידד heided, is the noisy acclamation of the treaders of the grapes. And see what sense this makes in the literal rendering of the Vulgate: super messem tuam "vox calcantium irruit," [upon thy harvest the voice of the treaders rushes.] The reading in Jer. xlviii. 32. is certainly right, שדד נפל saded naphal, vastator irruit. The shout of the treaders does not come in till the next verse; in which the text of Isaiah in its turn mends that of Jeremiah, xlviii. 33., where instead of the first הידד heided, the shout, we ought undoubtedly to read, as here, הדרך hadarec, the treader.

Verse 10. Neither shall there be shouting—(An end is put to the shouting)] The Septuagint read השבת hishbeth, passive, and in the third person; rightly: for God is not the Speaker in this place. The rendering of the Septuagint is πεπαυται γαρ κελευσμα, [the cry ceaseth;] which last word, necessary to the rendering of the Hebrew and to the sense, is supplied by MSS. Pachom, and i. D. ii. having been lost out of the other copies.

Verse 12. When it is seen that Moab, &c.—(When Moab shall see, &c.)] For נראה neareh, a MS. reads ראה raah, and so the Syriac and Chaldee. "Perhaps כי נראה ki nereh is only a various reading of כי נלאה ki neelah." SECKER. A very probable conjecture.

[Verse 14. Within three years—בשלש beshalish, כשלש keshalesh, according, or in or about three years, is the reading of nine of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., and two ancient editions.

But the present reading may well stand: Now, the LORD hath spoken, saying, Within three years, as the years of an hireling.—It seems as if this prophecy had been delivered before, without any time specified for its fulfilment: but now the time is determined—in three years, as the years of a hireling—for, as a hireling counts even to a single day, and will not abide with his employer an hour beyond the time agreed on; so, in three years, even to a day, from the delivery of this Prophecy, shall destruction come upon Moab. This is the import of the present Text: but if we take כשלש ke-shalosh, AS in three years, or in about three years' time, the prophecy is not so definite.

These three years says Calmet, are mentioned from the death of Ahaz, (see chap. xiv. 28.) and end the third year of Hezekiah, three years before the taking of Samaria by Shalemnezer. This conqueror did not ruin Moab so completely as not to leave a man in the land; the final desolation of Moab was reserved for Nebuchadnezzar, five years after the taking of Jerusalem.]

Feeble—(And without strength)] An ancient MS., with the Septuagint read ולא velo, and not.

This prophecy by its title should relate only to Damascus: but it full as much concerns, and more largely treats of, the kingdom of Samaria and the Israelites, confederated with Damascus and the Syrians against the kingdom of Judah. It was delivered probably soon after the prophecies of the seventh and eighth chapters, in the beginning of the reign of Ahaz; and was fulfilled by Tiglath Pileser's taking Damascus, and carrying the people captives to Kir, (2 Kings xvi. 9.) and overrunning great part of the kingdom of Israel, and carrying a great number of the Israelites also captives to Assyria; and still more fully in regard to Israel, by the conquest of the kingdom, and the captivity of the people, effected a few years after by Shalmaneser.

NOTES ON CHAP. XVII.

[Verse 1. The burden of Damascus—According to the common Version, The cities of Aroer are forsaken—It has already been observed by the learned prelate, that the prophecy, as it relates to Damascus, was executed in the beginning of the reign of Ahaz, probably about the third year. If we credit Midrash, the Damascenes were the most extensive and flagrant of all idolaters. "There were in Damascus three hundred and sixty-five streets, in each of these was an idol, and each idol had his peculiar day of worship; so that the whole were worshipped in the course of the year."—This, or any thing like this, was a sufficient reason for this city's destruction.]

A ruinous heap.] For מעי mêi, a ruinous heap, the Septuagint reads לע le-êi, for a ruin, the Vulgate כעי ke-êi, as a ruin. I follow the former.

Verse 2. The cities of Aroer are forsaken—(The cities are deserted for ever)] What has Aroer on the river Arnon to do with Damascus? and if there be another Aroer on the northern border of the tribe of Gad, (as Reland seems to think there might be,) this is not much more to the purpose. Besides, the cities of Aroer, if Aroer itself is a city, makes no good sense. The Septuagint, for ערער âroêr, read ערי ער âdi âd, εις τον αιωνα, for ever, or for a long duration. The Chaldee takes the word for a verb from ערה ârah, translating it חרבו cherebu, devastabantur, [they shall be wasted.] The Syriac read ערועיר âdoêir. So that the reading is very doubtful. I follow the Septuagint as making the plainest sense.

Verse 3. The remnant of Syria—(The pride of Syria)] For שאר shaar, remnant, Houbigant reads שאת sheath, the pride, answering, as the sentence seems evidently to require, to כבוד kebod, the glory of Israel. The conjecture is so very probable, that I venture to follow it.

[As the glory—בכבוד becabod, IN the glory, is the reading of eight MSS., and ten Editions.

Verse 4. In that day—That is, says Kimchi, the time when the ten tribes of Israel, which were the glory of Jacob, should be carried into captivity.]

Verse 5. As when the harvestman gathereth—(As when one gathereth)] That is, the king of Assyria shall sweep away the whole body of the people, as the reaper strippeth off the whole crop of corn; and the remnant shall be no more in proportion, than the scattered ears left to the gleaner. The valley of Rephaim near Jerusalem, was celebrated for its plentiful harvest; it is here used poetically for any fruitful country. [One MS., and one ancient Edition, has באסף beasaph, IN gathering, instead of כאסף keasaph, AS the gathering.]

7 At that day shall a man [a] look to his Maker, and his eyes shall have respect to the Holy One of Israel.

8 And he shall not look to the altars, the work of his hands, neither shall respect that which his fingers have made, either the groves, or the [b] images.

9 In that day shall his strong cities be as a forsaken bough, and an uppermost branch, which they left because of the children of Israel: and there shall be desolation.

10 Because thou hast forgotten [c] the God of thy salvation, and hast not been mindful of the rock of thy strength, therefore shalt thou plant pleasant plants, and shalt set it with strange slips.

Verse 8. The altars, the work of his hands—(The altars dedicated to the work of his hands.)] The construction of the words, and the meaning of the sentence, in this place, are not obvious: all the ancient Versions, and most of the modern, have mistaken it. The word מעשה meâseh, the work, stands in regimine with מזבחות mizbechoth, altars, not in opposition with it: it means the altars of the work of their hand; that is of the idols; which are the work of their hands. Thus Kimchi has explained it, and Le Clerc has followed him.

Verse 9. As a forsaken bough, and an uppermost branch—(the Hivites and the Amorites)] החרש והאמיר ha-choresh vehaemir. No one has ever yet been able to make any tolerable sense of these words. The translation of the Septuagint has happily preserved what seems to be the true reading of the Text, as it stood in the copies of their time; though the words are now transposed, either in the Text or in their Version; οι Αμορραιοι και οι Ευαιοι, the Amorites and the Hivites. It is remarkable that many commentators, who never thought of admitting the reading of the Septuagint, yet understand the passage as referring to that very event, which their Version expresses; so that it is plain that nothing can be more suitable to the context. My father saw the necessity of admitting this variation, at a time when it was not usual to make so free with the Hebrew Text. [Mr. Parkhurst is not satisfied with the prelate's adoption of the reading of the Septuagint, the Hivites and the Amorites. He thinks the difficult words should be thus rendered; he takes the whole verse,—And his fortified cities shall be like the leaving, or what is left, כעזובת kaâzubath, of, or in a ploughed field (החרש ha-charesh) or on a branch which they leave (coram) before the children of Israel. Which he considers a plain reference to the Mosaic laws relative to the not gleaning of their ploughed fields, vineyards, and oliveyards: but leaving עזב ôzeb, somewhat of the fruits for the poor of the land, Lev. ix. 9, 10. Deut. xxiv. 19—21. in the Hebrew. I fear that the Text is taken by storm on both interpretations. One MS. has כל עירי col âri, all the cities; and instead of החלש hachalash, of the branch, six MSS. have החרש hachodesh, of the month. But this is probably a mistake.]

Verse 10. Strange slips—(Shoots from a foreign soil)] The pleasant plants, and shoots from a foreign soil, are allegorical expressions for strange and idolatrous worship; vicious and abominable practices connected with it; reliance on human aid, and on alliances entered into with the neighbouring nations, especially Egypt: to all which the Israelites were greatly addicted; and in their expectations from which they should be grievously disappointed.

Verse 12. Woe to the multitude] The three last verses of this Chapter seem to have no relation to the foregoing prophecy, to which they are joined. It is a beautiful piece, standing singly and by itself; for neither has it any connexion with what follows: whether it stands in its right place, or not, I cannot say. It is a noble description of the formidable invasion, and of the sudden overthrow, of Sennacherib; which is intimated in the strongest terms, and the most expressive images; exactly suitable to the event.

Like the rushing of mighty waters.] Five words, three at the end of the twelfth verse, and two at the beginning of the thirteenth, are omitted in eight MSS., with the Syriac; that is, in effect, the repetition contained in the first line of ver. 13. in this translation, is not made. After having observed that it is equally easy to account for the omission of these words by a transcriber, if they are genuine, or their insertion, if they are not genuine; occasioned by his carrying his eye backwards to the word לאמים le-ummim, or forwards to ישאון yeshaon; I shall leave it to the Reader's judgment to determine whether they are genuine or not. [Instead of כהמות kehamoth, as the roaring, five MSS. and the Vulgate have כהמון kehamun, as the multitude.]

Verse 14. He is not—(He is no more)] For איננו einennu ten MSS. of Dr. Kennicott, (three ancient) ten of De Rossi, and two Editions, and the Septuagint, Syriac, Chaldee, Vulgate, and Arabic, have ואיננו ve-eineno. This particle, authenticated by so many good vouchers, restores the sentence to the true poetical form, implying a repetition of some part of the parallel line preceding, thus:—

"At the season of evening, behold terror!
Before the morning, and [behold] he is no more!"

[That spoil us—For שוסינו shoseinu, them that spoil us, fifteen MSS., one Edition, and the Syriac, have שוסנו shosano, him that spoileth us. And for לבוזינו lebozzinu, them that rob us, six MSS. and the Syriac, have לבוזנו lebozzeno, him that robbeth us: and these readings make the place answer better to Sennacherib, according to Lowth's conjecture. Though God may permit the wicked to prevail for a time against His people, yet in the end those shall be overthrown, and the glory of the Lord shall shine brightly on them that fear Him: for the earth shall be subdued, and the universe filled with his glory. Amen, and Amen!]

CHAPTER XVIII.

This Chapter contains a very obscure prophecy; possibly designed to give the Jews, and perhaps the Egyptians, whose country is supposed to be meant, 1, 2; and with whom many Jews resided, an intimation of God's interposition in favour of Sion, 3, 4; and of His counsels in regard to the destruction of their common enemy, Sennacherib, whose vast army, just as he thought his projects ripe, and ready to be crowned with success, 5; should become a prey to the beasts of the field, and to the fowls of heaven, 6; and that Egypt should be grateful to God for the deliverance vouchsafed her, 7.

[b] Ver. 7.—[c] Or, outspread and polished.

This is one of the most obscure prophecies in the whole Book of Isaiah. The subject of it, the end and design of it, the people to whom it is addressed, the history to which it belongs, the person who sends the messengers, and the nation to whom the messengers are sent, are all obscure and doubtful.

NOTES ON CHAP. XVIII.

[Verse 1. Woe to the land—הוי ארץ Hoi arets! This interjection should be translated ho! for it is properly a particle of calling. Hoi Land! Attend,—give ear.]

Shadowings with wings—(The winged cymbal)] צלצל כנפים tsiltsel canaphayim. I adopt this as the most probable of the many interpretations that have been given of these words. It is Bochart's: see Phaleg. iv. 2. The Egyptian sistrum is expressed by a periphrasis; the Hebrews had no name for it in their language, not having in use the instrument itself. The cymbal they had; an instrument in its use and sound not much unlike to the sistrum; and to distinguish from it the sistrum, they called it the cymbal with wings. The cymbal was a round hollow piece of metal, which being struck against another, gave a ringing sound: the sistrum was a round instrument, consisting of a broad rim of metal, through which from side to side ran several loose laminæ, or small rods of metal, which being shaken, gave a like sound. These, projecting on each side, had somewhat of the appearance of wings; or might be very properly expressed by the same word which the Hebrews used for wings, or for the extremity, or a part of any thing projecting. The sistrum is given in a medal of Adrian, as the proper attribute of Egypt. See Addison on Medals, Series iii. No. 4. where the figure of it may be seen. [The frame of the sistrum was in shape rather like the ancient lyre; it was not round.

If we translate shadowing with wings, it may allude to the multitude of its vessels, whose sails may be represented under the notion of wings. The second verse seems to support this interpretation. Vessels of bulrushes, גמא gomé, or rather the flag papyrus, so much celebrated as the substance on which people wrote in ancient times, and from which our paper is denominated. The sails might have been made of this flag: but whole canoes were constructed from it. Mat sails are used to the present day in China. The Vulgate fully understood the meaning of the word; and has accordingly translated in vasis papyri, "in vessels of papyrus." Reshi vesselis. Old MS. Bib. This interpretation does not please Bp. Lowth, and for his dissent he gives the following reasons :—]

In opposition to other interpretations of these words, which have prevailed, it may be briefly observed that צלצל tsiltsel is never used to signify shadow, nor כנף canaph applied to the sails of ships.

If, therefore, the words are rightly interpreted the winged cymbal, meaning the sistrum, Egypt must be the country to which the prophecy is addressed. And upon this hypothesis the version and explanation must proceed. I further suppose, that the prophecy was delivered before Sennacherib's return from his Egyptian expedition, which took up three years; and that it was designed to give to the Jews, and perhaps likewise to the Egyptians, an intimation of God's counsels in regard to the destruction of their great and powerful enemy.

Which is beyond the rivers of Æthiopia—(Which borders on the rivers of Cush)] What are the rivers of Cush, whether the eastern branches of the lower Nile, the boundary of Egypt towards Arabia, or the parts of the upper Nile towards Æthiopia, it is not easy to determine. The word מעבר meêber signifies either on this side, or on the further side: I have made use of the same kind of ambiguous expression in the translation.

Verse 2. In vessels of bulrushes—(In vessels of papyrus)] This circumstance agrees perfectly well with Egypt. It is well known that the Egyptians commonly used on the Nile a light sort of ships, or boats, made of the reed papyrus. Ex ipso quidem papyro navigia texunt. PLIN. xiii. 11.

Conseritur bibula Memphitis cymba papyro.
LUCAN, iv. 136.

Go, ye swift messengers] To this nation before mentioned, who, by the Nile, and by their numerous canals, have the means of spreading the report in the most expeditious manner through the whole country: go, ye swift messengers, and carry this notice of God's designs in regard to them. By the swift messengers are meant not any particular persons specially appointed to this office, but any the usual conveyers of news whatsoever, travellers, merchants, and the like, the instruments and agents of common fame. These are ordered to publish this declaration made by the prophet throughout Egypt, and to all the world; and to excite their attention to the promised visible interposition of God.

Scattered—(Stretched out in length)] Egypt, that is, the fruitful part of it, exclusive of the deserts on each side, is one long vale, through the middle of which runs the Nile, bounded on each side to the east and west by a chain of mountains seven hundred and fifty miles in length; in breadth from one to two or three days' journey: even at the widest part of the Delta, from Pelusium to Alexandria, not above two hundred and fifty miles broad. Egmont and Hayman, and Pococke's Travels.

Peeled—(Smoothed)] Either relating to the practice of the Egyptian priests, who made their bodies smooth by shaving off their hair, (see Herod. ii. 37.) or rather to the country's being made smooth, perfectly plain and level by the overflowing of the Nile.

Meted out—(Meted out by line)] It is generally referred to the frequent necessity of having recourse to mensuration in Egypt, in order to determine the boundaries after the inundations of the Nile; to which even the origin of the science of geometry is by some ascribed. Strabo, lib. xvii. sub init.

Trodden down] Supposed to allude to a peculiar method of tillage in use among the Egyptians. Both Herodotus (lib. ii.) and Diodorus (lib. i.) say that when the Nile had retired within its banks, and the ground became somewhat dry, they sowed their land, and then sent in their cattle (their hogs, says the former,) to tread in the seed; and without any further care expected the harvest.

The rivers have spoiled—(The rivers have nourished)] The word בזאו bazeu is generally taken to be an irregular form for בזזו bazazu, "have spoiled," as four MSS. have it in this place; and so most of the Versions, both ancient and modern, understand it. On which Schultens, Gram. Heb. p. 491. has the following remark:—"Ne minimam quidem speciem veri habet בזאו bazau. Esai. xxiii. 2. elatum pro בזזו bazazu, diripiunt. Hæc esset anomalia, cui nihil simile in toto linguæ ambitu. In talibus nil finire, vel fateri ex merâ agi conjecturâ, tutius justiusque. Radicem בזא baza, olim extare potuisse, quis neget? Si cognatum quid sectandum erat, ad בזה bazah contemsit, potius decurrendum fuisset: ut בזאו bazau, pro בזו bazu sit enuntiatum, vel בזיו baziv. Digna phrasis, flumina contemnunt terram, i. e. inundant." "בזא baza, Arab. extulit se superbius, item subjecit sibi: unde præt. pl. בזאו bazeu, subjecerunt sibi, i. e. inundarunt." Simonis Lexic. Heb.

my rest, and I will [a] consider in my dwelling place like a clear heat [b] upon herbs, and like a cloud of dew in the heat of harvest.

5 For afore the harvest, when the bud is perfect, and the sour grape is ripening in the flower, he shall both cut off the sprigs with pruning hooks, and take away and cut down the branches.

[b] Or, after rain.

of the word. בוא baza, Syr. and ביוא beiza, Chald. signifies uber, "a dug," mamma, "a breast;" agreeably to which the verb might signify to nourish. This would perfectly well suit with the Nile: whereas nothing can be more discordant than the idea of spoiling and plundering; for to the inundation of the Nile, Egypt owed every thing; the fertility of the soil, and the very soil itself. Besides, the overflowing of the Nile came on by gentle degrees, covering without laying waste the country. Mira æque natura fluminis, quod cum cæteri omnes abluant terras et evicerent, Nilus tanto cæteris major adeo nihil exedit, nec abradit, ut contra adjiciat vires; minimumque in eo sit, quod solum temperet. Illato enim limo arenas saturat ac jungit; debetque illi Ægyptus non tantum fertilitatem terrarum, sed ipsas. Seneca, Nat. Quæst. iv. 2. I take the liberty, therefore, which Schultens seems to think allowable in this place, of hazarding a conjectural interpretation.

Verse 3. When he lifteth up an ensign—(When the standard is lifted up)] I take God to be the Agent in this verse: and that by the standard and the trumpet are meant the meteors, the thunder, the lightning, the storm, earthquake, and tempest, by which Sennacherib's army shall be destroyed, or by which at least the destruction of it shall be accompanied; as it is described in chap. xxix. 6. and xxx. 30, 31. and x. 16, 17. See also Psa. lxxvi., and the title of it, according to the Septuagint, Vulgate, and Æthiopic. They are called, by a bold metaphor, the standard lifted up, and the trumpet sounded. The latter is used by Homer, I think, with great force, in his introduction to the battle of the gods; though I find it has disgusted some of the minor critics:—

Βραχε δ' ευρεια χθων,
Αμφι δε σαλπιγξεν μεγας ουρανος Il. xxi. 388.

"Heav'n in loud thunders bids the trumpet sound,
And wide beneath them groans the rending ground."
POPE.

Verse 4. For so the Lord said unto me—(For thus hath JEHOVAH said unto me)] The subject of the remaining part of this chapter is, that God would comfort and support His own people, though threatened with immediate destruction by the Assyrians; that Sennacherib's great designs and mighty efforts against them should be frustrated; and that his vast expectations should be rendered abortive when he thought them mature, and just ready to be crowned with success; that the chief part of his army should be made a prey for the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air, (for this is the meaning of the allegory continued through the fifth and sixth verses;) and that Egypt, being delivered from his oppression, and avenged by the hand of God of the wrongs which he had suffered, should return thanks for the wonderful deliverance, both of herself and of the Jews, from this most powerful adversary.

Like a clear heat—(Like the clear heat)] The same images are employed by an Arabian poet:

Solis more fervens, dum frigus; quumque ardet
Strius, tum vero frigus ipse et umbra.

Which is illustrated in the note by a like passage from another Arabian poet:—

Calor est hyeme, refrigerium æstate.

Excerpta ex Hamasa; published by Schultens, at the end of Erpenius' Arabic Grammar, p. 425.

Upon herbs—(After rain)] "אור or, here signifies rain, according to what is said Job xxxvi. 11., The cloud scatters his rain." Kimchi. In which place of Job the Chaldee paraphrast does indeed explain אורו oro by מטריה materiah; and so again ver. 21., and chap. xxxvi. 30. This meaning of the word seems to make the best sense in this place; it is to be wished that it were better supported.

In the heat of harvest—(In the day of harvest)] For בחם bechom, in the heat, fourteen MSS. (several ancient,) the Septuagint, Syriac, Arabic, and Vulgate, read ביום beyom, in the day. The mistake seems to have arisen from כחם kechom in the line above.

Verse 5. The flower—(The blossom)] Heb. her blossom; נצה nitsah, that is, the blossom of the vine, גפן gephan, vine, understood, which is of the common gender. See Gen. xl. 10. Note, that by the defective punctuation of this word, many interpreters, and our translators among the rest have been led into a grievous mistake, (for how can the swelling grape become a blossom?) taking the word נצה nitsah for the predicate; whereas it is the subject of the proposition, or the nominitive case to the verb.

[b] Or, outspread and polished: see ver. 2.

Verse 7. The present—(A gift)] The Egyptians were in alliance with the kingdom of Judah, and were fellow-sufferers with the Jews under the invasion of their common enemy Sennacherib; and so were very nearly interested in the great and miraculous deliverance of that kingdom by the destruction of the Assyrian army. Upon which wonderful event it is said, 2 Chron. xxxii. 23. that "many brought gifts unto Jehovah to Jerusalem, and presents to Hezekiah king of Judah; so that he was magnified of all nations from thenceforth." It is not to be doubted, that among these the Egyptians distinguished themselves in their acknowledgments on this occasion.

Of a people—(From a people)] Instead of עם âm, a people, the Septuagint and Vulgate read מעם meâm, from a people, which is confirmed by a repetition of it in the next line. The difference is of importance: for if this be the true reading, the prediction of the admission of Egypt into the true church of God is not so explicit as it might otherwise seem to be. However, that event is clearly foretold at the end of the next Chapter.

CHAPTER XIX.

Prophecy concerning Egypt, in which her lamentable condition under the Babylonians, Persians, &c. is forcibly pointed out, 1—17. The true religion shall be propagated in Egypt; referring primarily to the great spread of Judaism in that country in the reign of the Ptolemies, and ultimately to its reception of the gospel in the latter days, 18—22. Profound peace between Egypt, Assyria, and Israel, and their blessed condition under the gospel, 23—25.

Not many years after the destruction of Sennacherib's army before Jerusalem, by which the Egyptians were freed from the yoke with which they were threatened by so powerful an enemy, who had carried on a successful war of three years' continuance against them; the affairs of Egypt were again thrown into confusion by intestine broils among themselves, which ended in a perfect anarchy, that lasted some few years. This was followed by an aristocracy, or rather tyranny, of twelve princes, who divided the country between them, and at last by the sole dominion of Psammitichus, which he held for fifty-four years. Not long after that, followed the invasion and conquest of Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar; and then by the Persians under Cambyses, the son of Cyrus. The yoke of the Persians was so grievous that the conquest of the Persians by Alexander may well be considered as a deliverance to Egypt; especially as he and his successors greatly favoured the people, and improved the country. To all these events the prophet seems to have had a view in this Chapter; and in particular, from ver. 18. the prophecy of the propagation of the true religion in Egypt seems to point to the flourishing state of Judaism in that country, in consequence of the great favours hown to the Jews by the Ptolemies. Alexander himself settled a great many Jews in his new city of Alexandria, granting them privileges equal to those of the Macedonians. The first Ptolemy, called Soter, carried great numbers of them thither; and gave them such encouragement that still more of them were collected there from different parts; so that Philo reckons that in his time there were a million of Jews in that country. These worshipped the God of their fathers; and

NOTES ON CHAP. XIX.

[Verse 3. They shall seek to the idols, and to the charmers, and to them that have familiar spirits, and to the wizards.—And thei schul aske their symulacres, and their devynours, and their devyl clepers, and their devyl sacrifiers. Old Bib. The import of the original words has already been given where they occur in the Pentateuch. See Deut. xviii. 10, &c.

Verse 4. A cruel lord—(Cruel lords)] Nebuchadnezzar in the first place, and afterwards the whole succession of Persian kings, who in general were hard masters, and grievously oppressed the country. Note, that for קשה kasheh, lord, a MS. reads קשים kashim, lords, agreeable to which is the rendering of the Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgate.

[Verse 5. The river shall be wasted and dried up—The Nile shall not overflow its banks; and if no inundation, the land must become barren. For, as there is little or no rain in Egypt, its fertility depends on the overflowing of the Nile.]

Verse 6. Shall turn the rivers far away—(shall become putrid)] האזניחו heeznichu. This sense of the word, which Simonis gives in his Lexicon, from the meaning of it in Arabic, suits the place much better than any other interpretation hitherto given. And that the word in Hebrew had some such signification is probable from 2 Chron. xxix. 19. where the Vulgate renders it by polluit, "polluted," and the Targum by profaned, and made abominable, which the context in that place seems plainly to require. The form of the verb here is very irregular; and the Rabbins and grammarians seem to give no probable account of it.

Verse 8. The fishers also—(And the fishers)] There was great plenty of fish in Egypt, see Numb. xi. 5. "The Nile," says Diodorus, lib. i. "abounds with incredible numbers of all sorts of fish." And much more the lakes. So Egmont, Pococke, &c.

[Verse 9. They that work in fine flax—פשתים שריקות pashtim sericoth, heckled flax, i. e. flax dressed on the heckle, or comb used for that purpose. The Vulgate uses the word pectentes, "combing."

They that weave networks shall be confounded—And confounden schul ben that wrogten flax, plattinge and wevynge sotel thingis. Old MS.]

Verse 10. And they shall be broken, &c.—(Her stores)] שתתיה shatoteiyah, αποθηκαι, granaries. Aquila.

All that make sluices and ponds for fish—(All that make a gain of pools for fish)] This obscure line is rendered by different interpreters in very different manners. Kimchi explains אגמי agemey as if it were the same with עגמה agemah, from Job xxx. 25., in which he is followed by some of the Rabbins, and supported by the Septuagint: and שכר seker, which I translate gain, and which some take for nets, or inclosures, the Septuagint render by ζυθον, strong drink, or beer, which, it is well known was much used in Egypt: and so likewise the Syriac, retaining the Hebrew word שכרא sekera. I submit these very different interpretations to the Reader's judgment. The Version of the Septuagint is as follows: Και παντες οι ποιουντες τον ζυθον λυπηθησονται, και τας ψυχας πονεσουσι, "And all they that make barley-wine shall mourn, and be grieved in soul."

Verse 11. The counsels of the wise counsellors of Pharaoh is become brutish—(Have counselled a brutish counsel)] The sentence, as it now stands in the Hebrew, is imperfect: it wants the verb. Archbishop Secker conjectures that the become brutish: how say ye unto Pharaoh, I am the son of the wise, the son of ancient kings?

12 [a] Where are they: where are thy wise men? and let them tell thee now, and let them know what the LORD of hosts hath purposed upon Egypt.

13 The princes of Zoan are become fools, [b] the princes of Noph are deceived; they have also seduced Egypt, even [c] they [d] that are the stay of the tribes thereof.

14 The LORD hath mingled [e] a [f] perverse spirit in the midst thereof: and they have caused Egypt to err in every work thereof, as a drunken man staggereth in his vomit.

words יועצי פרעה yoâtsey pharôh should be transposed; which would in some degree remove the difficulty. But it is to be observed, thatthe translator of the Vulgate seems to have found in his copy the verb יעצו yeâtsu, added after פרעה pharôh: Sapientes consiliarii Pharaonis dederunt consilium insipiens, [The wise counsellors of Pharaoh gave unwise counsel.] This is probably the true reading: it is perfectly agreeable to the Hebrew idiom, makes the construction of the sentence clear, and renders the transposition of the words above-mentioned unnecessary.

Verse 12. (Let them come)] Here too a word seems to have been left out of the Text. After חכמיך chakameyca, thy wise men, two MSS. (one ancient) add יבאו yibau, let them come: which, if we consider the form and the construction of the sentence, has very much the appearance of being genuine: otherwise the connective conjunction at the beginning of the next member is not only superfluous but embarrassing. See also the Version of the Septuagint in which the same deficiency is manifest.

Let them tell thee now—(And let them declare)] "For ידעו yadêu, let them know, perhaps we ought to read, יודיעו yodiêu, let them make known." Secker. The Septuagint and Vulgate favour this reading ειπατωσαν, let them declare.

Verse 13. Are deceived—(They have caused, &c.)] The Text has והתעו ve-hithêu, AND they have caused to err. Fifty [of Kennicott's MSS. fifty-three of De Rossi's, and one of my own, ancient] thirty-two Editions, and the Vulgate and Chaldee, omit the ו vau, and.

Stay—(Pillars)] פנת pinnath, to be pointed as plural pinnoth, without doubt. So Grotius, and so the Chaldee.

Verse 14. In the midst thereof] "בקרבם bekirbam; so the Septuagint, and perhaps more correctly." Secker. So likewise the Chaldee.

[Verse 15. The head or tail, branch or rush—R. D. Kimchi says, there are some who suppose that these words mean the Dragon's head and tail; and refer to all those who are conversant in astronomy, astrology, &c.]

Verse 16. Shall Egypt be—(The Egyptians shall be)] יהיו yehiu, plural, MS. Bodl. Septuagint, and Chaldee. This is not proposed as an emendation, for either form is proper.

Verse 17. And the land of Judah] The threatening hand of God will be held out and shaken over Egypt, from the side of Judea; through which the Assyrians will march to invade it. Five MSS. and two Editions have לחגה lechagah.

Verse 18. The city of destruction—(The City of the Sun)] עיר החרס îr ha-cheres. This passage is attended with much difficulty and obscurity. First, in regard to the true reading. It is well known that Onias applied it to his own views, either to procure from the king of Egypt permission to build his temple in the Hieropolitan Nome, or to gain credit and authority to it when built; from the notion which he industriously propagated, that Isaiah had in this place prophesied of the building of such a temple. He pretended that the very place where it should be built was expressly named by the prophet, עיר החרס îr ha-cheres, the city of the sun. This possibly may have been the original reading. The present Text has עיר ההרס îr ha-heres, the city of destruction: which some suppose to have been introduced into the Text by the Jews of Palestine afterwards, to express their detestation of the place, being much offended with this schismatical temple in Egypt. Some think the latter to have been the true reading; and that the prophet himself gave this turn to the name out of contempt, and to intimate the demolition of this Hieropolitan temple; which in effect was destroyed by Vespasian's orders, after that of Jerusalem. "Videtur propheta consulto scripsisse הרס heres, pro חרס cheres, ut alibi scribitur בית און beith aven pro בית אל beith el; איש בשת ish bosheth pro איש בעל ish baâl, &c. designedly wrote הרס heres, destruction, for חרס cheres, the sun: as elsewhere בית און beith aven, the house of iniquity, is written for בית אל beith el, the house of God; איש בשת ish bosheth for איש בעל ish baâl, &c.] But on supposition that עיר החרס âir ha-heres is the true reading, others understand it differently. The word הרס heres in Arabic signifies a lion; and Conrad Ikenius has written a dissertation (Dissert. Philol. Theol. XVI.) to prove that the place here mentioned is not Heliopolis, as it is commonly supposed to be, but Leontopolis in the Heliopolitan Nome, as it is indeed called in the letter, whether real or pretended, of Onias to Ptolemy, which Josephus has inserted in his Jewish Antiquities, lib. xiii. c. 3. And I find that several persons of great learning and judgment think that Ikenius has proved the point beyond contradiction. See Christian. Muller. Satura Observ. Philolog. Michaelis Bibliothek Oriental, Part v. p. 171. But, after all, I believe that neither Onias, nor Heliopolis, nor Leontopolis, has any thing to do with this subject. The application of this place of Isaiah to Onias' purpose seems to have been a mere invention; and, in consequence of it, there may perhaps have been some unfair management to accommodate the Text to that purpose; which has been carried even further than the Hebrew Text: for the Greek version has here been either translated from a corrupted text, or wilfully mistranslated or corrupted, to serve the same cause. The place is there called πολις Ασεδεκ, the city of righteousness; a name apparently contrived by Onias' party to give credit to their temple, which was to rival that of Jerusalem. Upon the whole, the true reading of the Hebrew text in this place is very uncertain; fifteen MSS. and seven Editions have חרס cheres, the city of Hacheris, or, of the sun. So likewise Symmachus, the Vulgate, Arabic, Septuagint, and Complutensian. On the other hand, Aquila Theodotion, and the Syriac, read הרס heres, destruction; the Chaldee paraphrase takes in both readings.

The reading of the Text being so uncertain, no one can pretend to determine what the city was that is here mentioned by name; much less to determine what the four other cities were which the prophet does not name. I take the whole passage, from the 18th verse to the end of the chapter, to contain a general intimation of the future propagation of the knowledge of the true God in Egypt and Syria, under the successors of Alexander; and, in consequence of this propagation, of the early reception of the gospel in the same countries when it should be published to the world. See further on this subject Prideaux, Connect. An. 145. Dr. Owen's Inquiry into the present state of the Septuagint version, p. 41., and Bryant's Observations on Ancient History, p. 124.

[Verse 19. An altar to the LORD—צבאות tsebaoth, of hosts. or Jehovah tsebaoth, is added by eight MSS. of good repute, and the Syriac version.

Verse 23. Shall there be a highway—Under the latter kings of Persia, and under Alexander, Egypt, Judea, and Assyria, lived peaceably under the same government: and were on such friendly terms that there was a regular uninterrupted intercourse between them, so that the Assyrian came into Egypt, and the Egyptian into Assyria:—and Israel became the third, i. e. was in strict union with the other two; and was a blessing to both, as affording them some knowledge of the true God, ver. 24.

Verse 25. Blessed be Egypt—Assyria—and Israel—All these countries shall be converted to the Lord. Concerning Egypt, it was said, chap. xviii. 7. that it should bring gifts to the Lord at Jerusalem. Here it is predicted, ver. 19., that there shall be an altar to the Lord in Egypt itself;—and that they, with the Assyrians, shall become the people of God with the Israelites. This remains partly to be fulfilled. These countries shall be all, and perhaps at no very distant time from this, converted to the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ.]

NOTES ON CHAP. XX.

Tharthan besieged Ashdod, or Azotus, which probably belonged at this time to Hezekiah's dominions, see 2 Kings xviii. 8. The people expected to be relieved by the Cushites of Arabia, and by the Egyptians. Isaiah was ordered to go uncovered, that is, without his upper garment, the rough mantle commonly worn by the prophets, (see Zech. xiii. 4.) probably three days, to show that within three years the town should be taken, after the defeat of the Cushites and Egyptians by the king of Assyria, which event should make their case desperate, and induce them to surrender. Azotus was a strong place: it afterwards held out twenty-nine years against Psammitichus, king of Egypt, Herod. ii. 157. Tharthan was one of Sennacherib's generals, 2 Kings xviii. 17. and Tirhakah, king of the Cushites, was in alliance with the king of Egypt against Sennacherib. These circumstances make it probable, that by Sargon is meant Sennacherib. It might be one of the seven names by which Jerom, on this place, says he was called. He is called Sacherdonus and Sacherdan in the book of Tobit. The taking of Azotus must have happened before Sennacherib's attempt on Jerusalem; when he boasted of his late conquests, chap. xxxvii. 25. And the warning of the prophet had a principal respect to the Jews also, who were too much inclined to depend upon the assistance of Egypt. As to the rest, history and chronology affording us no light, it may be impossible to clear either this or any other hypothesis, (which takes Sargon to be Shalmaneser, or Asarhaddon, &c.) from all difficulties. [Kimchi says, this happened in the fourteenth year of Hezekiah.]

Verse 2. Walking naked and barefoot] It is not probable that the prophet walked uncovered and barefoot for three years: his appearing in that manner was a sign that within three years the Egyptians and Cushites should be in the same condition, being conquered and made captives by the king of Assyria. The time was denoted, as well as the event: but his appearing in that manner for three whole years could give no premonition of the time at all. It is probable, therefore, that the prophet was ordered to walk so for three days to denote the accomplishment of the event in three years; a day for a year, according to the prophetical rule, Numb. xiv. 34. Ezek. iv. 6. The words שלש ימים shalosh yamim, three days, may possibly have been lost out of the Text, at the end of the second verse, after יחף yachaph, barefoot; or after the same word in the third verse, where, in the Alexandrine and Vatican copies of the Septuagint, and in MSS. P achom, and 1 D. 11. the words τρια ετη, three years, are twice expressed. Perhaps instead of שלש ימים shalosh yamim, three days, the Greek translator might read שלש שנים shalosh shanim, three years, by his own mistake, or by that of his copy, after יחף yachaph in the third verse, for which stands the first τρια ετη, three years in the Alexandrine and Vatican Septuagint, and in the two MSS. above mentioned. [It is most probable that Isaiah's walking naked and barefoot was done in a vision; as was probably that of the prophet Hosea, taking a wife of whoredoms. None of these things can well be taken literally.

From thy foot—רגלך regeleica, thy feet, is the reading of thirty-four of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. four ancient Editions, with the Septuagint, Syriac, Vulgate, and Arabic.]

[c] Ch. 33. 1.——[d] Ch. 13. 17. Jer. 49. 34.

The first ten verses of this Chapter contain a prediction of the taking of Babylon by the Medes and Persians. It is a passage singular in its kind for its brevity and force, for the variety and rapidity of the movements, and for the strength and energy of colouring with which the action and event are painted. It opens with the prophet's seeing at a distance the dreadful storm that is gathering, and ready to burst upon Babylon. The event is intimated in general terms, and God's orders are issued to the Persians and Medes to set forth upon the expedition which He has given them in charge. Upon this the prophet enters into the midst of the action; and in the person of Babylon expresses in the strongest terms the astonishment and horror that seizes her on the sudden surprise of the city at the very season dedicated to pleasure and festivity, ver. 3, 4. Then in his own person describes the situation of things there; the security of the Babylonians; and in the midst of their feasting the sudden alarm of war, ver. 5. The event is then declared in a very singular manner. God orders the prophet to set a watchman to look out, and to report what he sees: he sees two companies marching onward, representing by their appearance the two nations that were to execute God's orders; who declare that Babylon is fallen, ver. 6—9.

But what is this to the prophet, and to the Jews, the object of his ministry? The application, the end, and design of the prophecy are admirably given in a short expressive address to the Jews, partly in the person of God, partly in that of the prophet: "O my threshing—" "O my people, whom for your punishment I shall make subject to the Babylonians, to try and to prove you, and to separate the chaff from the corn, the bad from the good among you; hear this for your consolation: your punishment, your slavery and oppression, will have an end in the destruction of your oppressors."

NOTES ON CHAP. XXI.

Verse 1. The desert of the sea] This plainly means Babylon, which is the subject of the prophecy. The country about Babylon, and especially below it towards the sea, was a great flat morass, often overflowed by the Euphrates and Tigris. It became habitable by being drained by the many canals that were made in it.

Herodotus, lib. i. 184. says, that "Semiramis confined the Euphrates within its channel by raising great dams against it; for before it overflowed the whole country like a sea." And Abydenus, (quoting Megasthenes, apud Euseb. Præp. Evang. IX. 41.) speaking of the building of Babylon by Nebuchadonosor, "it is reported that all this part was covered with water, and was called the sea; and that Belus drew off the waters, conveying them into proper receptacles, and surrounded Babylon with a wall." When the Euphrates was turned out of its channel by Cyrus, it was suffered still to drown the neighbouring country; the Persian government, which did not favour the place, taking no care to remedy this inconvenience, it became in time a great barren morassy desert, which event the title of the prophecy may perhaps intimate. Such it was originally,—such it became after the taking of the city by Cyrus,—and such it continues to this day.

As whirlwinds in the south—(Like the southern tempests)] The most vehement storms to which Judea was subject came from the great desert country to the south of it. "Out of the south cometh the whirlwind." Job xxxvii. 9. "And there came a great wind from the wilderness, and smote the four corners of the house." Job. i. 19. For the situation of Idumea, the country (as I suppose) of Job, (see Lam. iv. 21. compared with Job. i. 1.) was the same in this respect with that of Judea.

"And JEHOVAH shall appear over them,
And His arrow shall go forth as the lightning;
And the Lord JEHOVAH shall sound the trumpet;
And shall march in the whirlwinds of the south."
Zech. ix. 14.

boged ve-hashoded shoded. The MSS. vary in expressing or omitting the ו vau, in these four words. Ten MSS. of Kennicott are without the ו vau, in the second word, and eight MSS. are without the ו vau, in the fourth word: which justifies Symmachus, who has rendered them passively: ὁ αθετων αθετειται, και ὁ ταλαιπωριζων ταλαιπωρει. He read בגיד שרוד begod shedod. Cocceius (Lexicon in voce) observes, that the Chaldee very often renders the verb בגד bagad, by בזז bazaz, he spoiled; and in this place, and in xxxiii. 1. by the equivalent word אנס anas, to press, give trouble; and in chap. xxiv. 16. both by אנס anas, and בזז bazaz: and the Syriac in this place renders it by טלם talam, he oppressed.

All the sighing thereof have I made to cease—(I have put an end to all her vexations)] Heb. her sighing: that is, the sighing caused by her. So Kimchi on the place; [" It means those who groaned through fear of him: for the suffixes of the nouns refer both to the agent and the patient. All those who groaned before the face of the king of Babylon, he caused to rest."] Chald. And so likewise Ephræm Syr. in loc. edit. Assemani: [" His groans, viz. the grief and tears which the Chaldeans occasioned through the rest of the nations."]

Verse 5. Prepare the table—(The table is prepared)] In Hebrew the verbs are in the infinitive mood absolute; as in Ezek. i. 14. " And the animals ran and returned, רצוא ושוב ratso ve-shob, like the appearance of lightning:" just as the Latins say, currere et reverti, for currebant et revertebantur. See chap. xxxii. 11. and the note there.

[Arise, ye princes, and anoint the shield—Kimchi observes, that several of the Rabbins understood this of Belshazzar's impious feast and death. The king of a people is termed the shield; because he is their defence. The command anoint the shield, is the same with anoint a new king. Belshazzar being now suddenly slain, while they were all eating and drinking, he advises the princes, whose business it was, to make speed and anoint another in his stead.]

Verse 7. And he saw a chariot, &c.—(And he saw a chariot with two riders; A rider on an ass, a rider on a camel)] This passage is extremely obscure from the ambiguity of the term רכב receb, which is used three times; and which signifies a chariot, or any other vehicle, or the rider in it; or a rider on a horse, or any other animal; or a company of chariots, or riders. The prophet may possibly mean a cavalry in two parts, with two sorts of riders; riders on asses or mules, and riders on camels; or led on by two riders, one on an ass, and one on a camel. However, so far it is pretty clear, that Darius and Cyrus, the Medes and the Persians, are intended to be distinguished by the two riders, on the two sorts of cattle. It appears from Herodotus, i. 80. that the baggage of Cyrus' army was carried on camels. In his engagement with Crœsus, he took off the baggage from the camels, and mounted his horsemen upon them: the enemy's horses, offended with the smell of the camels, turned back and fled.

Verse 8. And he cried, A lion—(He that looked out on the watch)] The present reading אריה ariyeh, a lion, is so unintelligible, and the mistake so obvious, that I make no doubt that the true reading is הראה haraeh, the seer; as the Syriac translator manifestly found it in his copy, who renders it by דוקא duka, a watchman.

Verse 9. Here cometh a chariot of men, &c.—(A man, one of the two riders)] So the Syriac understands it; and Ephræm Syr.

Verse 10. O my threshing] " O thou, the object upon which I shall exercise the severity of my discipline; that shalt lie under my afflicting hand, like corn spread upon the floor to be threshed out and winnowed, to separate the chaff from the wheat!" The image of threshing is frequently used by the Hebrew poets with great elegance and force, to express the punishment of the wicked and the trial of the good, or the utter dispersion and destruction of God's enemies. Of the different ways of threshing in use among the Hebrews, and the manner of performing them, see the Note on chap. xxviii. 27.

Our translators have taken the liberty of using the word threshing in a passive sense, to express the object or matter that is threshed: in which I have followed them, not being able to express it more properly, without departing too much from the form and letter of the original. "Son of my floor," Heb. It is an idiom of the Hebrew language to call the effect, the object, the adjunct, any thing that belongs in almost any way to another, the son of it. "O my threshing." The prophet abruptly breaks off the speech of God; and instead of continuing it in the forms in which he had begun, and in the person of God, "This I declare unto you by my prophet;" he changes the form of address, and adds, in his own person, "This I declare unto you from God."

Verse 11. The burden of Dumah—(The oracle concerning Dumah)] "Pro דומה Dumah, Codex R. Meiri habet ארום edom; and so the Septuagint. Vid. Kimchi ad h. l." Biblia Michaelis, Halæ, 1720. not ad l. [See also De Rossi. Bishop Lowth translates the prophecy thus:

11. The oracle concerning Dumah.
A voice crieth to me from Seir:
Watchman, what from the night?
Watchman, what from the night?
12. The Watchman replieth:—
The morning cometh, and also the night.
If ye will inquire, inquire ye: come again.

This differs very little from our common Version. One of Kennicott's MSS., and one of my own, omit the repetition, Watchman, what from the night?]

This prophecy from the uncertainty of the occasion on which it was uttered, and from the brevity of the expression, is extremely obscure. The Edomites as well as Jews were subdued by the Babylonians. They enquire of the prophet, how long their subjection is to last: he intimates that the Jews should be delivered from their captivity; not so the Edomites. Thus far the interpretation seems to carry with it some degree of probability. What the meaning of the last line may be, I cannot pretend to divine. In this difficulty the Hebrew MSS. give no assistance. The MSS. of the Septuagint, and the fragments of the other Greek Versions, give some variations, but no light. This being the case, I thought it best to give an exact literal translation of the whole two verses; which may serve to enable the English Reader to judge in some measure of the foundation of the various interpretations that have been given of them.

[The burden of Dumah. R. D. Kimchi says, "His father understood this of the destruction of Dumah, (one of the cities of the Ishmaelites) by the inhabitants of Seir; and that they enquired of the prophet to know the particular time in which God had given them a commission against it. The prophet answered—The morning, the time of success to you, cometh, is just at hand: and the night, the time of utter destruction to the inhabitants of Dumah, is also ready."

I have heard the words applied in the way of general exhortation. 1. Every minister of God is a watchman. He is continually watching for the safety and interests of his people; and looking for the counsel of God, that he may be properly qualified to warn, and to comfort.—2. Such are often called to denounce heavy judgments: they have the burden of the word of the Lord to denounce against the impenitent—the backslider—the lukewarm, and the careless. —3. When the watchman threatens judgments, some are awakened, and some mock.—Watchman, what of the night? "What are the judgments thou threatenest, and when are they to take place?"—4. To this question, whether seriously or tauntingly proposed, the watchman answers: The morning cometh—there is a time of repentance granted—a morning of God's long suffering kindness now appears.—If you will enquire seriously how you are to escape God's judgments—enquire ye; continue to pray for mercy—return from your iniquities—come to God, through Christ, that ye may obtain salvation.]

Verse 13. The burden upon Arabia—(The oracle concerning Arabia)] This title is of doubtful authority. In the first place, because it is not in many of the MSS. of the Septuagint; it is in MSS. Pachom. and I. D. II. only, as far as I can find with certainty. Secondly, from the singularity of the phraseology; for משא massa, is generally prefixed to its object without a preposition, as משא בבל massa babel; and never but in this place with the preposition ב beth. Besides, as the word בערב be-ârеb, occurs at the very beginning of the prophecy itself, the first word but one, it is much to be suspected that some one, taking it for a proper name and the object of the prophecy, might note it as such by the words משא בערב massa beêreb written in the margin, from whence they might easily get into the text. The Septuagint did not take it for a proper name: but render it [εν τῳ δρυμῳ] ἑσπεραις, [in the forests, in the evening,] and so the Chaldee whom I follow: for, otherwise, the forest in Arabia is so indeterminate and vague a description, that in effect it means nothing at all. This observation might have been of good use in clearing up the foregoing very obscure prophecy, if any light had arisen from joining the two together by removing the separating title: but I see no connexion between them. [The Arabic version has, The prophecy concerning the Arabians, and the children of Chedar.]

This prophecy was to have been fulfilled within a year of the time of its delivery, see ver. 16; and it was probably delivered about the same time with the rest in this part of the book, that is, soon before or after the 14thof Hezekiah, the year of Sennacherib's invasion. In his first march into Judea, or in his return from the Egyptian expedition, he might perhaps overrun these several clans of Arabians: their distress on some such occasion is the subject of this prophecy.

Verse 14. The land of Tema—(The southern country)] Θαιμαν, Sept. Austri, Vulg. they read תימן teiman, which seems to be right. For probably the inhabitants of Tema might be involved in the same calamity with their brethren and neighbours of Kedar; and not in a condition to give them assistance, and to relieve them, in their flight before the enemy, with bread and water. To bring forth bread and water is an instance of common humanity in such cases of distress; especially in these desert countries, in which the common necessaries of life, more particularly water, are not easily to be met with or procured. Moses forbids the Ammonite and Moabite to be admitted into the congregation of the Lord to the tenth generation. One reason which he gives for this reprobation is their omission of the common offices of humanity towards the Israelites; "because they met them not with bread and water in the way, when they came forth out of Egypt." Deut. xxiii. 4.

Verse 17. The archers, the mighty men of the children of Kedar—(The mighty bowmen of the sons of Kedar)] Sagittariorum fortium, Vulg. transposing the two words, and reading גבורי קשת geburey kesheth; which seems to be right.

For the LORD—hath spoken it—(For JEHOVAH hath spoken it)] The prophetic Carmina of Marcius, foretelling the battle of Cannæ, lib. xxv. 12. conclude with the same kind of solemn form; Nam mihi ita Jupiter fatus est. [Thus hath Jupiter spoken to me.] Observe, that the word נאם naam, to pronounce, to declare, is the solemn word appropriated to the delivering of prophecies: "Behold I am against the prophets, saith (נאם naam) JEHOVAH, who use their tongues, וינאמו נאם vaiyinamu neum, and solemnly pronounce, He hath pronounced it." Jer. xxiii. 31. [What God says shall most assuredly come to pass;—He cannot be deceived.]

This prophecy, ending with the fourteenth verse of this chapter, is intituled, "The oracle concerning the Valley of Vision," by which is meant Jerusalem, because, says Sal. ben Melech, it was the place of prophecy. Jerusalem, according to Josephus, was built upon two opposite hills, Sion and Acra, separated by a valley in the midst. He speaks of another broad valley between Acra and Moriah, Bell. Jud. v. 13.; vi. 6. It was the seat of Divine revelation; the place where chiefly prophetic vision was given, and where God manifested Himself visibly in the holy place. The prophecy foretels the invasion of Jerusalem by the Assyrians under Sennacherib; or by the Chaldeans under Nebuchadnezzar. Vitringa is of opinion that the prophet has both in view; that of the Chaldeans in the first part, ver. 1—5. (which he thinks relates to the flight of Zedekiah, 2 Kings xxv. 4, 5.) and that of the Assyrians in the latter part; which agrees with the circumstances of that time, and particularly describes the preparations made by Hezekiah for the defence of the city, ver. 8—11. Compare 2 Chron. xxxii. 2—5.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXII.

Verse 1. Art—gone up to the housetops—(Are gone up to the housetops)] The houses in the East were in ancient times, as they are still generally, built in one and the same uniform manner. The roof or top of the house is always flat, covered with broad stones, or a strong plaster of terrace, and guarded on every side with a low parapet wall, see Deut. xxii. 8. The terrace is frequented as much as any part of the house. On this, as the season favours, they walk, they eat, they sleep, they transact business, (1 Sam. ix. 25. see also the Septuagint in that place,) they perform their devotions, Acts x. 9. The house is built with a court within, into which chiefly the windows open: those that open to the street are so obstructed with lattice work, that no one either without or within can see through them. Whenever therefore any thing is to be seen or heard in the streets, any public spectacle, any alarm of a public nature; every one immediately goes up to the house-top to satisfy his curiosity. In the same manner, when any one had occasion to make any thing public, the readiest and most effectual way of doing it was to proclaim it from the house-tops to the people in the streets. "What ye hear in the ear, that publish ye on the house-top," saith our Saviour, Matt. x. 27. The people's running all to the tops of their houses gives a lively image of a sudden general alarm. Sir John Chardin's MS. note on this place is as follows: Dans les fêtes pour voir passer quelque chose, et dans les maladies pour les annoncer aux voisins en allumant des lumieres, le peuple monte sur les terrasses.—[In festivals, in order to see what is going forward, and in times of sickness, in order to indicate them to neighbours by lighting of candles, the people go up to the housetop.]

Verse 3. All thy rulers—are bound by the archers—(All thy leaders—are fled from the bow)] There seems to be somewhat of an inconsistency in the sense according to the present reading. If the leaders were bound, אסרו asru, how could they flee away? for their being bound, according to the obvious construction and course of the sentence, is a circumstance prior to their flight. I therefore follow Houbigant, who reads הסרו haseru, remoti sunt, "they are gone off." גלו gelu, transmigraverunt, Chald. which seems to confirm this emendation.

Verse 6. Chariots of men—(The Syrian)] It is not easy to say what רכב אדם receb adam, a chariot of men, can mean. It seems by the form of the sentence, which consists of three members, the first and the third mentioning a particular people, that the second should do so likewise. Thus ברכב ארם ופרשים be receb aram u-perashim, with chariots the Syrian, and with horsemen: the similitude of the letters ד daleth, and ר resh, is so great, and the mistakes arising from it so frequent, that I readily adopt the correction of Houbigant, ארם aram, Syria, instead of אדם adam, man; which seems to me extremely probable. The conjunction ו vau, and, prefixed to פרשים perashim, horsemen, seems necessary, in whatever way the sentence may be taken; and it is confirmed by five MSS. (one ancient,) [four of De Rossi's, and two ancient of my own; one by correction of Verse 8. The armour—(The arsenal)] Built by Solomon within the city, and called the house of the forest of Lebanon; probably from the great quantitity of cedar from Lebanon which was employed in the building. See 1 Kings vii. 2, 3.

Verse 9. Ye gathered together the waters—(And ye shall collect the waters)] There were two pools in or near Jerusalem, supplied by springs: the upper pool, or the old pool, supplied by the spring called Gihon, 2 Chron. xxxii. 30. towards the higher part of the city, near Sion, or the city of David; and the lower pool, probably supplied by Siloam, towards the lower part. When Hezekiah was threatened with a siege by Sennacherib, he stopped up all the waters of the fountains without the city; and brought them into the city by a conduit, or subterraneous passage cut through the rock; those of the old pool, to the place where he had a double wall, so that the pool was between the two walls. This he did in order to distress the enemy, and to supply the city during the siege. This was so great a work, that not only the historians have made particular mention of it, 2 Kings xx. 20. 2 Chron. xxxii. 2, 3, 5, 30.; but the son of Sirach also has celebrated it in his encomium on Hezekiah. "Hezekiah fortified his city, and brought in water into the midst thereof: he digged the hard rock with iron, and made wells for water," Ecclus. xlviii.

Verse 11. Unto the maker thereof—(To him that hath disposed this)] That is, to God the Author and Disposer of this visitation, the invasion with which He now threatens you. The very same expressions are applied to God, and upon the same occasion, chap. xxxvii. 26.

"Hast thou not heard, of old, that I have disposed it;
And, of ancient times, that I have formed it?"

[Verse 13. Let us eat and drink; for to-morrow we shall die.—This has been the language of all those who have sought their portion in this life, since the foundation of the world.—So the poet.

Heu, heu nos miseri! quam totus homuncio nil est!
Sic erimus cuncti postquam nos auferet orcus.
Ergo vivamus dum licet esse, benè.

Alas, alas! what miserable creatures are we, only the semblances of men.—And so shall we be all when we come to die. Therefore, let us live joyfully while we may.

Domitian had an image of death hung up in his dining room, to show his guests that as life was uncertain, they should make the best of it by indulging themselves:—On this Martial, to flatter the emperor whom he stiles god, wrote the following epigram:—

Frange thoros, pete vina, tingere nardo.
Ipse jubet mortis te meminisse Deus.

Sit down to table,—drink heartily,—anoint thyself with spikenard; for god himself commands thee to remember death.

So the adage:—

Ede, bibe, lude: post mortem nulla voluptas.

Eat, drink, and play, while here ye may:
No revelry after your dying day.

St. Paul quotes the same Heathen sentiment, 1 Cor. xv. 32. Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die.

Anacreon is full in point, and from him nothing better can be expected:—

Verse 14. It was revealed in mine ears—(The voice of JEHOVAH)] The Vulgate has vox Domini; as if in his copy he had read קול יהוה kol yehovah: and, in truth, without the word קול kol, voice, it is not easy to make out the sense of the passage; as it appears from the strange versions, which the rest of the ancients (except the Chaldee) and many of the moderns, have given of it; as if the matter were revealed in, or to, the ears of JEHOVAH, εν τοις ωσι Κυριου, in the ears of the Lord, Septuagint. Vitringa translates it, revelatus est in auribus meis JEHOVAH, ["JEHOVAH hath revealed it in mine ears;"] and refers to 1 Sam. ii. 27.; iii. 21.: but the construction in those places is different, and there is no speech of God added; which here seems to want something more than the verb נגלה nigeleh, to introduce it. Compare chap. v. 9. where the text is still more imperfect.

Verse 15. Go—unto Shebna] The following prophecy concerning Shebna seems to have very little relation to the foregoing; except that it might have been delivered about the same time, and Shebna might be a principal person among those whose luxury and profaneness is severely reprehended by the prophet in the conclusion of that prophecy, ver. 11—14.

Shebna the scribe, mentioned in the history of Hezekiah, chap. xxxvi. seems to have been a different person from this Shebna, the treasurer, or steward of the household, to whom the prophecy relates. The Eliakim here mentioned was probably the person who, at the time of Sennacherib's invasion, was actually treasurer, the son of Hilkiah. If so, this prophecy was delivered, as the preceding (which makes the former part of the Chapter) plainly was, some time before the invasion of Sennacherib. As to the rest, history affords us no information.

(And say unto him)] Here are two words lost out of the Text, which are supplied by two of Dr. Kennicott's MSS., one ancient, which read ואמרת אליו ve-amarta elaiv, and thou shalt say to him; by the Septuagint και ειπον αυτῳ, and in the same manner by all the ancient Versions. It is to be observed that this passage is merely historical; and does not admit of that sort of ellipsis by which in the poetical parts a person is frequently introduced speaking, without the usual notice that what follows was delivered by him.

Verse 16. A sepulchre on high—in a rock] It has been observed before on chap. xiv. that persons of high rank in Judea, and in most parts of the East, were generally buried in large sepulchral vaults hewn out in the rock for the use of themselves and their families. The vanity of Shebna is set forth by his being so studious and careful to have his sepulchre on high; in a lofty vault, and that probably in a high situation, that it might be more conspicuous. Hezekiah was buried, למעלה lemaâlah, εν αναβασει, Sept.: in the chiefest, says our translation; rather in the highest part of the sepulchres of the sons of David, to do him the more honour, 2 Chron. xxxii. 33. There are some monuments still remaining in Persia of great antiquity, called Naksi Rustam, which give one a clear idea of Shebna's pompous design for his sepulchre. They consist of several sepulchres, each of them hewn in a high rock near the top; the front of the rock to the valley below is adorned with carved work in relievo, being the outside of the sepulchre. Some of these sepulchres are about thirty feet in the perpendicular from the valley; which is itself perhaps raised above half as much by the accumulation of the earth since they were made. See the description of them in Chardin, Pietro della Valle, Thevenot and Kempfer. Diodorus Siculus, lib. xvii. mentions these ancient monuments, and calls them the sepulchres of the kings of Persia.

Verse 22. And the key of the house of David will I lay upon his shoulder] As the robe and the baldric, mentioned in the preceding verse, were the ensigns of power and authority; so likewise was the key the mark of office, either sacred or civil. The priestess of Juno is said to be the keybearer of the goddess, κλειδουχος Ηρας. Æschyl. Suppl. 299. A female high in office under a great queen has the same title:—

Καλλιθοη κλειδουχος Ολυμπιαδος Βασιλειης.

["Callithoé was the keybearer of the Olympian queen."]

Auctor Phoronidis ap. Clem. Alex. p. 418. edit. Potter. This mark of office was likewise among the Greeks, as here in Isaiah, borne on the shoulder; the priestess of Ceres, καταμαδιαι εχε κλαιδα, [had the key on her shoulder.] Callim. Ceres, ver. 45. To comprehend how the key could be borne on the shoulder, it will be necessary to say somewhat of the form of it: but without entering into a long disquisition, and a great deal of obscure learning, concerning the locks and keys of the ancients, it will be sufficient to observe, that one sort of keys, and that probably the most ancient, was of considerable magnitude, and as to the shape very much bent and crooked. Aratus, to give his reader an idea of the form of the constellation Cassiopeia, compares it to a key. It must be owned that the passage is very obscure: but the learned Huetius has bestowed a great deal of pains in explaining it, Animadvers. in Manilii, lib. i. 355.; and I think has succeeded very well in it. Homer, Odyss. xxi. 6. describes the key of Ulysses' storehouse, as ευκαμπης, of a large curvature; which Eustathius explains by saying it was δρεπανοειδης, in shape like a reaphook. Huetius says, the constellation Cassiopeia answers to this description; the stars to the north making the curve part, that is, the principal part of the key; the southern stars the handle. The curve part was introduced into the key-hole; and, being properly directed by the handle, took hold of the bolts within, and moved them from their places. We may easily collect from this account, that such a key would lie very well upon the shoulder; that it must be of some considerable size and weight, and could hardly be commodiously carried otherwise. Ulysses' key was of brass, and the handle of ivory: but this was a royal key.—The more common ones were probably of wood. In Egypt they have no other than wooden locks and keys to this day; even the gates of Cairo have no better. Baumgarten, Peregr. i. 18. Thevenot, Part ii. ch. 10.

In allusion to the image of the key as the ensign of power, the unlimited extent of that power is expressed with great clearness as well as force by the sole and exclusive authority to open and shut. Our Saviour therefore has upon a similar occasion made use of a like manner of expression, Matt. xvi. 19. and in Rev. iii. 7., has applied to Himself the very words of the prophet.

Verse 23. A nail] In ancient times, and in the eastern countries, as the way of life, so the houses were much more simple than ours at present. They had not that quantity and variety of furniture, nor those accommodations of all sorts, with which we abound. It was convenient and even necessary for them, and it made an essential part in the building of a house, to furnish the inside of the several apartments with sets of spikes, nails, or large pegs, upon which to dispose of and hang up the several moveables and utensils in common use and proper to the apartment. These spikes they worked into the walls at the first erection of them, the walls being of such materials that they could not bear their being driven in afterwards; and they were contrived so as to strengthen the walls by binding the parts together, as well as to serve for convenience. Sir John Chardin's account of this matter is this:—"They do not drive with a hammer the nails that are put into the Eastern walls. The walls are too hard, being of brick; or if they are of clay, too mouldering:—but they fix them in the brick-work as they are building. They are large nails with square heads like dice, well made, the ends being bent so as to make them cramp-irons. They commonly place them at the windows and doors, in order to hang upon them, when they like, veils and curtains." Harmer's Observ. i. p. 191. And we may add, that they were put in other places too, in order to hang up other things of various kinds; as it appears from this place of Isaiah, and from Ezek. xv. 3. who speaks of a pin, or nail, "to hang any vessel thereon." The word used here for a nail of this sort is the same by which they express that instrument, the stake, or large pin of iron, with which they fastened down to the ground the cords of their tents. We see, therefore, that these nails were of necessary and common use, and of no small importance in all their apartments; conspicuous, and much exposed to observation: and if they seem to us mean and insignificant, it is because we are not acquainted with the thing itself, and have no name to express it by but what conveys to us a low and contemptible idea. "Grace hath been showed from the Lord our God," saith Ezra ix. 8. "to leave us a remnant to escape, and to give us a nail in his holy place:" that is, as the margin of our Bible explains it, "a constant and sure abode."

> "He that doth lodge near her [Wisdom's] house, > Shall also fasten a pin in her walls."
> Ecclus. xiv. 24.

The dignity and propriety of the metaphor appears from the prophet Zechariah's use of it:—

> "From him shall be the corner-stone, from him the nail,
> From him the battle-bow,
> From him every ruler together." Zech. x. 4.

And Mohammed, using the same word, calls Pharaoh the lord, or master, of the nails, that is, well attended by nobles and officers capable of administering his affairs. Koran, Sur. xxxviii. 11. and lxxxix. 9. So some understand this passage of the Koran. Mr. Sale seems to prefer another interpretation.

Taylor, in his Concordance, thinks יתד yited means the pillar or post that stands in the middle, and supports the tent, in which such pegs are fixed to hang their arms, &c. upon; referring to Shaw's Travels, p. 287. But יתד yited is never used, as far as appears to me, in that sense. It was indeed necessary that the pillar of the tent should have such pegs on it for that purpose: but the hanging of such things in this manner upon this pillar does not prove that יתד yited was the pillar itself.

A glorious throne—(A glorious seat)] That is, his father's house and all his own family shall be gloriously seated, shall flourish in honour and prosperity; and shall depend upon him, and be supported by him.

Verse 24. All the glory] One considerable part of the magnificence of the Eastern princes consisted in the great quantity of gold and silver vessels which they had for various uses. "Solomon's drinking vessels were of gold, and all the vessels of the house of the forest of Lebanon were of pure gold: none were of silver; it was nothing accounted of in Solomon's days." 1 Kings x. 21. "The vessels in the house of the forest of Lebanon" (the armoury of Jerusalem so called) "were two hundred targets, and three hundred shields of beaten gold." Ibid. ver. 16, 17. These were ranged in order upon the walls of the armoury, (see Cant. iv. 4.) upon pins worked into the walls on purpose, as above mentioned. Eliakim is considered as a principal stake of this sort, immoveably fastened in the wall for the support of all vessels destined for common or sacred uses; that is, as the principal support of the whole civil and ecclesiastical polity. And the consequence of his continued power will be the promotion and flourishing condition of his family and dependents, from the highest to the lowest.

Vessels of flagons—(Meaner vessels)] נבלים nebelim, seems to mean earthen vessels of common use, brittle, and of little value; (see Lam. iv. 2. Jer. xlviii. 12.) in opposition to אגנות agagoth, goblets of gold and silver used in the sacrifices. Exod. xxiv. 6.

Verse 25. The nail that is fastened] This must be understood of Shebna, as a repetition and confirmation of the sentence above denounced against him.

[What is said of Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, ver. 20—24, is very remarkable; and the literal meaning is not easy to be understood. From chap. ix. 6. and from Rev. iii. 7. it seems to belong to our Lord alone. The removal of Shebna from being over the treasure of the Lord's house, ver. 19., and the investiture of Eliakim with his robe, girdle, office, and government, ver. 20, &c. probably point out the change of the Jewish priesthood, and the proclaiming of the unchangeable priesthood of Christ. See Psa. cx. 4. Eliakim signifies the resurrection of the Lord; or, my God, he shall arise. Hilkiah signifies The Lord my portion, or lot. The key of David, shutting and opening, &c. may intend the way of salvation through Christ alone. For the hope of salvation and eternal life comes only through Eliakim, the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead.

It is said, ver. 24., They shall hang upon him all the glory of his father's house—for, in Jesus Christ dwells all the fulness of the Godhead bodily: and the offspring and the issue, הַצְּאֶצָאִים ha-tsetsaim, from יָצָא yatsa, to go out,—the suckers from the root; the side-shoots, the apostles and primitive ministers of His word. The issue, הַצְּפִיעוֹת ha-tsephiôth, probably means the issue's issue: so the Targum. The grandchildren, —all those who believe on the Lord Jesus through their word.

The nail that is fastened in a sure place shall be removed, ver. 25, Kimchi refers not to Eliakim but to Shebna, ver. 17—19. By, they shall hang upon him all vessels of small quantity and large quantity, has been understood the dependence of all souls, of all capacities, from the lowest in intellect, to the most exalted, on the Lord Jesus, as the only Saviour of all lost human spirits.

As the literal interpretation of this prophecy has not been found out, we are justified from parallel texts to consider the whole as referring to Jesus Christ, and the government of the the Church, and the redemption of the world by Him. Nor are there many prophecies which relates to Him clearer than this, taken in the above sense.]

NOTES ON CHAP. XXIII.

[Verse 1. The burden of Tyre—Tyre, a city on the coast of Syria, about lat. 32° N. was built two thousand seven hundred and sixty years before Christ. There were two cities of this name; one on the continent, and the other on an island, about half a mile from the shore: the city on the island was about four miles in circumference. Old Tyre resisted Nebuchadnezzar for thirteen years: then the inhabitants carried, so to speak, the city to the forementioned island, ver. 4. This new city held out against Alexander the Great (butcher) for seven months; who, in order to take it, was obliged to fill up the channel which separated it from the main land. In A. D. 1289 it was totally destroyed by the sultan of Egypt; and now contains only a few huts, in which about fifty or sixty wretched families exist. This desolation was foretold by this prophet, and by Ezekiel one thousand nine hundred years before it took place!]

Howl, ye ships of Tarshish] This prophecy denounces the destruction of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar. It opens with an address to the Tyrian negociators and sailors at Tarshish, (Tartessus, in Spain) a place which, in the course of their trade, they greatly frequented. The news of the destruction of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar is said to be brought to them from Chittim, the islands and coast of the Mediterranean: "for the Tyrians," says Jerom on ver. 6. "when they saw they had no other means of escaping, fled in their ships, and took refuge in Carthage and in the islands of the Ionian and Ægean sea." From whence the news would spread and reach Tarshish: so also Jarchi on the same place. This seems to be the most probable interpretation of this verse.

Verse 2. Be still—(Be silent)] Silence is a mark of grief and consternation. See chap. xlvii. 5. Jeremiah has finely expressed this image:—

"The elders of the daughter of Sion sit on the ground, they are silent:

5 [b] As at the report concerning Egypt, so shall they be sorely pained at the report of Tyre.

Verse 3. The seed of Sihor—(The seed of the Nile)] The Nile is called here Shichor, as it is Jer. ii. 18. and 1 Chron. xiii. 5. It had this name from the blackness of its waters, charged with the mud, which it brings down from Æthiopia when it overflows,—Et viridem Ægyptum nigra fœcundat arena; as it was called by the Greeks Melas, and by the Latins Melo, for the same reason. See Servius on the above line of Virgil, Georg. iv. 291. It was called Siris by the Æthiopians; by some supposed to be the same with Shichor. Egypt by its extraordinary fertility, caused by the overflowing of the Nile, supplied the neighbouring nations with corn, by which branch of trade the Tyrians gained great wealth.

Verse 4. Be thou ashamed, O Zidon] Tyre is called, ver. 12. the daughter of Sidon. "The Sidonians," says Justin, xviii. 3. "when their city was taken by the king of Ascalon, betook themselves to their ships; and landed, and built Tyre." Sidon, as the mother city, is supposed to be deeply affected with the calamity of her daughter.

Nor bring up virgins—(Nor educated virgins)] ורוממתי veromameti; so an ancient MS. [of Dr. Kennicott's] prefixing the ו vau, which refers to the negative preceding, and is equivalent to ולא velo. See Deut. xxxiii. 6. Prov. xxx. 3. [Two of my own MSS. have ו vau in the margin.]

Verse 7. Whose antiquity is of ancient days—(Whose antiquity is of the earliest date)] Justin, in the passage above quoted, had dated the building of Tyre, at a certain number of years before the taking of Troy: but the number is lost in the present copies. Tyre, though not so old as Sidon, yet was of very high antiquity: it was a strong city even in the time of Joshua. It is called עיר מבצר צר âir mibetser tsor, the city of the fortress of Sor, Josh. xix. 29. Interpreters raise difficulties in regard to this passage; and will not allow it to have been so ancient: with what good reason I do not see; for it is called by the same name, "the fortress of Sor," in the history of David, 2 Sam. xxiv. 7. and the circumstances of the history determine the place to be the very same. See on ver. 1.

[Whose antiquity is of ancient days, may refer to Palætyrus, or Old Tyre.

Her own feet shall carry her afar off to sojourn.—This may belong to the new or insular Tyre:—her own feet, that is, her own inhabitants, shall carry her, shall transport the city from the continent to the island. "But the text says, it shall be carried far off; and the new city was founded only half a mile distant from the other."—I answer מרחוק merachok, does not always signify a great distance, but distance, or interval, in general: for in Josh. iii. 4. רחוק rachok, is used to express the space between the camp and the ark; which we know to have been only two thousand cubits. Some refer the sojourning afar off, to the extent of the commercial voyages undertaken by the Tyrians, and their foreign connexions.]

Verse 10. O daughter of Tarshish] Tyre is called the daughter of Tarshish; perhaps because Tyre being ruined, Tarshish was become the superior city, and might be considered as the metropolis of the Tyrian people: or rather because of the close connexion and perpetual intercourse between them, according to that latitude of signification in which the Hebrews use the words son and daughter to express any sort of conjunction and dependence whatever. מזח mezach, a girdle, which collects, binds, and keeps together the loose raiment, when applied to a river, may mean a mound, mole, or artificial dam, which contains the waters, and prevents them from spreading abroad. by siege and destroyed; whose walls are demolished; whose policy is dissolved; whose wealth is dissipated; whose people is scattered over the wide country; is compared to a river whose banks are broken down and its waters let loose, and overflowing all the neighbouring plains, are wasted and lost. This may possibly be the meaning of this very obscure verse; of which I can find no other interpretation that is at all satisfactory.

Verse 13. Behold the land of the Chaldeans] This verse is extremely obscure: the obscurity arises from the ambiguity of the agents, which belong to the verbs, and of the objects expressed by the pronouns; from the change of number in the verbs, and of gender in the pronouns. The MSS. give us no assistance; and the ancient Versions very little. The Chaldee and Vulgate read שמה samoah, in the plural number. I have followed the interpretation, which, among many different ones, seemed to me most probable, that of Perizonius and Vitringa.

The Chaldeans, Chasdim, are supposed to have had their origin, and to have taken their name, from Chesed the son of Nachor, the brother of Abraham. They were known by that name in the time of Moses, who calls Ur in Mesopotamia from whence Abraham came, to distinguish it from other places of the same name, Ur of the Chaldeans. And Jeremiah calls them an ancient nation. This is not inconsistent with what Isaiah here says of them: "This people was not," that is, they were of no account; (see Deut. xxxii. 21.) they were not reckoned among the great and potent nations of the world till of later times: they were a rude, uncivilized, barbarous people, without laws, without settled habitations; wandering in a wide desert country, (ציים tsiyim,) and addicted to rapine like the wild Arabians. Such they are represented to have been in the time of Job, (chap. i. 17.) and such they continued to be till Assur, some powerful king of Assyria, gathered them together, and settled them in Babylon and the neighbouring country. This probably was Ninus, whom I suppose to have lived in the time of the Judges. In this, with many eminent chronologers, I follow the authority of Herodotus, who says that the Assyrian monarchy lasted but five hundred and twenty years. Ninus got possession of Babylon from the Cuthean Arabians: the successors of Nimrod in that empire, collected the Chaldeans, and settled a colony of them there to secure the possession of the city, which he and his successors greatly enlarged and ornamented. They had perhaps been useful to him in his wars, and might be likely to be further useful in keeping under the old inhabitants of that city, and of the country belonging to it: according to the policy of the Assyrian kings, who generally brought new people into the conquered countries. See Isa. xxxvi. 17. 2 Kings xvii. 6, 24. The testimony of Dicæarchus, a Greek historian contemporary with Alexander, (apud Steph. de Urbibus, in voc. Χαλδαιος,) in regard to the fact is remarkable, though he is mistaken in the name of the king he speaks of. He says,—"That a certain king of Assyria, the fourteenth in succession from Ninus," (as he might be, if Ninus is placed, as in the common chronology, eight hundred years higher than we have above set him,) "named, as it is said, Chaldæus, having gathered together and united all the people called Chaldeans, built the famous city, Babylon, upon the Euphrates."

Verse 14. Howl, ye ships] The prophet Ezekiel hath enlarged upon this part of the same subject with great force and elegance:—

"Thus saith the Lord JEHOVAH concerning Tyre:
At the sound of thy fall, at the cry of the wounded,
At the great slaughter in the midst of thee, shall not the islands tremble?
And shall not all the princes of the sea descend from their thrones,
And lay aside their robes, and strip off their embroidered garments?
They shall clothe themselves with trembling, they shall sit on the ground;
They shall tremble every moment, they shall be astonished at thee.
And they shall utter a lamentation over thee, and shall say unto thee:
How art thou lost, thou that wast inhabited from the seas!
The renowned city that was strong in the sea, she and her inhabitants!
That struck with terror all her neighbours!
Now shall the coasts tremble in the day of thy fall,
And the isles that are in the sea shall be troubled at thy departure." Ezek. xxvi. 15—18.

Verse 15. According to the days of one king] That is, of seventy years [a] shall Tyre sing as an harlot.

one kingdom. See Dan. vii. 17.; viii. 20. Nebuchadnezzar began his conquests in the first year of his reign; from thence to the taking of Babylon by Cyrus are seventy years; at which time the nations conquered by Nebuchadnezzar were to be restored to liberty. These seventy years limit the duration of the Babylonish monarchy. Tyre was taken by him towards the middle of that period; so did not serve the king of Babylon during the whole period, but only for the remaining part of it. This seems to be the meaning of Isaiah: the days allotted to the one king, or kingdom, are seventy years; Tyre, with the rest of the conquered nations, shall continue in a state of subjection and desolation to the end of that period. Not from the beginning and through the whole of the period; for, by being one of the latest conquests, the duration of that state of subjection in regard to her, was not much more than half of it. "All these nations," saith Jeremiah, xxv. 11., "shall serve the king of Babylon seventy years." Some of them were conquered sooner, some later: but the end of this period was the common term for the deliverance of them all.

There is another way of computing the seventy years, from the year in which Tyre was actually taken to the nineteenth of Darius Hystaspis; whom the Phœnicians, or Tyrians, assisted against the Ionians, and probably on that account might then be restored to their former liberties and privileges. But I think the former the more probable interpretation.

Verse 17. After the end of seventy years] Tyre, after its destruction by Nebuchadnezzar, recovered, as it is here foretold, its ancient trade, wealth, and grandeur; as it did likewise after a second destruction by Alexander. It became Christian early with the rest of the neighbouring countries. St. Paul himself found many Christians there, Acts xxi. 4. It suffered much in the Dioclesian persecution. It was an archbishopric under the patriarchate of Jerusalem, with fourteen bishoprics under its jurisdiction. It continued Christian till it was taken by the Saracens in 639; was recovered by the Christians in 1124. But in 1280 was conquered by the Mamelukes, and afterwards taken from them by the Turks in 1517. Since that time it has sunk into utter decay; is now a mere ruin, a bare rock, "a place to spread nets upon," as the prophet Ezekiel foretold it should be, chap. xxvi. 14. See Sandys' Travels; Vitringa on the place; Bp. Newton on the Prophecies, Dissert. xi.

From the thirteenth chapter to the twenty-third inclusive, the fate of several cities and nations is denounced: of Babylon, of the Philistines, Moab, Damascus, Egypt, Tyre. After having foretold the destruction of the foreign nations, enemies of Judah, the prophet declares the judgments impending on the people of God themselves for their wickedness and apostasy, and the desolation that shall be brought on their whole country.

The twenty-fourth and the three following chapters seem to have been delivered about the same time: before the destruction of Moab by Shalmaneser; (see chap. xxv. 10.) consequently, before the destruction of Samaria; probably in the beginning of Hezekiah's reign. But concerning the particular subject of the twenty-fourth chapter interpreters are not at all agreed: some refer it to the desolation caused by the invasion of Shalmanezer; others to the invasion of Nebuchadnezzar; and others to the destruction of the city and nation by the Romans. Vitringa is singular in his opinion, who applies it to the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes. Perhaps it may have a view to all the three great desolations of the country, by Shalmanezer, by Nebuchadnezzar, and by the Romans; especially the last, to which some parts of it may seem more peculiarly applicable. However, the prophet chiefly employs general images; such as set forth the greatness and universality of the ruin and desolation that is to be brought upon the country by these great revolutions, involving all orders and degrees of men, changing entirely the face of things, and destroying the whole polity both religious and civil; without entering into minute circumstances, or necessarily restraining it by particular marks to one great event, exclusive of others of the same kind.

a letter. Houbigant, Secker. Five of Dr. Kennicott's, and five of De Rossi's MSS., several ancient, add כל col after משוש mesos: the Septuagint adds the same word before it.

Verse 14. They shall lift up their voice—(But these shall lift up their voice)] That is, they that escaped out of these calamities. The great distresses brought upon Israel and Judah drove the people away, and dispersed them all over the neighbouring countries: they fled to Egypt, to Asia Minor, to the islands and the coasts of Greece. They were to be found in great numbers in most of the principal cities of these countries. Alexandria was in a great measure peopled by them. They had synagogues for their worship in many places, and were greatly instrumental in propagating the knowledge of the true God among these heathen nations, and preparing them for the reception of Christianity. This is what the prophet seems to mean by the celebration of the name of JEHOVAH in the waters, in the distant coasts, and in the uttermost parts of the land. מים mayim, the waters; ὑδωρ, Sept.; ὑδατα, Theod.; not מים miyam, from the sea.

Verse 15. In the isles of the sea—(In the distant coasts of the sea)] For באורים be-urim, in the valleys, I suppose we ought to read באיים be-eyim, in the isles, which is in a great degree justified by the repetition of the word in the next member of the sentence, with the addition of הים ha-yam, the sea, to vary the phrase, exactly in the manner of the prophet. איים eyim is a word chiefly applied to any distant countries, especially those lying on the Mediterranean sea. Others conjecture ביארים biarim, בהרים beharim, באמים beamim, בעמים beâmim, בחורים bechorim, באורים beorim, a באר bear, illustrati. Le Clerc. Twenty-three MSS. [of Kennicott's, many of De Rossi's, and some of my own] read באורים beorim. The Septuagint do not acknowledge the reading of the Text, expressing here only the word איים eyim, εν ταις νησοις, in the islands, and that not repeated. But MSS. Pachom. and I. D. II. supply in this place the defect in the other copies of the Septuagint, thus, Δια τουτο ἡ δοξα Κυριου ε σται εν ταις νησοις της Θαλασσης· εν ταις νησοις το ονομα του Κυριου Θεου Ισραηλ ενδοξον ϛσται. [" Therefore the glory of the Lord shall be in the isles of the sea: in the islands shall the name of the Lord God of Israel be glorified." Kimchi says, that by באורים be-urim, in the valleys, is meant the cities, because they were generally built in valleys. The Vulgate has in doctrinis, and so my Old MS. in erthingis. It should not be rendered in the fires; none of the ancient Versions understood it thus.] According to which the Septuagint had in their Hebrew copy באיים be-eyim, repeated afterward, not באורים beurim.

Verse 16. But I said] The prophet speaks in the person of the inhabitants of the land still remaining there, who should be pursued by Divine vengeance, and suffer repeated distresses from the inroads and depredations of their powerful enemies. Agreeably to what he said before in a general denunciation of these calamities:—

> " Though there be a tenth part remaining in it;
> Even this shall undergo a repeated destruction."
> Chap. vi. 13. See the Note there

[My leanness, my leanness—Or, my secret; so the Vulgate, Montanus, and my old MS. רזן razan, has this meaning in Chaldee: but in Hebrew, it signifies to make lean, to waste. This sentence in the Hebrew has a strange connexion of uncouth sounds: יאמר רזי לי רזי לי אוי לי בוגדים בגדו ובגד בגדים בגדו Vaomer, razi li razi li, oi li, bogedim bagadu, u-beged bogadim bagadu. This may be equalled by the translation in my Old MS. Bible: And I seide, my priuee thinge to me: my priuee thinge to me: woo to me: The lawe breykinge thei breken: and in lawe breykinge of the ouerdon thingis, they breken the lawe.

The treacherous dealers have dealt treacherously—(The plunderers plunder)] See Note on chap. xxi. 2.

Verse 17. Fear, and the pit—(The terror, the pit)] If they escape one calamity, another shall overtake them.

> " As if a man should flee from a lion, and a bear should overtake him:

19 [c] The earth is utterly broken down, the earth is clean dissolved, the earth is moved exceedingly.

20 The earth shall [d] reel to and fro like a drunkard, and shall be removed like a cottage; and the transgression thereof shall be heavy upon it; and it shall fall, and not rise again.

21 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the LORD shall [e] punish the hosts of the high ones that are on high, [f] and the kings of the earth upon the earth.

22 And they shall be gathered together, [g] as prisoners are gathered in the [h] pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be [i] visited.

23 Then the [k] moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the LORD of hosts shall [l] reign [m] in mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and [n] before his ancients gloriously.

Or should betake himself to his house, and lean his hand on the wall,
And a serpent should bite him." Amos v. 19.

For, as our Saviour expressed it in a like parabolical manner, "wheresoever the carcase is, there shall the eagles be gathered together," Matt. xxiv. 28. The images are taken from the different methods of hunting and taking wild beasts, which were anciently in use. The terror was a line strung with feathers of all colours, which fluttering in the air scared and frightened the beasts into the toils, or into the pit, which was prepared for them. Nec est mirum, cum maximos ferarum greges linea pennis distincta contineat, et in insidias agat, ab ipso effectu dicta formido. Seneca de Ira, ii. 12. The pit, or pit-fall, fovea; digged deep in the ground, and covered over with green boughs, turf, &c. in order to deceive them, that they might fall into it unawares. The snare, or toils, indago; a series of nets, inclosing at first a great space of ground, in which the wild beasts were known to be; and then drawn in by degrees into a narrower compass, till they were at last closely shut up, and entangled in them.

For מקול mekol, a MS. reads מפני mipney, as it is in Jer. xlviii. 44. and so the Vulgate and Chaldee. But perhaps it is only, like the latter, a Hebraism, and means no more than the simple preposition מ mem. See Psa. cii. 6. For it does not appear that the terror was intended to scare the wild beasts by its noise. The paronomasia is very remarkable; פחד pachad, פחת pachath, פך pach: and that it was a common proverbial form, appears from Jeremiah's repeating it in the same words, chap. xlviii. 43, 44.

Verse 18. Out of the midst of the pit—(From the pit)] For מתוך mitoch, from the midst of, a MS. reads מן min, from, as it is in Jer. xlviii. 44.; and so likewise the Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgate.

Verse 19. The earth—(The land)] "הארץ ha-arets, forte delendum ה he, ut ex præcedente ortum. Vid. seqq." Secker. [Probably the ה he, in הארץ ha-arets, should be blotted out, as having arisen from the preceding.]

Verse 20. Like a cottage—(Like a lodge for a night)] See Note on chap. i. 8.

Verse 21. On high—upon the earth] That is, the ecclesiastical and civil polity of the Jews; which shall be destroyed. The nation shall continue in a state of depression and dereliction for a long time. The image seems to be taken from the practice of the great monarchs of that time; who, when they had thrown their wretched captives into a dungeon, never gave themselves the trouble of inquiring about them; but let them lie a long time in that miserable condition, wholly destitute of relief, and disregarded. God shall at length revisit and restore His people in the last age: and then the kingdom of God shall be established in such perfection, as wholly to obscure and eclipse the glory of the temporary, typical, preparative kingdom now subsisting.

[Verse 23. Before his ancients gloriously—In the sigt of their olde men he schal ben glorifiȝ. Old MS. BIBLE.]

"The figurative language of the prophets is taken from the analogy between the world natural, and an empire or kingdom considered as a world politic. Accordingly the whole world natural, consisting of heaven and earth, signifies the whole world politic, consisting of thrones and people; or so much of it as is considered in prophecy: and the things in that world signify the analogous things in this. For the heavens and the things therein signify thrones and dignities, and those who enjoy them; and the earth with the things thereon, the inferior people; and the lowest parts of the earth, called hades, or hell, the lowest or most miserable part of them.—Great earthquakes, and the shaking of heaven and earth, are put for the shaking of kingdoms, so as to distract and overthrow them; the creating a new heaven and earth, and the passing of an old one, or the beginning and end of a world, for the rise and ruin of a body politic signified thereby.—The sun for the whole species and race of kings, in the kingdoms of the world politic; the moon, for the body of the common people, considered as the king's wife; the stars, for subordinate princes and great men; or for bishops and rulers of the people of God, when the sun is Christ: setting of the sun, moon, and stars; darkening the sun, turning the moon into blood, and falling of the stars, for the ceasing of a kingdom." Sir I. Newton's Observations on the Prophecies, Part I. chap. 2.

[These Observations are of great consequence and use, in explaining the phraseology of the prophets.]

CHAPTER XXV.

The short glance which the Prophet gave at the promised restoration of the people of God and the Messiah's kingdom in the close of the preceding Chapter makes him break out into a rapturous song of praise in this, where although he alludes to temporal mercies, such as the destruction of the cities which had been at war with Zion, the ruin of Moab, and other signal interpositions of Divine providence in behalf of the Jews; yet he is evidently impressed with a more lively sense of future and much higher blessings under the gospel dispensation in the plenitude of its revelation, of which the temporal deliverances vouchsafed at various times to the primitive kingdoms of Israel and Judah were the prototypes, 1—5. These blessings are described under the figure of a feast made for all nations, 6; the removing of a veil from their faces, 7; the total extinction of the empire of death by the resurrection from the dead, the exclusion of all sorrow, and the final overthrow of all the enemies of the people of God, 8—12.

O LORD thou art my God; [a] I will exalt thee, I will praise thy name; [b] for thou hast done wonderful things; [c] thy counsels of old are faithfulness and truth.

2 For thou hast made [d] of a city an heap; of a defenced city a ruin: a palace of strangers to be no city: it shall never be built.

3 Therefore shall the strong people [e] glorify thee, the city of the terrible nations shall fear thee.

4 For thou hast been a strength to the poor, a strength to the needy in his distress, [f] a refuge from the storm, a shadow from the heat, [d] Ch. 21. 9. & 23. 13. Jer. 15. 37. —— [e] Rev. 11. 13. —— [f] Ch. 4. 6.

It does not appear to me, that this Chapter has any close and particular connexion with the chapter immediately preceding, taken separately, and by itself. The subject of that was the desolation of the land of Israel and Judah, by the just judgment of God, for the wickedness and disobedience of the people: which, taken by itself, seems not with any propriety to introduce a hymn of thanksgiving to God for His mercies to His people in delivering them from their enemies. But taking the whole course of prophecies, from the thirteenth to the twenty-fourth chapter inclusive, in which the prophet foretels the destruction of several cities and nations, enemies to the Jews, and of the land of Judah itself, yet with intimations of a remnant to be saved, and a restoration to be at length effected by a glorious establishment of the kingdom of God: with a view to this extensive scene of God's providence in all its parts, and in all its consequences, the prophet may well be supposed to break out into this song of praise: in which his mind seems to be more possessed with the prospect of future mercies than with the recollection of the past.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXV.

[Verse 1. Thy counsels of old are faithfulness and truth] i. e. all thy past declarations by the prophets shall be fulfilled in their proper time.]

Verse 2. A city—(The city)] Nineveh, Babylon, Ar, Moab, or any other strong fortress possessed by the enemies of the people of God.

For the first מעיר me-âir, the Syriac and Vulgate read העיר ha-âir; the Septuagint and Chaldee read, in the plural, ערים ârim, transposing the letters. After the second מעיר me-âir, a MS. adds לגל la-gol.

A palace of strangers—(The palace of the proud ones)] For זרים zerim, strangers, MS. Bodl. and another read זדים zedim, the proud: so likewise the Septuagint; for they render it ὑβριστῶν here, and in ver. 5., as they do in some when the blast of the terrible ones is as a storm against the wall.

5 Thou shalt bring down the noise of strangers, as the heat in a dry place; even the heat with the shadow of a cloud: the branch of the terrible ones shall be brought low.

6 And in [a] this mountain shall [b] the LORD of hosts make unto [c] all people a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, other places: see Deut. xviii. 20, 22. Another MS. reads צרים tserim, adversaries; which also makes a good sense. But זרים zerim, and זדים zedim, are often confounded by the great similitude of the letters ד daleth and ר resh. See Mal. iii. 15.; iv. 1. Psa. xix. 14. in the Septuagint: and Psa. liv. 5. (where the Chaldee reads זדים zedim) compared with Psa. lxxxvi. 16.

Verse 4. As a storm against the wall—(Like a winter-storm)] For קיר kir, read קור kor: or as עיר âir, from ערר ârar, so קיר from קרר karar. Capellus.

Verse 5. Of strangers—(Of the proud)] The same mistake here as in ver. 2.: see the Note there. Here זרים zedim, the proud, is parallel to עריצים âritsim, the formidable: as in Psa. liv. 5. and lxxxvi. 14.

The heat with the shadow of a cloud—(As the heat by a thick cloud)] For חרב hareb, the Syriac, Chaldee, Vulgate, and two MSS. read כחרב ke-hareb; which is a repetition of the beginning of the foregoing parallel line; and the verse taken out of the parallel form, and more fully expressed, would run thus; "As a thick cloud interposing tempers the heat of the sun on the burnt soil; so shalt thou, by the interposition of Thy power, bring low and abate the tumult of the proud, and the triumph of the formidable."

[Verse 6. In this mountain—Zion—at Jerusalem—in His church.]

Shall the LORD of hosts make unto all people a feast] [Salvation by Jesus Christ.] A feast is a proper and usual expression of joy in consequence of victory, or any other great success. The feast here spoken of is to be celebrated on mount Sion; and all the peoples without distinction are to be invited to it. This can be no other than the celebration of the establishment of Christ's kingdom, which is frequently represented in the gospel under the image of a feast; "where many shall come from the East and West, and shall sit down at table with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven." Matt. viii. 11. See also Luke xiv. 16.; xxii. 29, 30. This sense is fully confirmed by the concomitants of this feast expressed in the next verse; the removing of the veil from the face of the nations, and the abolition of death: the first of which is obviously and clearly explained of the preaching of the gospel; and the second must mean the blessing of immortality procured for us by Christ, "who hath abolished death, and through death hath destroyed him that had the power of death."

Of wines on the lees—(Of old wines)] Heb. lees; that is, of wines kept long on the lees. The word used to express the lees in the original signifies the preservers; because they preserve the strength and flavour of the wine. "All recent wines, after the fermentation has ceased, ought to be kept on their lees for a certain time, which greatly contributes to increase their strength and flavour. Whenever this first fermentation has been deficient, they will retain a more rich and sweet taste than is natural to them in a recent true vinous state; and unless further fermentation is promoted by their lying longer on their own lees, they will never attain their genuine strength and flavour, but run into repeated and ineffectual fermentations, and soon degenerate into a liquor of an acetous kind.—All wines of a light and austere kind, by a fermentation too great, or too long continued, certainly degenerate into a weak sort of vinegar; while the stronger not only require, but will safely bear a stronger, and often repeated fermentation; and are more apt to degenerate from a defect than excess of fermentation into a vapid, ropy, and at length into a putrescent state." Sir Edward Barry, Observations on the Wines of the Ancients, p. 9, 10.

Thevenot observes particularly of the Shiras wine, that, after it is refined from the lees, it is apt to grow sour. "Il a beaucoup de lie; c'est pourquoi il donne puissemment dans la tête; et pour le rendre plus traitable on le passe par un chausse d'hypocras; après quoi il est fort clair, et moins fumeux. Ils mettent ce vin dans des grandes jarres de terres qui tiennent dix ou douze, jusqu'à quatorze, carabas: mais quand l'on a entamé une jarre, il faut la vuider au plutôt, et mettre le vin qu'on en tire dans des bouteilles ou carabas; car si l'on y manque en le laissant quelque tems après que la jarre est entamée il se gâte et s'aigrit." Voyages, tom. ii. p. 245.—["It has much sediment, and therefore is intoxicating. In order to make it more mellow, they strain it through a hypocrates' sleeve, after which it is very clear and less heady. They lay up this wine in great earthen jars, which hold from ten to fourteen carabas: but when a jar is unstopped, it is necessary to empty it immediately, and put the wine into bottles or carabas; for if it be left thus in the jar, it will spoil and become acid."

The caraba, or girba, is a goat's skin drawn off from the animal, having no apertures but those occasioned by the tail, the feet, and the neck. One opening is left, to pour in and draw off the liquor. This skin goes through a sort of tanning process; and is often beautifully ornamented, as is the case with one of these girbas now lying before me.]

This clearly explains the very elegant comparison, or of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined.

7 And he will [a] destroy in this mountain the face of the covering [b] cast over all people, and [c] the vail that is spread over all nations.

8 He will [d] swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will [e] wipe away tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth: for the Lord hath spoken it.

rather allegory, of Jeremiah, chap. xlviii. 11; where the Reader will find a remarkable example of the mixture of the proper with the allegorical, not uncommon in the Hebrew poets:

"Moab hath been at ease from his youth,
And he hath settled upon his lees;
Nor hath he been drawn off from vessel to vessel,
Neither hath he gone into captivity:
Wherefore his taste remaineth in him,
And his flavour is not changed."

Sir John Chardin's MS. note on this place of Jeremiah is as follows: "On change ainsi le vin de coupe en coupe en orient; et quand on en entame une, il faut la vuider en petites coupes ou bouteilles, sans quoi il s'aigrit. ["They change the wine from vessel to vessel in the East; and when they unstop a large one, it is necessary to empty it into small vessels, as otherwise it will grow sour."]

Verse 7. The face of the covering cast over all people—(The covering that covered the face of all the peoples)] MS. Bodl. reads על פני כל âl peney col. The word פני peney, face, has been removed from its right place into the line above, where it makes no sense; as Houbigant conjectured. [The face of the covering, &c.—He will unveil all the Mosaic ritual; and show by His apostles that it referred to, and was accomplished in, the sacrificial offering of Jesus Christ.

Verse 8. He will swallow up death] He, by the grace of God, will taste death for every man. Heb. ii. 9. Probably, swallow up death, and taste death, in both these verses, refer to the same thing:—Jesus dying instead of a guilty world. These forms of speech may refer to the punishment of certain criminals;—they were obliged to drink a cup of poison. That cup which every criminal in the world must have drunk Jesus Christ drank for them; and thus he swallowed up death; but as He rose again from the dead, complete victory was gained.

From these three verses we learn,—

I. That the gospel is a plenteous provision:—"I will make a feast for all people."

II. That it is a source of light and salvation:—"I will destroy the vail:—I will abolish death, and bring life and immortality to light."

III. That it is a source of comfort and happiness:—"I will wipe away all tears from off all faces."

As in the Arabic countries a covering was put over the face of him, who was condemned to suffer death, it is probable that the words in ver. 7. may refer to this.—The whole world was condemned to death, and about to be led out to execution, when the gracious Lord interposed; and, by a glorious sacrifice, procured a general pardon.]

Verse 9. It shall be said—(Shall they say)] So the Septuagint, and Vulgate in the plural number. They read ואמרו va-ameru; the Syriac reads ואמרת ve-amarta, Thou shalt say. [They shall say—i. e. The Jews and the Gentiles—Lo! this, Jesus Christ, is our God: we have waited for Him, according to the predictions of the prophets. We have expected Him—and we have not been disappointed; therefore will we be glad, and rejoice in His salvation.]

Verse 10. Shall the hand of the Lord rest—(The hand of Jehovah shall give rest)] "Heb. תנוח tenuach, quiescet. Annon תניח taniach, quietem dabit, ut Græci, αναπαυσιν δωσει, et Copt.?" Mr. Woide. That is, "shall give peace and quiet to Sion, by destroying the enemy;" as it follows.

As straw is trodden down—(As the straw is threshed)] Hoc juxta ritum loquitur Palæstinæ et multarum Orientis provinciarum, quæ ob pratorum et fœni penuriam paleas preparant esui animantium. Sunt autem carpenta ferrata rotis per medium in serrarum modum se volventibus, quæ stipulam conterunt; et comminuunt in paleas. Quomodo igitur plaustris ferratis paleæ conteruntur, sic conteretur Moab sub eo; sive sub Dei potentiâ, sive in semetipso, ut nihil in eo integri remaneat. [This is spoken in reference to the mode of threshing in Palestine, and various other Asiatic provinces. Because of the scarcity of meadow land and hay, they make chopped straw for the cattle. They have large wheels, studded over with iron teeth or nails, by which, on the out of doors threshing floors, they pound and reduce the straw into chaff. As, therefore, the straw is reduced to chaff by bringing the iron shod wheel over it; so shall Moab be bruised by the power of God, that nothing whole shall remain.] Hieron. in loc. See Note on chap. xxviii. 27.

For the dunghill—(Under the wheels of the car)] For מדמנה madmenah, the Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgate, read מרכבה me-recabah; which I have followed. See Joshua xv. 31. compared with xix. 5. where there is a mistake very nearly the same. The keri, במי bemi, is confirmed by twenty-eight MSS. (seven ancient,) and three Editions.

Verse 11. As he that swimmeth spreadeth forth his hands to swim—(As he that sinketh stretcheth out his hands to swim)] There is great obscurity in this place: some understand God as the Agent; others Moab. I have chosen the latter sense, as I cannot conceive that the stretching out of the hands of a swimmer in swimming can be any illustration of the action of God stretching out His hands over Moab to destroy it. I take השחה hoshachah, altering the point on the ש sin, on the authority of the Septuagint, to be the participle of שחה shachah, the same with שוח shuach, and שחח shachach, to bow down, to be depressed; and that the prophet designed a paranomasia here, a figure which he frequently uses, between the similar words שחה shachah, and שחות shachoth. As תחתיו tachtaiv, in his place, or on the spot, as we say, in the preceding verse, gives us an idea of the sudden and complete destruction of Moab; so בקרבו be-kerebo, in the midst of him, means, that this destruction shall be open, and exposed to the view of all: the neighbouring nations shall plainly see him struggling against it, as a man in the midst of the deep waters exerts all his efforts, by swimming, to save himself from drowning.

CHAPTER XXVI.

This Chapter, like the foregoing, is a song of praise, in which thanksgivings for temporal and spiritual mercies are beautifully mingled, though the latter still predominate. Even the sublime and evangelical doctrine of the resurrection seems here to be hinted at, and made to typify the deliverance of the people of God from a state of the lowest misery; the captivity, the general dispersion, or both. This hymn too, like the preceding, is beautifully diversified by the frequent change of speakers. It opes with a chorus of the church celebrating the protection vouchsafed by God to His people; and the happiness of the righteous, whom He guards, contrasted with the misery of the wicked whom he punishes, 1—7. To this succeeds their own pious resolution of obeying, trusting, and delighting in God, 8. Here the Prophet breaks in, in his own person, eagerly catching the last words of the chorus, which were perfectly in unison to the feelings of his own soul, and which he beautifully repeats, as one musical instrument reverberates the sound of another on the same key with it. He makes likewise a suitable response to what had been said on the judgments of God, and observes their different effects on the good and the bad;—improving the one, and hardening the other, 9—11. After this a chorus of Jews express their gratitude to God for past deliverances, make confession of their sins, and supplicate His power, which they had been long expecting, 12—18. To this God makes a gracious reply, promising deliverance that should be as life from the dead, 19. And the Prophet (apparently alluding to the command of Moses to the Isrealites, when the destroying angel was to go through the land of Egypt) concludes with exhorting his people to patience and resignation, till God sends the deliverance He has promised, 20, 21.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXVI.

Verse 1. We have a strong city] In opposition to the city of the enemy, which God had destroyed, chap. xxv. 2. see the Note there.

[Salvation—for walls and bulwarks—חמות וחל chamoth vachel, walls and redoubts, or the walls and the ditch. חל chel, properly signifies the ditch or trench, without the wall, see Kimchi. The same Rabbin says, This Song refers to the time of salvation, i. e. the days of the Messiah.

Verse 2. The righteous nation] The converted Gentiles shall have the gates opened—a full entrance into all the glories and privileges of the gospel; being fellow-heirs with the converted Jews. The Jewish peculiarity is destroyed, for the middle wall of partition is broken down.

The truth—The gospel itself—as the fulfilment of all the ancient types, shadows, and ceremonies; and therefore termed the truth, in opposition to all those shadowy rites and ceremonies. The law was given by Moses: but grace and TRUTH came by Jesus Christ, John i. 17. and see the Note there.

Verse 8. Have we waited for thee—(We have placed our confidence in thy name)] The Septuagint, Syriac, and Chaldee, read קוינו kavinu, without the pronoun annexed.

Verse 9. Have I desired thee] Forty-one MSS. of Dr. Kennicott's and many of De Rossi's, (nine ancient,) and five Editions read אויתיך iviteica. It is proper to note this: because the second י yod, being omitted in the Text, the Vulgate and many others have rendered it in the third person.

[When thy judgments, &c.—It would be better to read, when thy judgments were in the earth, the inhabitants of the world have learned (למדו lamedu) righteousness. Men seldom seek God in prosperity; they are apt to rest in an earthly portion: but God in mercy embitters this by adversity; then there is a general cry after Himself as our chief, solid, and only, permanent good.

Verse 12. Thou also hast wrought all our works in us—"Whatever vicissitude of things happened unto us, whether good or evil, thou hast wrought it all: nothing comes by chance." Kimchi.]

Verse 16. LORD, in trouble have they visited thee—(O JEHOVAH, in affliction we have sought thee)] So the Septuagint, and two MSS. have פקדנוך pekudnuca, in the first person plural. And so perhaps it should be צקנו tsakenu, in the first person: but how the Septuagint read this word is not clear; and this last member of the verse is extremely obscure.

For למו lomo, the Septuagint read לנו lanu, in the first person likewise: a frequent mistake; see Note on chap. x. 29.

Verse 18. We have—brought forth wind] The learned professor Michaelis explains this image in the following manner: Rariorem morbum describi, empneumatosin, aut ventosam molam, dictum; quo quæ laborant diu et sibi et peritis medicis gravidæ videntur, tandemque post omnes veræ graviditatis molestias et labores ventum ex utero emittunt: quem morbum passim describunt medici." Syntagma Comment. vol. ii. p. 165. ["The empneumatosis, or windy inflation of the womb, is a disorder to which females are liable. Some have had this in such wise, for a long time together, that they have appeared to themselves, and even to very skilful medical men, to be pregnant; and after having endured much pain, and even the throes of apparent childbearing, they have been eased and restored to health, by the emission of a great quantity of wind from the uterus. This disorder is well known to medical men."] The Syriac translator seems to have understood it in this manner: Enixi sumus, ut illæ, quæ ventos pariunt. ["We have brought forth as they who bring forth wind."

In the earth—(In the land)] בארץ be-arets: so a MS., the Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgate.

Verse 19. My dead body—(My deceased)] All the ancient Versions render it in the plural; they read נבלותי nibeloti, my dead bodies. The Syriac and Chaldee read נבלותיהם nebolotheyhem, their dead bodies.

The dew of herbs—(The dew of the dawn)] Lucis, according to the Vulgate; so also the Syriac and Chaldee.

The deliverance of the people of God from a state of the lowest depression, is explained by images plainly taken from the resurrection of the dead. In the same manner the prophet Ezekiel represents the restoration of the Jewish nation from a state of utter dissolution by the restoring of the dry bones to life, exhibited to him in a vision, chap. xxxvii. which is directly thus applied and explained, ver. 11—13. And this deliverance is expressed with a manifest opposition to what is here said above, ver. 14. of the great lords and tyrants, under whom they had groaned:—

"They are dead, they shall not live;
They are deceased tyrants, they shall not rise."

That they should be destroyed utterly, and should never be restored to their former power and glory. It appears from hence, that the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead was at that time a popular and common doctrine; for an image which is assumed in order to express or represent any thing in the way of allegory or metaphor, whether poetical or prophetical, must be an image commonly known and understood; otherwise it will not answer the purpose for which it is assumed.

[Kimchi refers these words to the days of the Messiah, and says, "Then many of the saints shall rise from the dead." And quotes Dan. xii. 2. Do not these words speak of the resurrection of our blessed Lord; and to that resurrection of the bodies of men, which shall be the consequence of his body being raised from the dead?

Thy dead men shall live,—with my dead body shall they arise.—This seems very express.]

Verse 20. Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers] An exhortation to patience and resignation under oppression, with a confident expectation of deliverance, by the power of God manifestly to be exerted in the destruction of the oppressor. It seems to be an allusion to the command of Moses to the Israelites, when the destroying angel was to go

[Verse 21. The earth also shall disclose her blood—Crimes of cruelty and oppression which have passed away from the eyes of men, God will bring into judgment, and exact punishment for them. O what a reckoning will the kingdoms of the earth have with God, for the torrents of blood which they have shed for the gratification of the lust of power and ambition!]

The subject of this Chapter seems to be the nature, the measure, and the design, of God's dealings with His people: ver. 1. His judgments inflicted on their great and powerful enemies: ver. 2. His constant care and protection of His favourite vineyard, in the form of a dialogue: ver. 7. the moderation and lenity, with which the severity of His judgments have been tempered: ver. 9. the end and design of them, to recover them from idolatry: and ver. 12. the recalling of them, on their repentance, from their several dispersions. The first verse seems connected with the two last verses of the preceding chapter.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXVII.

Verse 1. Leviathan] The animals here mentioned seem to be: the crocodile, rigid, by the stiffness of the backbone, so that he cannot readily turn himself when he pursues his prey; hence the easiest way of escaping from him is by making frequent and short turnings; the serpent, or dragon, flexible and winding; which coils himself up in a circular form; the sea-monster or the whale. These are used allegorically, without doubt, for great potentates, enemies and persecutors of the people of God: but to specify the particular persons or states designed by the prophet under these images is a matter of great difficulty, and comes not necessarily within the design of these Notes. [R. D. Kimchi says, leviathan is a parable concerning the kings of the Gentiles: it is the largest fish in the sea, called also תנין tannin, the dragon, or rather the whale. By these names the Grecian, Turkish, and Roman empires are intended. The dragon of the sea seems to mean some nation having a strong naval force, and extensive commerce.] See Kimchi on the place.

Verse 2. Sing ye unto her] ענו לה ânu lah. Bishop Lowth translates this, Sing ye a responsive song: and says, that ענה ânah, to answer, signifies occasionally to sing responsively; and that this mode of singing was frequently practised among the ancient Hebrews. See De Poes. Sac. Heb. Præl. xix. at the beginning.

This, indeed, was the ancient method of singing in various nations. The song was divided into distinct portions, and the singers sung alternately. There is a fine specimen of this in the song of Deborah and Barak; and also in the Idyls of Theocritus, and the Eclogues of Virgil.

This kind of singing was properly a dialogue in verse, sung to a particular tune; or in the mode which is now termed recitative. I have seen it often practised on funeral occasions among the descendants of the aboriginal Irish. The Poems of Ossian are of this kind.

The learned Bishop distinguishes the parts of this Dialogue thus :—

3. JEHOVAH. It is I, JEHOVAH, that preserve her;
I will water her every moment;
I will take care of her by night;
And by day I will keep guard over her.
4. VINEYARD. I have no wall for my defence:
O that I had a fence of the thorn and brier!
JEHOVAH. Against them should I march in battle,
I should burn them up together.
5. Ah! let her rather take hold of my protection.
VINEYARD. Let him make peace with me!
Peace let him make with me!
6. JEHOVAH. They that come from the root of Jacob shall flourish, Israel shall bud forth;
And they shall fill the face of the world with fruit.

A vineyard of red wine—The redder the wine, the more it was valued, says Kimchi.

Bishop Lowth translates, To the beloved vineyard. For חמר chemer, red, a multitude of MSS. and Editions, have חמד chemed, desirable. This is supported by the Septuagint and Chaldee.]

Verse 3. Lest any hurt it, I will keep it night and day—(I will take care of her by night; and by day I will keep guard over her)] For פן יפקד pen yiphkod, lest any visit it; the Syriac read ואפקד ve-ephkod, and I will visit it. [Twenty MSS. of Kennicott, fourteen of De Rossi, and two of my own,] and six Editions, read אפקד ephkod, I will visit, in the first person.

Verse 4. Fury is not in me—(I have no wall)] For חמה chemah, anger, the Septuagint and Syriac read חומה chomah, wall. An ancient MS. has חומה chumah. For בה bah, in her, two MSS. read בם bam, in them, plural. The vineyard wishes for a wall, and a fence of thorns: human strength and protection; (as the Jews were too apt to apply to their powerful neighbours for assistance, and to trust to the shadow of Egypt:) JEHOVAH replies, that this would not avail her, nor defend her against His wrath. He counsels her therefore to betake herself to His protection. On which she entreats Him to make peace with her.

[From the above Note it appears that the Bishop reads חומה chomah, wall, for חמה chemah, anger or fury, in accordance with the Syriac and Septuagint. The latter ו vau, makes the only difference, which letter is frequently absent from many words where its place is supplied by the point ֹ cholem: it might have been so here, formerly; and in process of time both vau and cholem, might have been lost. The Syriac supports the learned Bishop's criticism; as the word ܫܘܪܐ shora is there used; which word in the plural is found, Heb. xi. 30. By faith the walls of Jericho. The Bishop thinks the Septuagint is on his side: to me, it seems neither for nor against the criticism. The words in the Vatican copy are εγω πολις οχυρα, I am a fortified city: which the Arabic follows: but instead of οχυρα the Codex Alexandrinus has ισχυρα, I am a STRONG city.

The word חומה chomah, wall, is not found in any MS. in the Collections of Kennicott and De Rossi, nor in any of my own MSS.

However, one of Dr. Kennicott's MSS. has חימה cheimah: but probably that which now appears to be a י yod, was formerly a ו vau, and now partially obliterated.

This Song receives much light from being collated with that in chap. 5.; and perhaps the Bishop's criticism will find its best support from such a collation. In ver. 5. of that Chapter, God threatens to take away the wall of His vineyard: this was done; and here the vineyard complains, I have no wall; and wishes for any kind of defence rather than be thus naked. This is the only natural support of the above criticism.]

"About Tripoli there are abundance of vineyards and gardens, enclosed for the most part with hedges, which chiefly consist of the rhamnus, paliurus, oxyacantha, &c." Rawolf, p. 21, 22. A fence of thorns is esteemed equal to a wall for strength, being commonly represented as impenetrable. See Mic. vii. 4. Hos. ii. 6.

Who would set the briers and thorns against me—(O that I had a fence of the thorn and brier)] Seven MSS. (two ancient,) and one Edition, with the Syriac, Vulgate, and Aquila, read ושית vesith, with the conjunction ו vau prefixed. [Who would set the briers and thorns. מי יתנני שמיר שית mi yiteneni shamir shaith, Who shall give me the brier and thorn, i. e. for a defence: but hear Kimchi,—"who (the vineyard) hath given me (Jehovah) the brier and the thorn instead of good grapes."]

Verse 5. Or—(Ah)] For או o, I read אוי oi, as it was at first in a MS. The י yod was easily lost, being followed by another י yod.

The scarcity of fuel, especially wood, in most parts of the East is so great, that they supply it with every thing capable of burning; cow-dung dried, roots, parings of fruit, withered stalks of herbs and flowers: see Matt. vi. 21—30. Vine-twigs are particularly mentioned as used for fuel in dressing their food, by D'Arvieux; La Roque, Palestine, p. 198. Ezekiel says, in his parable of the vine, used figuratively for the people of God, as the vineyard is here,—"Shall wood be taken thereof to do any work? or will men take a pin of it to hang any vessel thereon? Behold, it is cast into the fire for fuel." Chap. xv. 3, 4. "If a man abide not in me," saith our Lord, "he is cast forth as a branch [of the vine] and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned." John xv. 6. They employed women and children to gather these things; and they laid them up in store for use. The dressing and pruning of their vines afforded a good supply of the last sort of fuel: but the prophet says that the vines themselves of the beloved vineyard shall be blasted, withered, and broken; and the women shall come and gather them up; and carry away the whole of them to make their fires for domestic uses. Verse 13. The great trumpet shall be blown—Does not this refer to the time spoken of by our Lord, Matt. xxiv. 31. He shall send forth his angels,—the preachers of His Gospel;—with a great sound of a trumpet,—the earnest invitation to be saved by Jesus Christ;—and shall gather his elect,—the Jews, his ancient chosen people;—from the four winds,—from all parts of the habitable globe in which they have been dispersed.

In this Prophet there are several predictions relative to the conversion of Egypt to the true faith, which have not yet been fulfilled: and which must be fulfilled, for the truth of God cannot fail. Should Egypt ever succeed in casting off the Ottoman yoke, and fully establish its independence, it is most likely that the gospel of Christ would have a speedy entrance into it; and, according to these prophecies, a wide and permanent diffusion. At present, the Mohammedan power is a genuine antichrist. This also the Lord will remove in due time.]

CHAPTER XXVIII.

This Chapter begins with a denunciation of the approaching ruin of the Israelites by Shalmaneser, whose power is compared to a tempest or flood, and his keenness to the avidity with which one plucks and swallows the grape that is soonest ripe, 1—4. It then turns to the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, who were to continue a kingdom after the final captivity of their brethren; and gives first a favourable prognostication of their affairs under Hezekiah, 5, 6; but soon changes to reproofs and threatenings for their intemperance, and their profaneness, 7, 8. They are introduced as not only scornfully rejecting, but also mocking and ridiculing the instructions of the prophet, 9, 10. To this God immediately retorts in terms alluding to their own mocking, but differently applied, 11—13. The prophet then addresses these scoffers, 14, who considered themselves as perfectly secure from every evil, 15; and assures them that there was no method under heaven but one, by which they could be saved, 16; that every other vain resource should fail in the day of visitation, 17, 18. He then further adds, that the judgments of God were particularly levelled against them; and that all the means to which they trusted for warding them off should be to no purpose, 19, 20, as the Almighty, who, on account of His patience and long-suffering, is amiably described as unacquainted with punishing, had nevertheless determined to punish them, 21, 22. The prophet then concludes with a beautiful parable in explanation and defence of God's dealing with His people, 23—29.

Verse 1. Woe to the crown of pride—[By the crown of pride, &c. Samaria is primarily understood.] "Sebaste, the ancient Samaria, is situated on a long mount of an oval figure; having first a fruitful valley, and then a ring of hills running round about it." Maundrell, p. 58. E regione horum ruderum mons est peramœnus, planitie admodum frugifera circumseptus, super quem olim Samaria urbs condita fuit. Fureri Itinerarium, p. 93. The city, beautifully situated on the top of a round hill, and surrounded immediately with a rich valley and a circle of other hills beyond it, suggested the idea of a chaplet, or wreath of flowers worn upon their heads on occasions of festivity; expressed by the proud crown, and the fading flower of the drunkards. That this custom of wearing chaplets in their banquets prevailed among the Jews, as well as among the Greeks and Romans, appears from the following passage of the book of Wisdom:—

"Let us fill ourselves with costly wine and ointments,
And let no flower of the spring pass by us:
Let us crown ourselves with rose-buds, before they are withered." Wisd. ii. 7, 8.

This is usually of a much longer shape and darker complexion than the kermez, hanging and ripening upon the tree even after the leaves are shed: and, provided the winter proves mild and temperate, is gathered as a delicious morsel in the spring." Shaw, Travels, p. 370. fol. The image was very obvious to the inhabitants of Judea and the neighbouring countries, and is frequently applied by the prophets to express a desirable object; by none more elegantly than by Hosea, chap. ix. 10.

"Like grapes in the wilderness, I found Israel;
Like the first ripe fig in her prime, I saw your fathers."

The image expresses in the strongest manner the great ease with which the Assyrians shall take the city and the whole kingdom, and the avidity with which they shall seize the rich prey without resistance.

Verse 5. In that day] Thus far the prophecy relates to the Israelites, and manifestly denounces their approaching destruction by Shalmaneser. Here it turns to the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, the remnant of God's people who were to continue a kingdom after the final captivity of the Israelites. It begins with a favourable prognostication of their affairs under Hezekiah: but soon changes to reproofs and threatenings, for their intemperance, disobedience, and profaneness.

[Jonathan's Targum on this verse is worthy of notice:—"In that time Messiah, the Lord of hosts, משיחא דיי צבאות meshicha dayai tsebaoth, shall be a crown of joy and a diadem of praise to the residue of his people." Kimchi says, the Rabbins in general are of this opinion. Here, then, the Rabbins, and their most celebrated Targum, give the incommunicable name, יהוה צבאות yehovah tsebaoth, the Lord of hosts, to our ever blessed Redeemer, Jesus Christ.]

Verse 6. The battle to the gate—(The war to the gate of the enemy)] That is, who pursue the fleeing enemy even to the very gates of their own city:—"But we were upon them even unto the entering of the gate," 2 Sam. xi. 23., that is, we drove the enemy back to their own gates. See also 1 Sam. xvii. 52. [The Targum says, The Messiah shall give the victory to those who go out to battle, that He may bring them back to their own houses in peace.]

Verse 9. Whom shall he teach knowledge—(Whom, say they, would he teach knowledge)] The scoffers mentioned below, ver. 14, are here introduced as uttering their sententious speeches: they treat God's method of dealing with them, and warning them by His prophets, with contempt and derision. What, say they, doth he treat us as mere infants just weaned? doth he teach us like little children, perpetually inculcating the same elementary lessons, the mere rudiments of knowledge; precept after precept, line after line, here and there, by little and little? imitating at the same time, and ridiculing, in ver. 10. the concise prophetical manner. God, by His prophet, retorts upon them with great severity their own contemptuous mockery, turning it to a sense quite different from what they intended. Yes, saith he, it shall be in fact as you say; ye shall be taught by a strange tongue and a stammering lip; in a strange country; ye shall be carried into captivity by a people whose language shall be unintelligible to you, and which ye shall be forced to learn like children. And my dealing with you shall be according to your own words: it shall be command upon command for your punishment; it shall be line upon line, stretched over you to mark your destruction; (compare 2 Kings xxi. 13.) it shall come upon you at different times, and by different degrees; till the judgments, with which from time to time I have threatened you, shall have their full accomplishment.

Jerom seems to have rightly understood the general design of this passage, as expressing the manner in which the scoffers, by their sententious speeches, turned into ridicule the warnings of God by His prophets, though he has not so 12 To whom he said, This is the rest wherewith ye may cause the weary to rest; and this is the refreshing: yet they would not hear.

13 But the word of the LORD was unto them precept upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little; that they might go, and fall backward, and be broken, and snared, and taken.

well explained the meaning of the repetition of their speech in ver. 13. His words are on ver. 9. Solebant hoc ex personâ prophetarum ludentes dicere :—and on ver. 14., Quod supra diximus, cum irrisione solitos principes Judæorum prophetis dicere, manda, remanda, et cætera his similia, per quæ ostenditur, nequaquam eos prophetarum credidisse sermonibus, sed prophetiam hubuisse despectui, præsens ostendit capitulum, per quod appellantur viri illusores." Hieron. in loc.

And so Jarchi interprets the word משלים mishelim in the next verse: qui dicunt verba irrisionis parabolicè. And the Chaldee paraphrases ver. 11. to the same purpose, understanding it as spoken not of God, but of the people deriding his prophets: Quoniam in mutatione loquelæ et in linguâ subsannationis irridebant contra prophetas qui prophetabant populo huic.

[Verse 10. For precept must be upon precept—The original is remarkably abrupt and sententious. The hemistichs are these :—

le-kav kav le-kav kav זעיר שם זעיר שם sham zâir sham zâir

For,—Command to command, command to command.
Line to line, line to line.
A little there, a little there.

Kimchi says צו tsav is used here for מצוה mitsaveh, and is used in no other place for it but here. צו tsav signifies a little precept, such as is suited to the capacity of a child, see ver. 9. קו kav signifies the line that a mason stretches out to build a layer of stones by. After one layer or course is placed, he raises the line and builds another: thus the building is by degrees regularly completed. This is the method of teaching children, giving them such information as their narrow capacities can receive: and thus the prophet dealt with the Israelites. See Kimchi in loc. and see a fine parallel passage Heb. v. 12—14., by which this may be well illustrated.

My old MS. Bible translates oddly :—

For sende efter sende, sende efter sende:
Abide efter abide, abide efter abide Litel ther, litel ther.]

Verse 12. This is the rest—(This is the true rest)] The sense of this verse is :—God had warned them by His prophets that their safety and security, their deliverance from their present calamities and from the apprehensions of still greater approaching, depended wholly on their trust in God, their faith and obedience: but they rejected this gracious warning with contempt and mockery.

Verse 15. A covenant with death] To be in covenant with, is a kind of proverbial expression to denote perfect security from evil and mischief of any sort :—

"For thou shalt be in league with the stones of the field;
And the beasts of the field shall be at peace with thee."
Job v. 23.

"And I will make a covenant for them with the beasts of the field,
And with the fowls of heaven, and with the creeping things of the ground." Hos. ii. 18.

That is, none of these shall hurt them. But Lucan, speaking of the Psylli, whose peculiar property it was to be unhurt by the bite of serpents, with which their country abounded, comes still nearer to the expression of Isaiah in this place :—

Gens unica terras
Incolit a sævo serpentum innoxia morsu
Marmaridæ Psylli.——
Pax illis cum morte data est." Pharsal. ix. 891.

"Of all who scorching Afric's sun endure,

17 Judgment also will I lay to the line, and righteousness to the plummet: and the hail shall sweep away [b] the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding place.

18 And your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through; then ye shall be [c] trodden down by it.

[We have made a covenant with death, and with hell are we at agreement—חזוה עשינו asinu chozeh, we have made a vision, we have had an interview,—struck a bargain, and settled all preliminaries. So they had made a covenant with hell by diabolic sacrifice, כרתנו בריח caratenu berith, We have cut the covenant sacrifice; they divided it for the contracting parties to pass between the separated victim; for the victim was split exactly down the middle, so that even the spinal marrow was exactly divided through its whole length; and being set opposite to each other, the contracting parties entered, one at the head part, the other at the feet; and, meeting in the centre, took the covenant oath. Thus, it is intimated, these bad people made an agreement with שאול Sheol, with dæmons, with whom they had an interview; i. e. meeting them in the covenant sacrifice! To such a pitch had the Israelitish idolatry reached at that time!

Verse 16. Behold, I lay in Zion—See the Notes on the parallel places in the margin. Kimchi understands this of Hezekiah: but it most undoubtedly belongs to Jesus Christ alone; and His application of it to Himself even the Jews could not contest. See the margin as above.]

Verse 18. Your covenant with death shall be disannulled—(Your covenant with death shall be broken)] For כפר caphar, which seems not to belong to this place, the Chaldee reads תפר taphar, which is approved by Houbigant and Secker. See Jer. xxxiii. 21., where the very same phrase is used. See Prelim. Dissert. p. 1.

Verse 20. For the bed is shorter] A mashal, or proverbial saying, the meaning of which is, that they will find all means of defence and protection insufficient to secure them, and cover them from the evils coming upon them. מכך massek, chap. xxii. 8. the covering, is used for the outworks of defence, the barrier of the country; and here in the allegorical sense it means much the same thing. Their beds were only mattresses laid on the floor; and the coverlet a sheet, or in the winter a carpet, laid over it in which the person wrapped himself. Verse 23. Give ye ear, and hear my voice—(Listen ye, and hear my voice)] The foregoing discourse, consisting of severe reproofs, and threatenings of dreadful judgments impending on the Jews for their vices, and their profane contempt of God's warnings by His messengers, the prophet concludes with an explanation and defence of God's method of dealing with His people in an elegant parable or allegory; in which he employs a variety of images all taken from the science of agriculture. As the husbandman uses various methods in preparing his land, and adapting it to the several kinds of seeds to be sown, with a due observation of times and seasons; and when he hath gathered in his harvest, employs methods as various in separating the corn from the straw and the chaff by different instruments, according to doth he open and break the clods of his ground?

25 When he hath made plain the face thereof, doth he not cast abroad the fitches, and scatter the cummin, and cast in [a] the principal wheat and the appointed barley and the [b] rie in their [c] place?

26 [d] For [e] his God doth instruct him to discretion, and doth teach him.

27 For the fitches are not threshed with a threshing instrument, neither is a cart wheel turned about upon the cummin; but the fitches are beaten out with a staff, and the cummin with a rod.

the nature of the different sorts of grain: so God, with unerring wisdom, and with strict justice, instructs, admonishes, and corrects His people; chastises and punishes them in various ways, as the exigence of the case requires; now more moderately, now more severely; always tempering justice with mercy; in order to reclaim the wicked, to improve the good; and, finally, to separate the one from the other.

Verse 26. For his God doth instruct him] All nations have agreed in attributing agriculture, the most useful and the most necessary of all sciences, to the invention and to the suggestions of their deities. "The Most High hath ordained husbandry," saith the son of Sirach, Ecclus. vii. 15.

Verses 27, 28. Four methods of threshing are here mentioned, by different instruments; the flail, the drag, the wain, and the treading of the cattle. The staff, or flail, was used for the infirmiora semina, says Jerom, the grain that was too tender to be treated in the other methods. The drag consisted of a sort of strong planks, made rough at the bottom with hard stones or iron: it was drawn by horses or oxen over the corn sheaves spread on the floor, the driver sitting upon it. Kempfer has given a print representing the manner of using this instrument, Amœn. Exot. p. 682. fig. 3. The wain was much like the former: but had wheels with iron teeth, or edges like a saw.—Ferrata carpenta rotis per medium in serrarum modum se volventibus. Hieron. in loc. by which it should seem that the axle was armed with iron teeth, or serrated wheels, throughout. See a description and print of such a machine used at present in Egypt for the same purpose; it moves upon three rollers armed with iron teeth or wheels, to cut the straw: in Niebuhr's Voyage en Arabie, Tab. xvii. p. 123. In Syria they make use of the drag, constructed in the very same manner as above described; Niebuhr, Description de l'Arabie, p. 140. This not only forced out the grain, but cut the straw in pieces for fodder for the cattle; for in the eastern countries they have no hay. See Harmer's Observ. I. p. 425. The last method is well known from the law of Moses, which "forbids the ox to be muzzled, when he treadeth out the corn." Deut. xxv. 4.

[c] Or, of the city.——[d] 2 Sam. 5. 9.——[e] Heb. cut off the heads.

The subject of this and the four following chapters is the invasion of Sennacherib; the great distress of the Jews while it continued; their sudden and unexpected deliverance by God's immediate interposition in their favour; the subsequent prosperous state of the kingdom under Hezekiah; interspersed with severe reproofs, and threats of punishment, for their hypocrisy, stupidity, infidelity, their want of trust in God, and their vain reliance on the assistance of Egypt; and with promises of better times, both immediately to succeed, and to be expected in the future age. The whole making not one continued discourse, but rather a collection of different discourses upon the same subject; which is treated with great elegance and variety. Though the matter is various, and the transitions sudden, yet the prophet seldom goes far from his subject. It is properly enough divided by the chapters in the common Translation.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXIX.

Verse 1. Ariel] That Jerusalem is here called by this name is very certain: but the reason of this name, and the meaning of it as applied to Jerusalem, is very obscure and doubtful. Some, with the Chaldee, suppose it to be taken from the hearth of the great altar of burnt-offerings, which Ezekiel plainly calls by the same name; and that Jerusalem is here considered as the seat of the fire of God, אור אל ur el, which should issue from thence to consume His enemies: compare chap. xxxi. 9. Some, according to the common derivation of the word, ארי אל ari el, the lion of God, or the strong lion; suppose it to signify the strength of the place, by which it was enabled to resist and overcome all its enemies. Τινες δε φασι την πολιν ουτως ειρησθαι· επει, δια Θεου, λεοντος δικην εσπαραττε τους ανταιροντας. Procop. in loc. There are other explanations of this name given: but none that seems to be perfectly satisfactory.

[From Ezekiel xliii. 15. we learn that Ari-el was the name of the altar of burnt-offerings, put here for the city itself in which that altar was. In the second verse it is said, I will distress Ari-el, and it shall be unto me as Ari-el. The first Ari-el here seems to mean Jerusalem, which should be distressed by the Assyrians: the second Ari-el seems to mean the altar of burnt-offerings. But why is it said, "Ari-el shall be unto me as Ari-el?" As the altar of burnt-offerings was surrounded daily by the victims which were offered; so the walls of Jerusalem shall be surrounded by the dead bodies of those who had rebelled against the Lord, and who should be victims to His justice. The translation of Bishop Lowth appears to embrace both meanings—I will bring distress upon Ari-el; and it shall be to me as the hearth of the great altar.]

Add ye year to year] Ironically. Go on year after year; keep your solemn feasts: yet know, that God will punish you for your hypocritical worship, consisting of mere form destitute of true piety. Probably delivered at the time of some great feast, when they were thus employed.

Verse 2. There shall be heaviness and sorrow—(There shall be continual mourning and sorrow)] Instead of your present joy and festivity.

And it shall be unto me as Ariel—(And it shall be unto me as the hearth of the great altar)] That is, it shall be the seat of the fire of God; which shall issue from thence to consume His enemies. See note on ver. 1. Or, perhaps, all on flame; as it was when taken by the Chaldeans; or covered with carcasses and blood, as when taken by the Romans: an intimation of which more distant events, though not immediate subjects of the prophecy, may perhaps be given in this obscure passage.

Verse 3. And I will camp against thee round about—(And I will encamp against thee like David)] For כדור

4 And thou shalt be brought down, and shalt speak out of the ground, and thy speech shall be low out of the dust, and thy voice shall be, as of one that hath a familiar spirit, [a] out of the ground, and thy speech shall [b] whisper out of the dust,

Forts—(Towers)] For מצרת mitsureth, read מצרות mitsudoth: so the Septuagint and five MSS. [of Dr. Kennicott,] one of them ancient, [and four of De Rossi.]

Verse 4. And thy speech shall be low out of the dust—(And from out of the dust thou shalt utter a feeble speech)] That the souls of the dead uttered a feeble stridulous sound, very different from the natural human voice, was a popular notion among the heathens as well as among the Jews. This appears from several passages of their poets; Homer, Virgil, Horace. The pretenders to the art of necromancy, who were chiefly women, had an art of speaking with a feigned voice; so as to deceive those who applied to them, by making them believe that it was the voice of the ghost. They had a way of uttering sounds, as if they were formed, not by the organs of speech, but deep in the chest, or in the belly; and were thence called εγγαστριμυθοι, ventriloqui: they could make the voice seem to come from beneath the ground, from a distant part, in another direction, and not from themselves; the better to impose upon those who consulted them. Εξεπιτηδες το γενος τουτο τον αμυδρον ηχον επιτηδευονται, ἱνα δια την ασαφειαν της φωνης τον του ψευδους αποδιδρασκωσιν ελεγχον. Psellus De Dæmonibus, apud Bochart, i. p. 731. "These people studiously acquire, and affect on purpose, this sort of obscure sound; that by the uncertainty of the voice they may the better escape being detected in the cheat." From these arts of the necromancers the popular notion seems to have arisen, that the ghost's voice was a weak, stridulous, almost inarticulate sort of sound, very different from the speech of the living.

Verse 5. The multitude of thy strangers—(The multitude of the proud)] For זרין zereyca, thy strangers, read זרים zerim, the proud, according to the Septuagint; parallel and synonymous to עריצים âritsim, the terrible, in the next line: the ר resh was at first ד daleth in a MS. See note on chap. xxv. 2.

The fifth, sixth and seventh verses contain an admirable description of the destruction of Sennacherib's army, with a beautiful variety of the most expressive and sublime images: perhaps more adapted to show the greatness, the suddenness, and horror of the event, than the means and manner by which it was effected. Compare chap. xxx. 30—33.

Verse 7. As a dream] This is the beginning of the comparison, which is pursued and applied in the next verse. Sennacherib and his mighty army are not compared to a dream, because of their sudden disappearance: but the disappointment of their eager hopes is compared to what happens to a hungry and thirsty man, when he awakes from a dream, in which fancy had presented to him meat and drink in abundance; and finds it nothing but a vain illusion. The comparison is elegant and beautiful in the highest degree, well wrought up, and perfectly suited to the end proposed. The image is extremely natural, but not obvious: it appeals to our inward feelings, not to our outward senses; and is applied to an event in its concomitant circumstances exactly similar, but in its nature totally different. See De S. Poes. Hebr. Prælect. xii. For beauty and ingenuity it may fairly come in competition with one of the most elegant of Virgil, (greatly improved from Homer, Iliad xxii. 199.) where he has applied to a different purpose, but not so happily, the same image of the ineffectual working of imagination in a dream:

Ac veluti in somnis, oculos ubi languida pressit
Nocte quies, necquicquam avidos extendere cursus
Velle videmur, et in mediis conatibus ægri
Succidimus; non lingua valet, non corpore notæ
Sufficiunt vires, nec vox, aut verba sequuntur.

Æn. xii. 908.

"And as, when slumber seals the closing sight,
The sick wild fancy labours in the night;
Some dreadful visionary foe we shun
With airy strides, but strive in vain to run;
In vain our baffled limbs their powers essay;
We faint, we struggle, sink, and fall away;
Drain'd of our strength, we neither fight nor fly,
And on the tongue the struggling accents die." Pitt.

8 [b] It shall even be as when an hungry man dreameth, and, behold, he eateth; but he awaketh, and his soul is empty: or as when a thirsty man dreameth, and, behold, he drinketh; but he awaketh, and, behold, he is faint, and his soul hath appetite: so shall the multitude of all the nations be, that fight against mount Zion.

9 Stay yourselves and wonder; [c] cry ye out, and cry: [d] they are drunken, [e] but not with wine; they stagger, but not with strong drink.

10 For [f] the LORD hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath [g] closed your eyes: the prophets and your [h] rulers, [i] the seers hath he covered.

11 And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a [k] book [l] that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: [m] and he saith, I cannot; for it is sealed.

12 And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee, and he saith, I am not learned.

Lucretius expresses the very same image with Isaiah:

[Bishop Stock's translation of the prophet's text, is both elegant and just.

"As when a hungry man dreameth; and, lo! he is eating:
And he awaketh; and his appetite is unsatisfied.
And as a thirsty man dreameth; and, lo! he is drinking:
And he awaketh; and, lo! he is faint,
And his appetite craveth."

Verse 11. I cannot; for it is sealed—(I cannot read it; for it is sealed up)] An ancient MS. and the Septuagint have preserved a word here, lost out of the text, לקדות lekadoth, (for לקראת lekarath,) αναγνωναι, read it.

[Kimchi makes some just observations on this verse. The vision, meaning the Divine Revelation of all the prophets, is a book or letter that is sealed, is not easily understood. This is delivered to one that is learned, instructed in the law. Read this; and he saith, I cannot, for it is sealed, a full proof that he does not wish to know the contents, else he would apply to the Prophet to get it explained. change: explained here by some interpreters, I think with great probability, as having its principal view beyond the revolutions then near at hand; to the rejection of the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles. The first were the vineyard of God, כרם אל carem el, (if the prophet, who loves an allusion to words of like sounds, may be supposed to have intended one here,) cultivated and watered by him in vain, to be given up, and to become a wilderness: compare chap. v. 1—7. The last had been hitherto barren; but were, by the grace of God, to be rendered fruitful. See Matt. xxi. 43. Rom. xi. 30, 31. Carmel stands here opposed to Lebanon, and therefore is to be taken as a proper name.

Verse 21. Him that reproveth in the gate—(Him that pleaded in the gate)] "They are heard by the treasurer, master of the horse, and other principal officers of the regency [of Algiers] who sit constantly in the gate of the palace for that purpose:" [that is the distribution of justice.] Shaw's Travels, p. 315. fol. He adds, in the note, "That we read of the elders in the gate, Deut. xxii. 15. and xxv. 7. and Isa. xxix. 21. Amos v. 10. of him that reproveth and rebuketh in the gate. The Ottoman court likewise seems to have been called the Port, from the distribution of justice, and the dispatch of public business, that is carried on in the gates of it."

[Verse 22. Who redeemed Abraham—As God redeemed Abraham from among idolaters, and workers of iniquity; so will He redeem those who hear the words of the Book, and are humbled before him, ver. 18, 19.]

Concerning the house of Jacob—(The God of the house of Jacob)] I read אל el, as a noun, not a preposition: the parallel line favours this sense; and there is no address to the house of Jacob, to justify the other.

Neither shall his face now wax pale—(His face shall no more be covered with confusion)] "יחורו yechoro, Chald. ut ó [μεταβαλει] Theod. εντραπησεται, Syr. נחפרו necaphro videtur legendum יחפרו yechephero: hic enim solum legitur verbum חור chavar, nec in linguis affinibus habet pudoris significationem." SECKER.

[Here alone is the verb חור chavar read: nor has it in the cognate languages, the signification of shame.]

Verse 23. But when he seeth his children, the work of mine hands—(For when his children shall see the work of my hands)] For בראתו berato, I read בראת berat, with the Septuagint and Syriac.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXX.

Verse 1. And that cover with a covering—(Who ratify covenants)] Heb. "Who pour out a libation." Sacrifice and libation were ceremonies constantly used, in ancient times, by most nations, in the ratifying of covenants; a libation therefore is used for a covenant, as in Greek the word σπονδη, for the same reason, stands for both. This seems to be the most easy explication of the Hebrew phrase, and it has the authority of the Septuagint, εποιησατε συνθηκας.

Verse 4. Hanes] Six MSS. [of Kennicott,] and perhaps six others, with [four of De Rossi,] read חנם chanam, in vain, for חנס Hanes; and so also the Septuagint, who read likewise יגעו yagêu, laboured, for יגיעו yagiêu, arrived at.

Verse 5. Were ashamed] Eight MSS. (one ancient,) [of Kennicott, and ten of De Rossi] read הביש habish, without א aleph. So the Chaldee and Vulgate.

But a shame—(But proved even a shame)] Four MSS. (three ancient) after כי ki, add אם im, unless, which seems wanted to complete the phrase in its usual form.

Verse 6. The burden] משא masha, seems here to be taken in its proper sense; the load, not the oracle. The same subject is continued; and there seems to be no place here for a new title to a distinct prophecy.

[Does not burden of the beasts of the South in this place relate to the presents sent by Hoshea king of Israel, to the South, to Egypt, which lay south of Judea, to engage the Egyptians to succour him against the king of Assyria?]

Into the land of trouble and anguish—(Through a land of distress and difficulty)] The same deserts are here spoken of, which the Israelites passed through, when they came out of Egypt, which Moses describes, Deut. viii. 15. as "that great and terrible wilderness, wherein were fiery serpents, and scorpions, and drought; where there was no water." And which was designed to be a kind of barrier between them and Egypt, of which the Lord had said, "Ye shall henceforth return no more that way." Deut. xvii. 16.

Shall not profit them] A MS. adds in the margin the word למו lamo, them, which seems to have been lost out of the text; it is authorized by the Septuagint and Vulgate, Verse 7. Their strength is to sit still—(Rahab the Inactive)] The two last words, הם שבת hem shabeth, joined into one, make the participle pihel המשבת hemshabeth. I find that the learned professor Doederlein, in his version of Isaiah, and note on this place, has given the same conjecture; which he speaks of as having been formerly published by him. A concurrence of different persons in the same conjecture adds to it a greater degree of probability.

Verse 8. For ever and ever—(For a testimony for ever)] לעד lead. So the Syriac, Chaldee, Vulgate, and Septuagint in MSS. Pachom. and 1. D. 11. εις μαρτυριον, which two words have been lost out of the other copies of the Septuagint.

pression, which seems not to belong to this place: a very probable conjecture of Houbigant.

Verse 13. Swelling out in a high wall—(A swelling in a high wall)] It has been observed before, that the buildings of Asia generally consist of little better than what we call mud-walls. "All the houses at Ispahan," says Thevenot, (Vol. II. p. 159.) "are built of bricks made of clay and straw, and dried in the sun; and covered with a plaster made of a fine white stone. In other places in Persia, the houses are built with nothing else but such bricks, made with tempered clay and chopped straw, well mingled together, and dried in the sun, and then used: but the least rain dissolves them." Sir John Chardin's MS. remark on this place of Isaiah is very apposite: Murs en Asie etant faits de terre se fendent ainsi par milieu et de haut en bas—[The walls in Asia being made of earth often cleave from top to bottom.] This shows clearly how obvious and expressive the image is. The Psalmist has in the same manner made use of it, to express sudden and utter destruction:

"Ye shall be slain all of you;
[Ye shall be] like an inclining wall, like a shattered fence."
Psa. lxii. 4.

Verse 14. He shall not spare—(And spareth it not)] Five MSS. add the conjunction ו vau to the negative; ולא ve-lo.

Verse 17. At the rebuke of five shall ye flee—(At the rebuke of five ten thousand of you shall flee)] In the second line of this verse a word is manifestly omitted, which should answer to one thousand in the first: the Septuagint supply πολλοι, רבים rabbim. But the true word is רבבה ribebah; as, I am persuaded, any one will be convinced, who will compare the following passages with this place:

"How should one chase a thousand;
And two put ten thousand [רבבה] to flight?"
Deut. xxxii. 30.

"And five of you shall chase a hundred;
And a hundred of you shall chase [רבבה] ten thousand."
Lev. xxvi. 8.

Verse 18. And therefore will he be exalted—(Even for this shall he expect in silence)] For ירום yrom, he shall be exalted, which belongs not to this place, Houbigant reads ידום yedom, he shall be silent: and so it seems to be in a MS. Another MS. instead of it, reads ישוב yashub, he shall return. The mistakes occasioned by the similitude of the letters ד daleth and ר resh are very frequent, as the reader may have already observed.

Verse 19. For the people shall dwell in Zion—(When a holy people shall dwell in Sion)] Λαος ἁγιος, Septuagint; עם קדוש âm kedosh. The word קדוש kedosh, lost out of the text, but happily supplied by the Septuagint, clears up the sense, otherwise extremely obscure. [When the rest of the cities of the land were taken by the king of Assyria, Zion was preserved, and all that were in it.]

Thou shalt weep no more—(Thou shalt implore him with weeping)] The negative particle לא lo is not acknowledged by the Septuagint. It may perhaps have been written by mistake for לו lo, to him, of which there are many examples.

Verse 21. When ye turn to the right hand, and when ye turn to the left—(Turn not aside, to the right or to the left)] The Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate, translate as if, instead of כי—וכי ki-ve-ki, they read לא—ולא lo-ve-lo.

Verse 22. Ye shall defile—(Ye shall treat as defiled)] The very prohibition of Moses, Deut. vii. 25. only thrown out of the prose into the poetical form. "The graven images of their gods ye shall burn with fire: thou shalt not desire the silver or the gold that is on them; nor take it unto thee, lest thou be snared therein; for it is an abomination to JEHOVAH thy God."

Verse 25. When the towers fall—(When the mighty fall)] מגדלים megadolim, μεγαλους, Sym. μεγαλυνομενους, Aquila. רברבין rabrebin, Chald. [all signifying mighty ones.]

Verse 26. Shall be sevenfold] The text adds כאור שבעת הימים ke-or shibâth hayamim, "as the light of seven days," a manifest gloss, taken in from the margin: it is not in most of the copies of the Septuagint. It interrupts the rhythmical construction, and obscures the sense by a false, or at least an unnecessary interpretation.

[By moon, sun, light, are to be understood the abundance of spiritual and temporal felicity, with which God should bless them in the days of the Messiah, which should be sevenfold, i. e. vastly exceed all that they had ever before possessed.]

Verse 27. And the burden thereof is heavy—(And the flame rageth violently)] משאה mesaah; this word seems to be rightly rendered in our translation, the flame, Judg. xx. 38, 40, &c. a sign of fire, Jer. vi. 1. called properly משאה mishaah, an elevation, from its tending upwards.

Verse 28. To sift the nations with the sieve of vanity—(To toss the nations with the van of perdition)] The word להנפה lahanaphah is in its form very irregular. Kimchi says it is for להניף lehaniph. Houbigant supposes it to be a mistake, and shows the cause of it; the joining it to the ה he, which should begin the following word. The true reading is להניף הגוים lehaniph ha-goyim, to sift the nations.

The Vulgate seems to be the only one of the ancient interpreters who has explained rightly the sense: but he has dropped the image; ad perdendas gentes in nihilum. Kimchi's explanation is to the following effect,—"נפה naphah, is a van with which they winnow corn; and its use is to cleanse the corn from the chaff and straw: but the van, with which God will winnow the nations, will be the van of emptiness or perdition; for nothing useful shall remain behind, but all shall come to nothing, and perish. In like manner, a bridle is designed to guide the horse in the right way: but the bridle, which God will put in the jaws of the people, shall not direct them aright, but shall make them err, and lead them into destruction." This latter image the prophet has applied to the same subject afterward, chap. xxxii. 29.

"I will put my bridle in thy jaws,
And turn thee back by the way in which thou camest."

And as to the former it is to be observed, that the van of the ancients was a large instrument, somewhat like a shovel, with a long handle, with which they tossed the corn mixed with the chaff and chopped straw into the air, that the wind might separate them. See Hammond on Matt. iii. 12.

Le Clerc conjectured מוסרה moserah, of correction; see Prov. xxii. 15. and so it is in two MSS. (one of them ancient,) and seems to be so in the Bodley MS. The Syriac has רשועבדה deshuêbedah, virga domans, vel subjectionis,—"the taming rod, or rod of subjection."

With tabrets and harps] With every demonstration of joy and thanksgiving for the destruction of the enemy in so wonderful a manner: with hymns of praise, accompanied with musical instruments. See ver. 29.

With it—(Against them)] For בה bah, against her, fifty-two MSS. and five editions read בם bam, against them.

Verse 33. For Tophet is ordained] Tophet is a valley very near to Jerusalem, to the south-east, called also the valley of Hinnom or Gehenna; where the Canaanites, and afterwards the Israelites, sacrificed their children, by making them pass through the fire; that is, by burning them in the fire, to Moloch, [as some suppose.] It is therefore used for a place of punishment by fire; and by our blessed Saviour in the gospel, for hell-fire: as the Jews themselves had applied it. See Chald. on Isaiah, xxxiii. 14. where מוקדי עלם mokedey ôlam, is rendered "the Gehenna of everlasting fire." Here the place where the Assyrian army was destroyed is called Tophet by a metonymy; for the Assyrian army was destroyed probably at a greater distance from Jerusalem, and quite on the opposite side of it: for Nob is mentioned as the last station, from which the king of Assyria should threaten Jerusalem, chap. x. 32. where the prophet seems to have given a very exact chorographical description of his march in order to attack the city.

CHAPTER XXXI.

The Jews again reproved for their confidence in Egypt, finely contrasted with their neglect of the power and protection of God, 1—3. Deliverance and protection are, notwithstanding, promised, expressed by two similes, the first remarkably lofty and poetical, the latter singularly beautiful and tender, 4, 5. Exhortation to repentance, joined with the prediction of a more reformed period, 6, 7. This Chapter concludes, like the preceding, with prophesying the fall of Sennacherib, 8, 9.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXXI.

[Verse 1. Woe to them that go down to Egypt] This is a reproof to the Israelites for forming an alliance with the Egyptians; and not trusting in the Lord.]

And stay on horses—(Who trust in horses)] For ועל ve-âl, and upon, first twenty MSS. [of Kennicott, thirty of De Rossi, one of my own,] and the Septuagint, Arabic, and Vulgate, read על âl, upon, without the conjunction, which disturbs the sense.

Verse 2. His words—(His word)] דברו debaro, singular, without ' god, two MSS. of Dr. Kennicott, the Septuagint, and Targ. Hieros. [דרכיו derecaiv, his ways, is found in one MS.

Verse 3. He that helpeth (the Egyptians) shall fall—and he that is holpen (the Israelites) shall fall down together.]

Verse 4. Like as the lion] This comparison is exactly in the spirit and manner, and very nearly approaching to the expression, of Homer.

Famished, with courage and with hunger stung,

Or rushing onward in his breast receives
The well-aimed spear.

Verse 5. Passing over—(Leaping forward)] The generality of interpreters observe in this place an allusion to thedeliverance, which God vouchsafed to His people, when He destroyed the first-born of the Egyptians, and exempted those of the Israelites sojourning among them by a peculiar interposition. The same word is made use of here, which is used upon that occasion; and which gave the name to the feast, which was instituted in commemoration of that deliverance; פסח pesach. But the difficulty is, to reconcile the commonly received meaning of that word with the circumstances of the similitude here used to illustrate the deliverance, represented as parallel to the deliverance in Egypt.

"As the mother-birds hovering over their young;
So shall JEHOVAH God of hosts protect Jerusalem,
Protecting and delivering, passing over, and rescuing her."

This difficulty is, I think, well solved by Vitringa; whose remark is the more worthy of observation, as it leads to the true meaning of an important word, which hitherto seems greatly to have been misunderstood; though Vitringa himself, as it appears to me, has not exactly enough defined the precise meaning of it. He says, "פסח pasach signifies to cover, to protect by covering; σκεπασω ὑμας, Septuagint. JEHOVAH obteget ostium:" [The Lord will cover or protect the door;] whereas it means that particular action or motion, by which God at that time placed Himself in such a situation as to protect the house of the Israelite against the destroying angel: to spring forward, to throw one's self in the way, in order to cover and protect. Cocceius comes nearer to the true meaning than Vitringa, by rendering it, gradum facere, to march, to step forward. Lexicon in voc. ing of the word פסח pasach upon other occasions is to halt, to be lame, to leap as in a rude manner of dancing, (as the prophets of Baal did, 1 Kings xviii. 26.) all which agrees very well together; for the motion of a lame person is a perpetual springing forward, by throwing himself from the weaker upon the stronger leg. The common notion of God's passage over the houses of the Israelites is, that in going through the land of Egypt to smite the first-born, seeing the blood on the doors of the houses of the Israelites, he passed over, or skipped, those houses, and forebore to smite them. But that this is not the true notion of the thing, will be plain from considering the words of the sacred historian; where he describes very explicitly the action: "For JEHOVAH will pass through to smite the Egyptians; and when he seeth the blood on the lintels and on the two side posts, JEHOVAH will spring forward over (or before) the door, ופסח יהוה על הפתח upesach yehovah âl ha-petach, and will not suffer the destroyer to come into your houses to smite you," Exod. xii. 23. Here are manifestly two distinct agents, with which the notion of passing over is not consistent; for that supposes but one agent. The two agents are the destroying angel passing through to smite every house; and JEHOVAH the Protector, keeping pace with him; and who, seeing the door of the Israelite marked with the blood, the token prescribed leaps forward, throws himself with a sudden motion in the way, opposes the destroying angel; and covers and protects that house against the destroying angel, nor suffers him to smite it. In this way of considering the action, the beautiful similitude of the bird protecting her young, answers exactly to the application by the allusion to the deliverance in Egypt. As the mother bird spreads her wings to cover her young, throws herself before them, and opposes the rapacious bird that assaults them; so shall JEHOVAH protect, as with a shield, Jerusalem from the enemy, protecting and delivering, springing forward and rescuing her: ὑπερβαινων, as the three other Greek interpreters, Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion, render it. The Septuagint, περιποιησεται; instead of which MS. Pachom. has περιθησεται, circumeundo proteget, "in going about he shall protect," which I think is the true reading. Homer, (Il. viii. 329.) expresses the very same image by this word:

Αιας δ' ουκ αμελησε κασιγνητοιο πεσοντος,
Αλλα θεων περιβη, και οι σακος αμφεκαλυψε·

——"But Ajax his broad shield display'd,
And screen'd his brother with a mighty shade."

——Ος Χρυσην αμφιεβηκας. Il. i. 37.

Which the Scholiast explains by περιεβηκας, ὑπερμαχεις, i. e. "Thou who strictly guardest Chryses." [On this verse Kimchi says, The angel of the Lord which destroyed the Assyrians, is compared to a lion, ver. 4., for his strength; and here (ver. 5.) to flying birds, for his swiftness.]

Verse 6. Have deeply revolted—(Have so deeply engaged in revolt)] All the ancient Versions read תעמיקו teemiku, in the second person, [instead of העמיקו heêmiku, they have deeply revolted, &c.]

Verse 7. Which your own hands have made unto you for a sin—(The sin, which their own hands have made)] The construction of the word חטא chata, sin, in this place is not easy. The Septuagint have omitted it: MSS. Pachom. and 1. D. 11. and Cod. Marchal. in margine, supply the omission by the word ἁμαρτιαν, sin, or ἁμαρτημα, said to be from Aquila's Version; which I have followed. The learned professor Schroeder, Institut. Ling. Hebr. p. 298. makes it to be in regimine with ידיכם yadeycem, as an epithet; your sinful hands. The Septuagint render the pronoun in the third person, αἱ χειρες αυτων, their hands; and an ancient MS. has, agreeably to that rendering, להם lahem, to them, for לכם lacem, to you; which word they have likewise omitted, as not necessary to complete the sense.

[Verse 8. Then shall the Assyrian fall, &c.] Because he was to be discomfited by the angel of the Lord, destroying in his camp, in one night, upwards of one hundred and eighty thousand men—and Sennacherib himself fell by the hands of the princes, his own sons. Not mighty men, for they were not soldiers; not mean men, for they were princes.]

NOTES ON CHAP. XXXII.

[Verse 1. Behold, a king shall reign in righteousness] If king Hezekiah were a type of Christ, then this prophecy may refer to his time: but otherwise it seems to have Hezekiah primarily in view. It is evident, however, that in the fullest sense, these words cannot be applied to any man:—God alone can do all that is promised here.]

And princes] שרים ve-sarim, without ל lamed, lo; so the ancient Versions. An ancient MS. has ושריו vesaraiv, and his princes.

Verse 2. As the shadow of a great rock] The shadow of a great projecting rock is the most refreshing that is possible in a hot country, not only as most perfectly excluding the rays of the sun; but also having in itself a natural coolness, which it reflects and communicates to every thing about it.

Speluncæque tegant, et saxea procubet umbra.
VIRG. Georg. iii. 145.

"Let the cool cave and shady rock protect them."

HESIOD. ii. 206.

"When Sirius rages, and thine aching head,
Parch'd skin, and feeble knees, refreshment need;
Then to the rock's projected shade retire,
With Biblin wine recruit thy wasted powers."

Verse 3. And the eyes of them that see shall not be dim—(And him the eyes of those, that see, shall regard)] For ולא ve-lo, and not, Le Clerc reads ולו ve-lo, and to him, of which mistake the Masoretes acknowledge there are fifteen instances: and many more are reckoned by others. The removal of the negative restores to the verb its true and usual sense.

[Verse 5. The vile person shall be no more called liberal—] The different epithets here require minute explication.

The vile person—נבל nabal, the pampered, fattened, brainless fellow, who eats to live; and lives to eat. Who will scarcely part with any thing; and that which he does give, he gives with an evil eye and grudging heart.

Liberal—נדיב nadib; the generous openhearted, princely man, who writes on all his possessions For myself and mankind; and lives only to get and to do good.

The churl—כילי kilai, the avaricious man; he who starves himself amidst his plenty; and will not take the necessaries of life for fear of lessening his stock.

Thus he differs from נבל nabal, who feeds himself to the full, and regards no one else; like the rich man in the gospel. The avaricious man is called כילי kilai, from כי ki for, and לי li, myself—or contracted from כל col, all, and לי li, to myself—all is mine;—all I have is my own;—and all I can get is for myself;—and yet this man enjoys nothing.—He witholds

From back and belly too their proper fare:—
O cursed lust of gold, when for thy sake
This wretch throws up his interest in both worlds,
First starv'd in this, then damn'd in that to come!

Bountiful—שוע shoâ, he who is abundantly rich;—who rejoices in his plenty, and deals out to the distressed with a liberal hand.]

6 For the vile person will speak villany, and his heart will work iniquity, to practise hypocrisy, and to utter error against the LORD, to make empty the soul of the hungry, and he will cause the drink of the thirsty to fail.

7 The instruments also of the churl are evil: he deviseth wicked devices to destroy the poor with lying words, even [a]when the needy speaketh right.

8 But the liberal deviseth liberal things; and by liberal things shall he [b]stand.

9 Rise up, ye women [c]that are at ease; hear my voice, ye careless daughters; give ear unto my speech.

10 [d]Many days and years shall ye be troubled, ye careless women: for the vintage shall fail, the gathering shall not come.

12 They shall lament for the teats, for [e]the pleasant fields, for the fruitful vine.

13 [f]Upon the land of my people shall come up thorns and briers; [g]yea, upon all the houses of joy in [h]the joyous city:

Verse 6. The vile person will speak villany—(The fool will still utter folly)] A sort of proverbial saying; which Euripides (Bacchæ, 369.) has expressed in the very same manner and words: μωρα γαρ μωρος λεγει, The fool speaks folly. Of this kind of simple and unadorned proverb or parable, see De S. Poes. Hebr. Prælect. xxiv.

Against the LORD—(Against JEHOVAH)] For אל el, two MSS. read על âl, more properly: [but both are of nearly the same meaning.]

Verse 7. The instruments of the churl are evil—(As for the niggard, his instruments are evil)] His machinations, his designs. The paranomasia, which the prophet frequently deals in, suggested this expression וכלי כליו ve-kelai kelaiv. The first word is expressed with some variety in the MSS. Seven MSS. read וכילי vekili, one וכל vecol, another וכולי vecoli.

To destroy the poor with lying words—(To defeat the assertions of the poor in judgment)] A word seems to have been lost here, and two others to have suffered a small alteration; which has made the sentence very obscure. The Septuagint have happily retained the rendering of the lost word, and restored the sentence in all its parts: και διασκεδασαι λογους ταπεινων εν κρισει· במשפט ולחפר דברי אביון ul-chapher dibrey ebion bemishpat, [and disperse the words of the poor in judgment.] They frequently render the verb הפר haphar, by διασκεδασαι. A MS. reads ולרבר u-ledaber, which gives authority for the preposition ל lamed, to, necessary to the sense; and the Septuagint, Syriac, and Chaldee, read במשפט be-mishpat, IN judgment.

Verse 8. Liberal things—(Generous purposes)] "Of the four sorts of persons mentioned ver. 5. three are described, ver. 6, 7, and 8. but not the fourth." SECKER. Perhaps for והוא ve-hu, and he, we ought to read ושוע ve-shoâ, the bountiful.

[Verse 9. Rise up, ye women—ye provinces—ye careless daughters—ye cities. Targum.

From this verse to the end of the fourteenth, the desolation of Judea by the Chaldeans appears to be foretold.]

Verse 11. Gird sackcloth] שק sak, sackcloth, a word necessary to the sense is here lost; but preserved by the Septuagint, MSS. Alex. and Pachom. and 1. D. 11. and edit. Ald. and Comp. and the Arabic and Syriac.

Tremble—be troubled—strip you] פשטה peshetah, רגזה regazah, &c. These are infinitives, with a paragogic ה he, according to Schultens Institut. Ling. Hebr. p. 453. and are to be taken in an imperative sense.

Verse 12. They shall lament—for the pleasant fields—(Mourn ye for the pleasant field)] The Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgate, read ספדו saphedu, mourn ye, imperative: twelve MSS. (five ancient,) two Editions, the Septuagint, Aquila, Symmachus, Theodotion, Syriac, and Vulgate, all read שרה sadeh, a field; not שדי sedey, breasts.

Verse 13. Shall come up thorns and briers—(The thorn and the brier shall come up)] All the ancient Versions read ושמיר ve-shamir, with the conjunction. And an ancient MS. has בו תעלה taâleh bo, shall come up in it, which seems to be right; or rather בה bah: and there is a rasure in the place of בו bo in another ancient MS.

Yea, upon all the houses of joy] For כי ki, the ancient Versions, except the Vulgate, seem to have read ו ve. כי ki may perhaps be a mistake for בו bo, or בה bah, in it, above mentioned. It is not necessary in this place.

The description of impending distress which begins at ver. 13. belongs to other times than that of Sennacherib's invasion, from which they were so soon delivered. It must at least extend to the ruin of the country and city by the Chaldeans. And the promise of blessings which follows was not fulfilled under the Mosaic dispensation; they belong to the KINGDOM of Messiah. Compare ver. 15. with chap. xxix. 17., and see the Note there.

[Verse 14. The palaces shall be forsaken—The house of the sanctuary, (the temple) shall be destroyed. Targum.]

Verse 20. That sow beside all waters—(Who sow your seed in every well-watered place)] Sir John Chardin's note on this place is:—"This exactly answers the manner of planting rice, for they sow it upon the water; and before sowing, while the earth is covered with water, they cause the ground to be trodden by oxen, horses, and asses, who go mid-leg deep; and this is the way of preparing the ground for sowing. As they sow the rice on the water, they transplant it in the water." Harmer's Observ. Vol. i. p. 280. "Rice is the food of two-thirds of mankind." "Le ris, qui est leur principal aliment et leur froment (i. e. des Siamois) n'est jamais assez arrosé; il croit au milieu de l'eau, et les campagnes ou on le cultive ressemblent plutôt à de marets que non pas à des terres qu'on laboure avec la charue. Le ris a bien cette force, que quoi qu'il y ait six ou sept pieds d'eau sur lui, il pousse toujours sa tige au dessus, et le tuyau qui le porte s'eleve et croit à proportion de la hauteur de l'eau qui noye son champ." Voyage de l'Evêque de Beryte, p. 144. Paris, 1666. ["Rice, which is the principal grain and aliment of the Siamese, can never be too much watered. It grows in the water, and the fields where it is sown resemble marshes rather than fields cultivated by ploughing. Rice has that property that although it be covered with water six or seven feet deep, yet it raises its stalk above it; and this grows long in proportion to the depth of the water by which the field is inundated."]

CHAPTER XXXIII.

This Chapter contains the sequel of the prophecy respecting Sennacherib. The Prophet addresses himself to the Assyrian monarch, 1—4. The mercy and power of God acknowledged by the Jews to be exerted in their behalf, 5, 6. Distress and despair of the Jews at the approach of Sennacherib, 7—9. Gracious promise of deliverance from the Assyrian army, 10—13. Dreadful apprehensions of the wicked finely contrasted with the calm confidence and security of the righteous, 14—17. Description of the security of the Jews under the reign of Hezekiah, and of the wretched condition of Sennacherib and his army, 18—24.

[a] Ch. 21. 2. Hab. 2. 8.

[b] Rev. 13. 10.—[c] Ch. 25. 9.

The plan of the prophecy continued in this Chapter, and which is manifestly distinct from the foregoing, is peculiarly elegant. To set it in a proper light it will be necessary to mark the transitions from one part of it to another.

In ver. 1. the prophet addresses himself to Sennacherib, briefly, but strongly and elegantly, expressing the injustice of his ambitious designs, and the sudden disappointments of them.

In ver. 2. the Jews are introduced offering up their earnest supplications to God in their present distressful condition; with expressions of their trust and confidence in His protection.

In ver. 3 and 4. the prophet in the name of God, or rather God Himself, is introduced addressing Himself to Sennacherib, and threatening him, that notwithstanding the terror which he had occasioned in the invaded countries, ye he should fall, and become an easy prey to those whom he had intended to subdue.

In ver. 5 and 6. a chorus of Jews is introduced, acknowledging the mercy and power of God, who had undertaken to protect them; extolling it with direct opposition to the boasted power of their enemies, and celebrating the wisdom and piety of their king Hezekiah, who had placed his confidence in the favour of God.

Then follows, in verses 7, 8, and 9, a description of the distress and despair of the Jews, upon the king of Assyria's marching against Jerusalem, and sending his summons to them to surrender, after the treaty he had made with Hezekiah on the conditions of his paying, as he actually did pay to him, three hundred talents of silver and thirty talents of gold. 2 Kings xviii. 14—16.

In ver. 10. God Himself is again introduced, declaring that He will interpose in this critical situation of affairs, and disappoint the vain designs of the enemies of His people, by discomfiting and utterly consuming them.

Then follows ver. 11—22. still in the person of God, (which however falls at last into that of the prophet) a description of the dreadful apprehensions of the wicked in those times of distress and imminent danger; finely contrasted with the confidence and security of the righteous, and their trust in the promises of God that He will be their never-failing Strength and Protector.

The whole concludes, in the person of the prophet, with a description of the security of the Jews under the protection of God, and of the wretched state of Sennacherib and his army, wholly discomfited and exposed to be plundered even by the weakest of the enemy.

Much of the beauty of this passage depends on the explanation above given of ver. 3 and 4, as addressed by the prophet, or by God Himself to Sennacherib; not as it is usually taken, as addressed by the Jews to God, ver. 3., and then, ver. 4., as addressed to the Assyrians. To set this in a clear light it may be of use to compare it with a passage of the prophet Joel; where, speaking of the destruction caused by the locusts, he sets, in the same strong light of opposition as Isaiah does here, the power of the enemy, and the power of JEHOVAH, who would destroy that enemy. Thus Isaiah to Sennacherib:—

"When thou didst raise thyself up, the nations were dispersed—" Ver. 3.

"But now will I arise, saith JEHOVAH;
Now will I be exalted." Ver. 10.

And thus Joel, chap. ii. 20, 21.

"His stink shall come up, and his ill savour shall ascend;
Though he hath done great things.
Fear not, O land, be glad and rejoice;
For JEHOVAH will do great things."

NOTES ON CHAP. XXXIII.

Verse 1. And dealest treacherously—(Thou plunderer)] See Note on chap. xxi. 2.

Verse 2. Be thou their arm every morning—(Be thou our strength every morning)] For זרעם zeroâm, their arm, the Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate read זרענו zeroênu, our arm, in the first person of the pronoun, not the third: the edition of Felix Pratensis has זרעתינו zerâtino in the margin.

[The prophet is here praying against the enemies of God's people; and yet this part of the prayer seems to be in their behalf: but from the above authorities it appears that our arm is the true reading, though I do not find it confirmed by any of Kennicott's, De Rossi's, or my own MSS. My old MS. Bible has,—Be thou oure arm in tryn.]

6 And wisdom and knowledge shall be the stability of thy times, and strength of [b] salvation: the fear of the LORD is his treasure.

7 Behold, their [c] valiant ones shall cry without: [d] the ambassadors of peace shall weep bitterly.

8 [e] The highways lie waste, the wayfaring man ceaseth: [f] he hath broken the covenant, he hath despised the cities, he regardeth no man.

9 [g] The earth mourneth and languisheth: Lebanon is ashamed and [h] hewn down: Sharon is like a wilderness; and Bashan and Carmel shake off their fruits.

10 [i] Now will I rise, saith the LORD; now will I be exalted; now will I lift up myself.

14 The sinners in Zion are afraid; fearfulness hath surprised the hypocrites. Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?

15 He that [n] walketh [o] righteously, and speaketh [p] uprightly; he that despiseth the gain of [q] oppressions, that shaketh his hands from holding of bribes, that stoppeth his ears from hearing of [r] blood, and [s] shutteth his eyes from seeing evil;

[Verse 14. The sinners in Zion are afraid—Zion has been generally considered as a type of the Church of God. Now all the members of God's church should be holy, and given to good works: sinners in Zion, therefore, are portentous beings! but, alas! where are they not? The Targum on this verse is worthy of notice:—"The sinners in Zion are broken down; fear hath seized the ungodly, who are suffering for their ways. They say, Who among us shall dwell in Zion, where the splendor of the Divine Majesty is like a consuming fire? Who of us shall dwell in Jerusalem, where the ungodly are judged and delivered into hell for an eternal burning?" Everdurynge brennyngis. Old MS. Bible.]

Where is the receiver—Or he who was to have collected this tribute.]

Where is he that counted the towers] That is, the commander of the enemy's forces, who surveyed the fortifications of the city, and took an account of the height, strength, and situation of the walls and towers, that he might know where to make the assault with the greatest advantage: as Capaneus before Thebes is represented in a passage of the Phœnissæ of Euripides, which Grotius has applied as an illustration of this place:—

Εκεινος επτα προσβασεις τεκμαιρεται
Πυργων, ανω τε κατω τειχη μετρων. Ver. 187.

["To these seven turrets each approach he marks;
The walls from their proud summit to their base
Measuring with eager eye."

He that counted the towers—Those who were ordered to review the fortified places in Judea, that they might be manned and provisioned for the king of Assyria. So sure was he of gaining Jerusalem and subduing the whole of Judea, that he had already formed all these arrangements. Dodd's notes.]

Verse 20. Look upon Zion—(Thou shalt see Sion)] For חזה chazeh, see, read תחזה techazeh, thou shalt see, with the Chaldee. Houbigant. [At the end of this verse we find in the Masoretic Bibles this note, חצי הספר chatsi ha-sepher, the middle of the book; that is, the middle of the book of Isaiah.]

Verse 21. The glorious LORD—(The glorious name of JEHOVAH)] I take שם shem for a noun, with the Septuagint and Syriac. See Psa. xx. 1. Prov. xviii. 10.

[Verse 23. Thy tacklings are loosed—Here the Assyrians are represented under the figure of a ship, wrecked by a violent storm; and the people on the beach,—young, old, feeble, and diseased,—gathering the spoil without any to hinder them. Kimchi, who understands the whole of this Chapter of Hezekiah and the king of Assyria, says,—"There are others of our Rabbins who apply it all to the days of the Messiah."]

Their mast—(Thy mast)] For תרנם terenem, their mast, the Syriac reads תרנין terenei, thy mast; the Septuagint and Vulgate, תרנך terenca, ὁ ιστος σου εκλισεν, thy mast is fallen aside. Septuagint. They seem to have read נטה natah, or (פנה panah) תרנך terenca; or rather, לא כן lo-cun, is not firm, the negative having been omitted in the present Text by mistake. However, I have followed their sense, which seems very probable; as the present reading is to me extremely obscure.

Verse 24. And the inhabitant shall not say] This verse is somewhat obscure. The meaning of it seems to be, that the army of Sennacherib shall by the stroke of God be reduced to so shattered and so weak a condition, that the Jews shall fall upon the remains of them and plunder them without resistance: that the most infirm and disabled of the people of Jerusalem shall come in for their share of the spoil; the lame shall seize the prey; even the sick and the diseased shall throw aside their infirmities, and recover strength enough to hasten to the general plunder. See above.

The last line of the verse is parallel to the first, and expresses the same sense in other words. Sickness being considered as a visitation from God, and a punishment of sin; the forgiveness of sin is equivalent to the removal of a disease. Thus the Psalmist:—

"Who forgiveth all thy sin;
And healeth all thine infirmities." Psa. ciii. 3.

Where the latter line only varies the expression of the former. And our blessed Saviour reasons with the Jews on the same principle :—"Whether is it easier to say to the sick of the palsy, Thy sins are forgiven thee ; or to say, Arise, and take up thy bed and walk ?" Mark ii. 9. See also Matt. viii. 17. Isa. liii. 4. "Qui locus Isaiæ, 1 Pet. ii. 24. refertur ad remissionem peccatorum : hic vero ad sanationem morborum, quia ejusdem potentiæ et bonitatis est utrumque præstare ; et, quia peccatis remissis, et morbi, qui fructus sunt peccatorum, pelluntur."—[Which passage of Isaiah has reference in 1 Pet. ii. 24. to the remission of sins, and here to the healing of diseases, because both are effects of the same power and goodness ; and because with the remission of sins was associated the removal of disorders, the fruits of sins.] Wetstein on Matt. viii. 17.

That this prophecy was exactly fulfilled I think we may gather from the history of this great event given by the prophet himself. It is plain, that Hezekiah, by his treaty with Sennacherib, by which he agreed to pay him three hundred talents of silver, and thirty talents of gold, had stripped himself of his whole treasure. He not only gave him all the silver and gold that was in his own treasury, and in that of the temple ; but was even forced to cut off the gold from the doors of the temple and from the pillars, with which he had himself overlaid them, to satisfy the demands of the king of Assyria : but after the destruction of the Assyrian army we find, that he "had exceeding much riches, and that he made himself treasuries for silver, and for gold, and for precious stones, &c." 2 Chron. xxxii. 27. He was so rich, that, out of pride and vanity, he displayed his wealth to the ambassadors from Babylon. This cannot be otherwise accounted for, than by the prodigious spoil that was taken on the destruction of the Assyrian army. [And thus, in the providence of God, he had the wealth which was exacted from him, restored.]

CHAPTER XXXIV.

The prophet earnestly exhorts all nations to attend to the communication which he has received from Jehovah, as the matter is of the highest importance, and of universal concern, 1. The wrath of God denounced against all the nations that had provoked to anger the defender of the cause of Zion, 2, 3. Great crowd of images by which the final overthrow and utter extermination of every thing which opposes the spread of true religion in the earth are forcibly and majestically set forth ; images so very bold and expressive as to render it impossible, without doing great violence to symbolical language, to restrain their import to the calamities which befel the Edomites in the reign of Nebuchadnezzar, or in that of any other potentate, or even to the calamities which the enemies of the church have yet suffered since the delivery of the prophecy. Edom must therefore be a type of Antichrist, the last grand adversary of the people of God ; and consequently this most awful prophecy, in its ultimate signification, remains to be accomplished, 4—15. The churches of God, at the period of the consummation, commanded to consult the book of Jehovah, and note the exact fulfilment of these terrible predictions in their minutest details. Not one jot or tittle relative even to the circumstances shadowed forth by the impure animals shall be found to fail ; for what the mouth of the Lord has declared necessary to satisfy the Divine justice, His Spirit will accomplish, 16, 17.

This and the following Chapter make one distinct prophecy ; an entire, regular, and beautiful poem, consisting of two parts : the first containing a denunciation of divine vengeance against the enemies of the people, or church of God ; the second describing the flourishing state of the church of God, consequent upon the execution of those judgments.

The event foretold is represented as of the highest importance, and of universal concern : ALL nations are called upon to attend to the declaration of it ; and the wrath of God is denounced against all the nations ; that is, all those that had provoked to anger the Defender of the cause of Sion. Among those, Edom is particularly specified. The principal provo-

5 [f] For my sword shall be bathed in heaven: behold [g] it shall come upon Idumea, and upon the people of my curse, to judgment.

6 The sword of the LORD is filled with blood, it is made fat with fatness, and with the blood of lambs and goats, with the fat of the kidneys of rams; for [h] the LORD hath a sacrifice in Bozrah, and a great slaughter in the land of Idumea.

cation of Edom was their insulting the Jews in their distress, and joining against them with their enemies the Chaldeans; see Amos i. 11. Ezek. xxv. 12.; xxxv. 15. Psa. cxxxvii. 7. Accordingly the Edomites were, together with the rest of the neighbouring nations, ravaged and laid waste by Nebuchadnezzar: see Jer. xxv. 15—26. Mal. i. 3, 4. and see Marsham. Can. Chron. Sæc. xviii. who calls this the age of the destruction of cities. The general devastation spread through all these countries by Nebuchadnezzar, may be the event which the prophet has primarily in view in the thirty-fourth chapter: but this event, as far as we have any account of it in history, seems by no means to come up to the terms of the prophecy, or to justify so high-wrough tand so terrible a description. And it is not easy to discover what connexion the extremely flourishing state of the church or people of God, described in the next Chapter, could have with those events, and how the former could be the consequence of the latter, as it is there represented to be. By a figure, very common in the prophetical writings, any city, or people, remarkably distinguished as enemies of the people and kingdom of God, is put for those enemies in general. This seems here to be the case with Edom and Botsra. It seems therefore reasonable to suppose, with many learned expositors, that this prophecy has a further view to events still future; to some great revolutions to be effected in later times, antecedent to that more perfect state of the kingdom of God upon earth, and serving to introduce it, which the holy Scriptures warrant us to expect.

That the thirty-fifth Chapter has a view beyond any thing that could be the immediate consequence of those events is plain from every part, especially from the middle of it, ver. 5, 6, where the miraculous works wrought by our blessed Saviour are so clearly specified, that we cannot avoid making the application: and our Saviour Himself has moreover plainly referred to this very passage as speaking of Him and His works, Matt. xi. 4, 5. He bids the disciples of John to go and report to their Master the things which they heard and saw; that the blind received their sight, the lame walked, and the deaf heard: and leaves it to him to draw the conclusion in answer to his inquiry, whether he who performed the very works which the prophets foretold should be performed by the Messiah, was not indeed the Messiah Himself. And where are these works so distinctly marked by any of the prophets, as in this place? and how could they be marked more distinctly? To these the strictly literal interpretation of the prophet's words directs us. According to the allegorical interpretation they may have a further view: this part of the prophecy may run parallel with the former, and relate to the future advent of Christ; to the conversion of the Jews, and their restitution to their land; to the extension and purification of the Christian faith; events predicted in the Holy Scriptures, as preparatory to it. [Kimchi says, "This Chapter points out the future destruction of Rome, which is here called Bosra: for Bosra was a great city of the Edomites. Now, the major part of the Romans are Edomites who profess the law of Jesus. The Emperor Cæsar (qy. Constantine) was an Edomite; and so were all the emperors after him. The destruction of the Turkish empire is also comprehended in this prophecy."]

NOTES ON CHAP. XXXIV.

Verse 1. Hearken—(Attend unto me)] A MS. adds in this line the word אלי ali, unto me, after לאמים leummim; which seems to be genuine.

Verse 4. And all the host of heaven] See Note on chap. xxiv. 21. and De Sacrâ Poesi Hebræorum, Præl. ix.

Verse 5. For my sword shall be bathed in heaven—(For my sword is made bare in the heavens)] There seems to be some impropriety in this, according to the present reading: "my sword is made drunken, or is bathed in the heavens:" which forestals, and expresses not in its proper place, what belongs to the next verse: for the sword of JEHOVAH was not to be bathed or glutted with blood in the heavens; but in Botsra and the land of Edom. In the heavens it was only prepared for slaughter. To remedy this Archbishop Secker proposes to read, for בשמים bashamayim, בדמם bedamim; referring to Jer. xlvi. 10. But even this is premature, and not in its proper place. The Chaldee, for רותה rivetah, has תתגלי tetegali, shall be revealed, or disclosed: perhaps he read תראה teraeh, or גראתה gerateh. Whatever reading, different I presume from the present, he might find in his copy, I follow the sense which he has given of it.

Verse 6. The Lord hath a sacrifice—(For JEHOVAH celebrateth a sacrifice)] Ezekiel (chap. xxxix. 16, 17.) has manifestly imitated this place of Isaiah. He hath set forth the great leaders and princes of the adverse powers under the same emblems of goats, bulls, rams, fatlings, &c. and has added to the boldness of the imagery, by introducing God as summoning all the fowls of the air, and all the beasts of the field; and bidding them to the feast, which He has prepared for them by the slaughter of the enemies of His people:—

"And thou, son of man,
Thus saith the Lord JEHOVAH:
Say to the bird of every wing,
And to every beast of the field:
Assemble yourselves, and come;
Gather together from every side,
To the sacrifice which I make for you,
A great slaughter on the mountains of Israel.
And ye shall eat flesh and drink blood:
The flesh of the mighty shall ye eat,
And the blood of the lofty of the earth shall ye drink;
Of rams, of lambs, and of goats,
Of bullocks, all of them the fat ones of Basan:
And ye shall eat fat, till ye are cloyed,
And drink blood, till ye are drunken;
Of my slaughter, which I have slain for you."

The sublime author of the Revelation (chap. xix. 17, 18.) has taken this image from Ezekiel, rather than from Isaiah.

[Verse 7. The unicorns shall come down—ראמים reemim, translated wild goats by Bishop Lowth. The ראם reem, Bochart thinks to be a species of wild goat in the desarts of Arabia.]

With blood—(With their blood)] מדמם medamem: so two ancient MSS. of Kennicott, the Syriac, and Chaldee.

Verse 8. The year of recompences for the controversy of Zion—(The year of recompence to the defender of the cause of Sion)] As from דין dun, דין din, a judge; so from רוב rub, ריב rib, an advocate, or defender; Judici Sionis: Syriac.

[Verse 11. The cormorant—קאת kaath, the pelican, from the root קיא kaya, to vomit, because it is said she swallows shellfish, and when the heat of her stomach has killed the fish, she vomits the shells, takes out the dead fish, and eats them.

The bittern—קפד kiphod; the hedgehog, or porcupine.

The owl—נשוף neshoph, the bittern, from נשף nashaph, to blow, because of the blowing noise it makes, almost like the lowing of an ox. My old MS. Bible renders the words thus:—The foule in face like an asse, and the greyhoun, and the gnyte. (Snipe.)]

The line of confusion, and the stones of emptiness—(The plummet of emptiness over her scorched plains)] The word חריה cheriah, joined to the 12th verse, embarrasses it, and makes it inexplicable. At least I do not know that any one has yet made out the construction, or given any tolerable explication of it. I join it to the 11th verse, and supply a letter or two, which seem to have been lost. Fifteen MSS. (five ancient) and two Editions, read חוריה choriah. The first printed edition of 1486 I think nearer to the truth, חור חריה chor cheriah. I read בחרריה bechorereiah, or על חרריה âl chorereiah, see Jer. xvii. 6. A MS. has חדיה chodiah, and the Syriac reads חדיה chaduah, guadium, joining it to the two preceding words; which he likewise reads differently, but without improving the sense. However, his authority is clear for dividing the verses, as they are here divided. I read שם shem, as a noun. They shall boast, יקראו yekadeu; see Prov. xx. 6.

Verse 13. And thorns shall come up in her palaces] ועלו בארמנותיה ueâlu be-armenoteyah; so read all the ancient Versions.

[A court for owls—יענה yaânah, the ostrich, from ענה ânah, to cry, because of the noise it makes. "They roar," says Dr. Shaw, "sometimes like a lion—sometimes like a bull. I have often heard them groan as in the utmost distress."

Verse 14. The wild beasts of the desert—ציים tsiim, the mountain cats. Bochart.

Wild beasts of the island—איים ayim, the jackals.

The satyr—שעיר shâir, the hairy one, probably the he-goat.

The screech owl—לילית lilith, the night-bird, the night-raven, nyctycorax, from ליל layal, or לילה layalah, the night.

Verse 15. The great owl—קפוז kiphoz, the αχωντιας, or darter, a serpent so called, because of its suddenly leaping up, or darting on its prey—Probably the mongoz, or ichneumon, may be intended.

The vultures—דיות daiyoth, the black vultures. My old MS. Bible renders these names curiously. And ageyn cumen schul deoplis: the beste, party of an egge, and party of a man: and the wodwose, the tother schal crien to the tother. There schal byn lampa, that is, thrisse, or a beste havynge the body liic a woman, and hors feet. Ther hadde dichis, the prchoun, and nurshide out littil chittis. There ben gadred kittis, the top to the top. What language!]

Every one with her mate] A MS. adds, אל al after אשה ishah, which seems necessary to the construction; and so the Syriac and Vulgate. Another MS. adds in the same place את ath, which is equivalent.

Verse 16. My mouth—(For the mouth of JEHOVAH)] For הוא hu, five MSS. (three ancient,) read יהוה yehovah, and another is so corrected: so likewise the Septuagint. Two Editions have צום tsivam; and so the Septuagint, Vulgate, [and Arabic, with the Edition of 1486,] and a MS. has קבצם kebatsem, with the masculine pronoun, instead of the feminine: and so in the next verses it is להם lahem, instead of לחן lachen, in fourteen MSS., six of them ancient. [To see the importance of these various readings, the Hebrew Bible must be consulted.]

CHAPTER XXXV.

Flourishing state of the church of God consequent to the awful judgments predicted in the preceding Chapter. The images employed in the description are so very consolatory and sublime as to oblige us to extend their fulfilment to that period of the Gospel dispensation when Messiah shall take unto Himself His great power and reign. The fifth and sixth verses were literally accomplished by our Saviour and His apostles: but that the miracles wrought in the first century were not the only import of the language used by the Prophet is sufficiently plain from the context. They, therefore, have a further view; and are contemporary with, or rather a consequence of, the judgments of God upon the enemies of the church in the latter days; and so relate to the greater influence and extension of the Christian faith, the conversion of the Jews, their restoration to their own land, and the second advent of Christ. Much of the imagery of this Chapter seems to have been borrowed from the Exodus from Egypt: but it is greatly enlivened by the life, sentiments, and passions, ascribed to inanimate objects, all nature being represented as rejoicing with the people of God in consequence of their deliverance; and administering, in such an unusual manner, to their relief and comfort, as to induce some commentators to extend the meaning of the prophecy to the blessedness of the saints in heaven, 1—10.

On this Chapter Bishop Lowth has offered some important emendations. I shall introduce his translation, as the best yet given of this singular prophecy:—]

1. The desert, and the waste, shall be glad;
   And the wilderness shall rejoice, and flourish:
2. Like the rose shall it beautifully flourish;
   And the well-watered plain of Jordan shall also rejoice:
   The glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it,
   The beauty of Carmel and of Sharon;
   These shall behold the glory of JEHOVAH,
   The majesty of our God.
3. Strengthen ye the feeble hands,
   And confirm ye the tottering knees.
4. Say ye to the fainthearted, Be ye strong;
   Fear ye not; behold your God!
   Vengeance will come; the retribution of God:
   He Himself will come, and will deliver you.
5. Then shall be unclosed the eyes of the blind;
   And the ears of the deaf shall be opened:
6. Then shall the lame bound like the hart,
   And the tongue of the dumb shall sing:
   For in the wilderness shall burst forth waters,
   And torrents in the desert:
7. And the glowing sand shall become a pool,
   And the thirsty soil bubbling springs:
   And in the haunt of dragons shall spring forth
   The grass, with the reed, and the bulrush.
8. And a highway shall be there;
   And it shall be called The way of holiness:
   No unclean person shall pass through it:
   But He Himself shall be with them, walking in the way,
   And the foolish shall not err therein:
9. No lion shall be there;
   Nor shall the tyrant of the beasts come up thither:
   Neither shall he be found there;
   But the redeemed shall walk in it.
10. Yea, the ransomed of JEHOVAH shall return;
    They shall come to Sion with triumph;
    And perpetual gladness shall crown their heads:
    Joy and gladness shall they obtain;
    And sorrow and sighing shall flee away.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXXV.

Verse 1. Shall be glad] ישושם yesusum: in one MS. the ם mem seems to have been added; and שום sum is upon a rasure in another. None of the ancient Versions acknowledge it: it seems to have been a mistake arising from the next word beginning with the same letter. Seventeen MSS. have ישושם yesusum, [both vaus expressed;] and five MSS. ישסם yesasam, [without the vaus. Probably the true reading is, The wilderness and the dry place shall be glad. —Not for them.]

Verse 2. Rejoice even with joy and singing—(The well-watered plain of Jordan shall also rejoice)] For ורנן veranen the Septuagint read ירדן yarden, τα ερημα του Ιορδανου, "the deserts of Jordan." Four MSS. read גלת galath; see Josh. xv. 19.: irrigua Jordani. Houbigant. גירת gidoth, ripa Jordani, "the banks of Jordan." Kennicott. See De S. Poesi Hebr. Prælect. xx. note.

Unto it] For לה lah, to it, nine MSS. [of Kennicott and four of De Rossi] read לך leca, to thee. See ibid.

Verse 7. The parched ground—(The glowing sand)] שרב sharab; this word is Arabic سراب as well as Hebrew, expressing in both languages the same thing; the glowing sandy plain, which in the hot countries at a distance has the appearance of water. It occurs in the Koran, chap. xxiv. "But as to the unbelievers, their works are like a vapour in a plain, which the thirsty traveller thinketh to be water, until, when he cometh thereto, he findeth it to be nothing." Mr. Sale's note on this place is:—"The Arabic word serab signifies that false appearance, which in the eastern countries is often seen on sandy plains about noon, resembling a large lake of water in motion, and is occasioned by the reverberation of the sunbeams: ['by the quivering undulating motion of that quick succession of vapours and exhalations which are extracted by the powerful influence of the sun.' Shaw, Trav. p. 378.] It sometimes tempts thirsty travellers out of their way: but deceives them when they come near, either going forward, (for it always appears at the same distance,) or quite vanishes." Q. Curtius has mentioned it:—Arenas vapor æstivi solis accendit;—camporumque non alia, quam vasti et profundi æquoris species est." Lib. vii. c. 5. Dr. Hyde gives us the precise meaning and derivation of the word. Dictum nomen [Barca] הברקה habarekah, splendorem, seu splendentem regionem notat; cum ea regio radiis solaribus tam copiose collustretur, ut reflexum ab arenis lumen adeo intensè fulgens, a longinquo spectantibus, ad instar corporis solaris, aquarum speciem referat; et hinc arenarum splendor et radiatio (ex linguâ Persicâ petito nomine) dictur سراب serab, i. e. aquæ superficies, seu superficialis aquarum species. Annot. in Peritsol. cap. ii.

(Shall spring forth)] The ה he in רבצה rebitseh, seems to have been at first ם mem in MS. Bodl., whence Dr. Kennicott concludes it should be רבצים rebitsim. But instead of this word, the Syriac, Vulgate, and Chaldee, read some word signifying to grow, spring up, or abound. Perhaps פרצה peratseh, or פרצו peratsu; or פרץ החציר parats hachatser, as Houbigant reads.

Verse 8. And a highway] The word ודרך ve-derec, is by mistake added to the first member of the sentence from the beginning of the following member. Sixteen MSS. of Dr. Kennicott, (seven ancient) and two of De Rossi, have it but once: so likewise the Syriac, [Septuagint, and Arabic.]

Err therein] A MS. of Dr. Kennicott adds בו bo, in it, which seems necessary to the sense: and so the Vulgate, per eam, "by it." [One of De Rossi's has שם sham, there.]

But it shall be for those—(But he himself shall be with them, walking in the way)] That is, God; see ver. 4.—"Who shall dwell among them, and set them an example, that they should follow His steps." Our old English Versions translated the place to this purpose: our last translators were misled by the authority of the Jews, who have absurdly made a division of the verses in the midst of the sentence, thereby destroying the construction and the sense.

Verse 9. It shall not be found there—(Neither shall he be found there)] Three MSS. read ולא ve-lo, adding the conjunction; and so likewise the Septuagint and Vulgate. And four MSS. (one ancient,) read ימצא yimatsa, the verb, as it certainly ought to be, in the masculine form.

[The redeemed shall walk there—גאולים geulim. Those whose forfeited inheritances are brought back by the kinsman; גואל goel, the nearest of kin to the family. This has been considered by all orthodox divines as referring to the incarnation of our Lord, and His sacrificial offering. After גאולים geulim, one of De Rossi's MSS. adds עד עולם âd ôlam, for ever. The redeemed shall walk there for ever.

Verse 10. The ransomed—פדויי peduyey, from פדה padah, to redeem by paying a price. Those for whom a price was paid down to redeem them from bondage and death.

Sighing shall flee away—אנחה anachah. Never was a sorrowful accent better expressed than in this strong guttural word, an-ach-ah; nearly the same with the Irish in their funeral wailings,—och-och-on. The whole nation express all their mournful accents by these three monosyllables.

This Chapter contains the following parts:—

1. We have here blessed promises of the latter-day glory.
2. The prophet may be considered as addressing the teachers of the Gospel, to show them that it was their business to encourage and direct the people in their expectation of redemption.
3. A promise of the manifestation of God among men is given.
4. The miracles which Christ should work are explicitly mentioned.
5. The privileges of Christianity are specified; there shall be,—1. Thorough teaching. 2. Holy walking.
6. Perfect safety.
7. Complete happiness. And,—
8. Final glory.

The Chapter shows also, that no impurity should be tolerated in the Church of God: for as that is the mystical body of Christ, it should be like Himself, without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing.]

CHAPTER XXXVI.

Sennacherib, king of Assyria, comes against Judah and takes all the fenced cities, 1. He afterwards sends a great host against Jerusalem; and his general Rabshakeh delivers an insulting and blasphemous message to Hezekiah, 2—20. Hezekiah and his people are greatly afflicted at the words of Rabshakeh, 21, 22.

[e] Or, but counsel and strength are for the war.——[f] Ezek. 29. 6, 7.——[g] Or, hostages.

The history of the invasion of Sennacherib, and of the miraculous destruction of his army, which makes the subject of so many of Isaiah's prophecies, is very properly inserted here as affording the best light to many parts of those prophecies; and as almost necessary to introduce the prophecy in the thirty-seventh chapter, being the answer of God to Hezekiah's prayer, which could not be properly understood without it. We find the same narrative in the Second Book of Kings, chapters xviii. xix. xx.; and these chapters of Isaiah, xxxvi. xxxvii. xxxviii. xxxix. for much the most part, (the account of the sickness of Hezekiah only excepted,) are but a different copy of that narration. The difference of the two copies is little more than what has manifestly arisen from the mistakes of transcribers: they mutually correct each other, and most of the mistakes may be perfectly rectified by a collation of the two copies, with the assistance of the ancient Versions. Some few sentences, or members of sentences, are omitted in this copy of Isaiah, which are found in the other copy in the Book of Kings. Whether these omissions were made by design, or by mistake, may be doubted.

Verse 7. But if thou say—(But if ye say)] Two ancient MSS. have תאמרו tomeru, in the plural number: so likewise the Septuagint, Chaldee, and the other copy, 2 Kings xviii. 22.

and put thy trust on Egypt for chariots and for horsemen?

10 And am I now come up without the LORD against this land to destroy it? the LORD said unto me, Go up against this land, and destroy it.

11 Then said Eliakim and Shebna and Joah unto Rabshakeh, Speak, I pray thee, unto thy servants in the Syrian language: for we understand it: and speak not unto us in the Jews' language, in the ears of the people that are on the wall.

12 But Rabshakeh said, Hath my master sent me to thy master and to thee to speak these words? hath he not sent me to the men that sit upon the wall, that they may eat their own dung, and drink their own piss with you?

13 Then Rabshakeh stood, and cried with a loud voice in the Jews' language, and said, Hear ye the words of the great king, the king of Assyria.

14 Thus saith the king, Let not Hezekiah deceive you: for he shall not be able to deliver you.

15 Neither let Hezekiah make you trust in the LORD, saying, The LORD will surely deliver us: this city shall not be delivered into the hand of the king of Assyria.

16 Hearken not to Hezekiah: for thus saith the king of Assyria. [a] Make [b] an agreement with me by a present, and come out to me: [c] and eat ye every one of his vine, and every one of his fig tree; and drink ye every one the waters of his own cistern;

17 Until I come and take you away to a land like your own land, a land of corn and wine, a land of bread and vineyards.

18 Beware lest Hezekiah persuade you, saying, The LORD will deliver us. Hath any of the gods of the nations delivered his land out of the hand of the king of Assyria?

19 Where are the gods of Hamath and Arphad? where are the gods of Sepharvaim? and have they delivered Samaria out of my hand?

20 Who are they among all the gods of these lands, that have delivered their land out of my hand, that the LORD should deliver Jerusalem out of my hand?

21 But they held their peace, and answered him not a word: for the king's commandment was, saying, Answer him not.

22 Then came Eliakim, the son of Hilkiah, that was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and Joah, the son of Asaph, the recorder, to Hezekiah with their clothes rent, and told him the words of Rabshakeh.

Verse 12. That they may eat their own dung—(Destined to eat their own dung)] לאכל le-ecol, that they may eat, as our translation literally renders it. But the Syriac reads מאכל meacal, that they may not eat, perhaps rightly, and afterward ומשתות umishtoth, or ושתות veshetoth, to the same purpose. [Seventeen of Dr. Kennicott's MSS., ten of De Rossi's, and two of my own, read מימי miymey, the water; mine have שניהם מימי meimey shaneyhem, and write in the margin מימי רגליהם meimey regaleyhem, the water of their feet, a modest way of expressing urine.

15. This city shall not be delivered—ולא ve-lo, AND this city. Ten of Kennicott's MSS. and nine of De Rossi's, with one (ancient) of my own, add the conjunction.

Verse 16. Make an agreement—ברכה beraca, make a blessing with me, i. e. Give me a ransom for the city, and I will not destroy it: give me the yearly tribute thou hast promised.]

Verse 17. And vineyards] The other copy, 2 Kings xviii. 32., adds here:—"a land of oil-olive, and of honey; that ye may live and not die: and hearken not unto Hezekiah when he seduceth you."

[Verse 19. Where are the gods—Many MSS. add the conjunction here also—And, or But where are the gods, &c.

For other matters relative to this Chapter, see the Notes on 2 Kings, chap. xviii. 13, &c.]

Of Sepharvaim] The other copy, 2 Kings xviii. 34., adds, of "Henah and Ivah."

Have they delivered] וכי veki. The copulative is not expressed here by the Septuagint, Syriac, Vulgate, and three MSS.; nor is it in the other copy. Ib. Houbigant reads הכי haci, with the interrogative particle: a probable conjecture, which the ancient Versions above quoted seem to favour.

Verse 21. But they held their peace—(But the people held their peace)] The word העם ha-âm, the people, is supplied from the other copy, and is authorized by a MS. which inserts it after אתו oto.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

Hezekiah is greatly distressed, and sends to Isaiah the prophet to pray for him, 1—4. Isaiah returns a comfortable answer, and predicts the destruction of the king of Assyria and his army, 5—7. Sennacherib, hearing that his kingdom was invaded by the Æthiopians, sends a terrible letter to Hezekiah, to induce him to surrender, 9—13. Hezekiah goes to the Temple, spreads the letter before the Lord, and makes a most affecting prayer, 14—20. Isaiah is sent to him to assure him that his prayer is heard; that Jerusalem shall be delivered; and that the Assyrians shall be destroyed, 21—35. That very night a messenger of God slays one hundred and eighty-five thousand Assyrians, 36. Sennacherib returns to Nineveh, and is slain by his own sons, 37, 38.

AND [a] it came to pass, when king Hezekiah heard it, that he rent his clothes, and covered himself with sackcloth, and went into the house of the LORD.

2 And he sent Eliakim, who was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and the elders of the priests, covered with sackcloth, unto Isaiah the prophet the son of Amoz.

3 And they said unto him, Thus saith Hezekiah, This day is a day of trouble, and of rebuke, and of [b] blasphemy: for the children are come to the birth, and there is not strength to bring forth.

4 It may be the LORD thy God will hear the words of Rabshakeh, whom the king of Assyria his master hath sent to reproach the living God, and will reprove the words which the LORD thy God hath heard: wherefore lift up thy prayer for the remnant that is [c] left.

7 Behold, I will [d] send a blast upon him, and he shall hear a rumour, and return to his own land; and I will cause him to fall by the sword in his own land.

[a] 2 Kings 19. 1, &c.——[b] Or, provocation.

[c] Heb found.——[d] Or, put a spirit into him.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXXVII.

[Verse 6. Thus shall ye say—תאמרון כה ko-tomerun, "thus shall ye (explicitly, earnestly, and positively) say." The paragogic ן nun deepens and increases the sense.]

Verse 7. I will send a blast—(I will infuse a spirit into him)] "נתן בו רוח neton bo ruach never signifies any thing but putting a spirit into a person; this was πνευμα δειλιας, the spirit of deceit." Secker. [I will send a blast—I do not think that Abp. Secker has hit the true meaning of these words. I believe רוח ruach means here a pestilential wind, such as the Arabs call smum, that instantly suffocates both man and beast; and is what is termed the angel of the Lord, God's messenger of death to the Assyrians, ver. 36.

Verse 8. Rabshakeh returned—From chap. xxxvi. 2. we learn that the king of Assyria had sent Rabshakeh from Lachish to Jerusalem: now it is likely that Rabshakeh had besieged that place, and that the king of Assyria had taken his station before this city, and dispatched Rabshakeh against Jerusalem. But, as in the verse above it is said, he had departed from Lachish, probably he had been obliged to raise the siege, and had sat down before Libnah, which promised an easier conquest.

Verse 9. He heard say concerning Tirhakah, king of Ethiopia—When he heard that Tirhakah king of Ethiopia had come out against him, then he sent that blasphemous manifesto which is contained in ver. 10—13, to terrify Hezekiah into submission. How much was this like, in words and spirit, to the manifesto sent to the Parisians by the late Duke of Brunswick, from the plains of Champagne, in 1792, which was the forerunner of the mighty torrents of human blood which was shed in the French revolution! And what a blast of God fell upon him and his army—nearly like that which had fallen on the army of Sennacherib!]

He sent messengers—(He sent messengers again)] The word וישמע vayishmâ, and he heard, which occurs the second time in this verse, is repeated by mistake from the king of Ethiopia, He is come forth to make war with thee. And when he heard it, he sent messengers to Hezekiah, saying,

10 Thus shall ye speak to Hezekiah king of Judah, saying, Let not thy God, in whom thou trustest, deceive thee, saying, Jerusalem shall not be given into the hand of the king of Assyria.

11 Behold, thou hast heard what the kings of Assyria have done to all lands by destroying them utterly; and shalt thou be delivered?

12 Have the gods of the nations delivered them which my fathers have destroyed, as Gozan, and Haran, and Rezeph, and the children of Eden, which were in Telassar?

13 Where is the king of [a] Hamath, and the king of Arphad, and the king of the city of Sepharvaim, Henah, and Ivah?

14 And Hezekiah received the letter from the hand of the messengers, and read it: and Hezekiah went up unto the house of the LORD, and spread it before the LORD.

15 And Hezekiah prayed unto the LORD, saying,

16 O LORD of hosts, God of Israel, that dwellest between the cherubims, thou art the God, even thou alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth: thou hast made heaven and earth.

A. M. cir. 3294. B. C. cir. 710. Ol. XVII. 3. Cir. ann. Numæ Pompilii, R. Roman. 6.

17 [b] Incline thine ear, O LORD, and hear: open thine eyes, O LORD, and see: and hear all the words of Sennacherib, which hath sent to reproach the living God.

18 Of a truth, LORD, the kings of Assyria have laid waste all the [c] nations, and their countries, 19 And have [d] cast their gods into the fire: for they were no gods, but the work of men's hands, wood and stone: therefore they have destroyed them.

20 Now therefore, O LORD our God, save us from his hand, that all the kingdoms of the earth may know that thou art the LORD, even thou only.

21 Then Isaiah the son of Amoz sent unto Hezekiah, saying, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Whereas thou hast prayed to me against Sennacherib king of Assyria:

22 This is the word which the LORD hath beginning of the verse. It is omitted in an ancient MS. It is a mere tautology, and embarrasses the sense. The true reading instead of it is, וישב veyasheb, and he returned, which the Septuagint read in this place, ἀπεστρεψε, and which is preserved in the other copy, 2 Kings xix 9. "He returned and sent,"—that is, according to the Hebrew idiom, "he sent again."

[Verse 12. As Gozan and Haran—חרן Charan: but הרן Haran is the reading of four of Kennicott's MSS. and one of De Rossi's.]

Verse 14. And read it—(And read them)] ויקראם va-yikraem. So MS. Bodl. in this place; and so the other copy: instead of ויקראהו va-yekrehu, and read IT.

And spread it—(And spread them)] ויפרשהו va-yiphrisehu. הו hu is upon a razure in a MS., which probably was at first ם mem. The same mistake as in the foregoing note.

Verse 15. Unto the LORD—(Before JEHOVAH)] That is, in the sanctuary. For אל el, the Syriac, Chaldee, and the other copy, 2 Kings xix. 15. read לפני lipeney, before the face.

Verse 18. The nations] הארצות ha-eritsoth, the lands: instead of this word, which destroys the sense, ten [of Kennicott's and five of De Rossi's] MSS. (one ancient,) have here גוים goyim, nations; which is undoubtedly the true reading, being preserved also in the other copy, 2 Kings xix. 17. Another MS. suggests another method of rectifying the sense in this place, by reading מלכם melecem, their king, instead of ארצם aretsem, their land: but it ought to be מלכיהם malceyhem, all the countries and their kings.

Verse 20. Save us—(Save us, we beseech thee)] The supplicating particle נא na, is supplied here from eighteen MSS. (three ancient,) [of Dr. Kennicott, and ten of De Rossi,] and from the other copy.

That thou art the LORD, even thou only—(That thou JEHOVAH art the only God)] The word אלהים elohim, God, is lost here in the Hebrew Text, but preserved in the other copy, 2 Kings xix. 19. The Syriac and Septuagint seem here to have had in their copies אלהים elohim, instead of יהוה yehovah.

Verse 21. Then Isaiah—sent unto Hezekiah] The Syriac and Septuagint understand and render the verb passively,—was sent.

Whereas thou hast prayed to me against Sennacherib—(Thy prayer unto me concerning Sennacherib—I have heard)] שמעתו shamâti: this word, necessary to the sense, is lost in this place out of the Hebrew Text. One MS. [of Dr. Kennicott and one of De Rossi] have it written above the line in a later hand. The Septuagint and Syriac found 24 [a] By thy servants hast thou reproached the Lord, and hast said, By the multitude of my chariots am I come up to the height of the mountains, to the sides of Lebanon; and I will cut down [b] the tall cedars thereof, and the choice fir trees thereof; and I will enter into the height of his border, and [c] the forest of his Carmel.

it in their copies; and it is preserved in the other copy, 2 Kings xix. 20.

Verse 23. Against the Holy One of Israel] For אל el, to, the other copy has על âl, against,—rather more properly.

Verse 24. By thy servants—(By thy messengers)] The text has עבדיך âbadeyca, thy servants: but the true reading seems to be מלאכיך malaceyca, thy messengers, as in the other copy, 2 Kings xix. 23.: and as the Septuagint and Syriac found it in their copies in this place.

[Reproached the Lord—ארני adonai: but one of my MSS. has יהוה ארני yehovah adonai, Jehovah the Lord. This reading is not found, I think, in any other MS.: but several have יהוה yehovah, for ארני adonai.]

I will enter into the height of his border—(I will penetrate into his extreme retreats)] The Text has מרום marom, the height, which seems to have been taken by mistake from the line but one above. Two MSS. have here מלון melun, the lodge, or retreat; which is the word in the other copy, 2 Kings xix. 23.: and I think is the true reading.

[The forest of his Carmel—The forest and his fruitful field;—that is, I will possess myself of the whole country.]

Verse 25. Water—(Strange waters)] The word זרים zerim, strange, lost out of the Hebrew Text in this place, is supplied from the other copy. A MS. supplies the word רבים rabbim, many instead of it.

[With the sole of my feet—With my infantry.]

All the rivers of the besieged places—(All the canals of fenced places)] The principal cities of Egypt, the scene of his late exploits, were chiefly defended by deep moats, canals, or large lakes, made by labour and art, with which they were surrounded. See Harmer's Observ. ii. p. 304. Claudian introduces Alaric boasting of his conquests in the same extravagant manner:—

"Subsidere nostris
Sub pedibus montes; arescere vidimus amnes.—
Fregi Alpes, galeisque Padum victricibus hausi."
De Bello Getic. 526.

"The mountains have passed away under our feet; we have seen the rivers dried up. I have broken the Alps, and laden out the Po with our victorious helmets."

Verse 26. Lay waste defenced cities into ruinous heaps—(Lay waste warlike nations, strong fenced cities)] גלים נצים galim netsim. It is not easy to give a satisfactory account of these two words; which have greatly embarrassed all the interpreters, ancient and modern. For גלים galim, I read גוים goyim, as the Septuagint do in this place, εθνη. The word נצים netsim, the Vulgate renders in this place compugnantium; in the parallel place, 2 Kings xix. 25. pugnantium; and the Septuagint μαχιμων, fighting, warlike. This rendering is as well authorized as any other that I know of; and, with the reading of the Septuagint, perfectly clears up the construction.

Verse 27. Corn blasted] שדמה shedemah, parched: it does not appear, that there is any good authority for this word. The true reading seems to be שדפה shedephah, blasted, as it is in six MSS. (two ancient) here, and in the other copy.

Verse 29. Will I put my hook in thy nose] "Et frænum

31 And [a] the remnant that is escaped of the house of Judah shall again take root downward, and bear fruit upward:

32 For out of Jerusalem shall go forth a remnant, and [b] they that escape out of mount Zion: the [c] zeal of the LORD of hosts shall do this.

33 Therefore thus saith the LORD concerning the king of Assyria, He shall not come into this city, nor shoot an arrow there, nor come before it with [d] shields, nor cast a bank against it.

37 So Sennacherib king of Assyria departed, and went and returned, and dwelt at Nineveh.

38 And it came to pass, as he was worshipping in the house of Nisroch his god, that Adrammelech and Sharezer his sons smote him with the sword; and they escaped into the land of [g] Armenia: and Esar-haddon his son reigned in his stead.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXXVIII.

[Verse 1. In those days—The reader is requested to consult the Notes on 2 Kings, chap. xx. in reference to the principal parts of this Chapter.]

Verse 2. Then Hezekiah turned his face toward the wall] The furniture of an eastern divan, or chamber either for the reception of company, or for private use, consists chiefly of carpets spread on the floor in the middle; and of sofas, or couches, ranged on one or more sides of the room, on a part raised somewhat above the floor. On these they repose themselves in the day, and sleep at night. It is to be observed, that the corner of the room is the place of honour. Dr. Pococke, when he was introduced to the Sheikh of Fur shout, found him sitting in the corner of his room. He describes another Arab Sheikh "as sitting in the corner of a large green tent, pitched in the middle of an encampment of Arabs; and the Bey of Girge as placed on a sofa in a corner to the right as one entered the room." Harmer's Observ. ii. p. 60. Lady Mary W. Montague, giving an account of a visit which she made to the Kahya's lady at Adrianople, says, "She ordered cushions to be given me; and took care to place me in the corner, which is the place of honour." Letter xxxiii. The reason of this seems to be, that the person, so placed, is distinguished, and in a manner separated from the rest of the company, and as it were guarded by the wall on each side. We are to suppose Hezekiah's couch placed in the same situation; in which, turning on either side, he must turn his face to the wall; by which he would withdraw himself from those who were attending upon him in his apartment, in order to address his private prayer to God.

Ver. 3. And he said, I beseech thee, O JEHOVAH, remember now how I have endeavoured to walk before thee in truth, and with a perfect heart; and have done that which is good in thine eyes. And Hezekiah wept, and lamented grievously.

Ver. 4. Now [before Isaiah was gone out into the middle court,] the word of JEHOVAH came unto him, saying, Go [back,] and say unto Hezekiah, Thus saith JEHOVAH, the God of David thy father, I have heard thy supplication; I have seen thy tears. Behold [I will heal thee; and on the third day thou shalt go up into the house of JEHOVAH.

Ver. 5. And] I will add unto thy days fifteen years. And I will deliver thee, and this city, from the hand of the king of Assyria; and I will protect this city. And [Hezekiah said, By what sign shall I know that I shall go up into the house of JEHOVAH?

Ver. 7. And Isaiah said,] This shall be the sign unto thee from JEHOVAH, that JEHOVAH will bring to effect this word, which he hath spoken.

The words in the translation included within crotchets are supplied from the parallel place, 2 Kings xx. 4, 5. to make the narration more perfect. I have also taken the liberty, with Houbigant, of bringing forward the two last verses of this chapter, and inserting them in their proper places of the narration with the same mark. Kimchi's note on these two verses is as follows: "This and the following verse belong not to the writing of Hezekiah; and I see no reason, why they are written here after the writing; for their right place is above, after And I will protect this city, ver. 6. And so they stand in the book of Kings." 2 Kings xx. 7, 8. The narration of this chapter seems to be in some parts an abridgment of that of 2 Kings xx. The abridger, having finished his extract here with the eleventh verse, seems to have observed, that the seventh and eighth verses of 2 Kings xx. were wanted to complete the narration: he therefore added them at the end of the chapter, after he had inserted the song of Hezekiah, probably with marks for their insertion in their proper places; which marks were afterwards neglected by transcribers. Or a transcriber might omit them by mistake, and add them at the end of the chapter with such marks. Many transpositions are, with great probability, to be accounted for in the same way.

Verse 6. I will defend this city] The other copy, 2 Kings xx. 6. adds: "for mine own sake, and for the sake of David my servant;" and the sentence seems somewhat abrupt without it.

Verse 8. Which is gone down—(By which the sun is gone down)] For בשמש beshemesh, the Septuagint, Syriac, and Chaldee read השמש hashemesh. Houbigant. In the history of this miracle in the book of Kings, (2 Kings xx. 9—11.) there is no mention at all made of the sun, but only of the going backward of the shadow: which might be effected by a supernatural refraction. The first ὁ ἥλιος the sun, in this verse is omitted in the Septuagint, MS. Pachom.

Verse 9. The writing of Hezekiah] Here the book of Kings deserts us, the song of Hezekiah not being inserted in it. Another copy of this very obscure passage (obscure not only from the concise poetical style, but because it is probably very incorrect,) would have been of great service. The MSS. and ancient Versions, especially the latter, will help us to get through some of the many difficulties, which we meet with in it.

Verse 11. The LORD—(JEHOVAH)] יה jah יה jah, seems to be יהוה jehovah, in MS. Bodl. and it was so at first written in another. So the Syriac. See Houbigant. [I believe יהוה yehovah, was the original reading. See the note on chap. xii. 2.]

Verse 12. Mine age—is removed from me as a shepherd's tent] רעי rôei, is put for רעה roéh, say the Rabbins; Sal. b. Melec on the place; but much more probably is written imperfectly for רעים roém. See note on chap. v. 1.

[I shall be removed from this state to another, as a shepherd removes his tent from one place to another, for the sake of his flock. Is not this a strong intimation of his belief in a future state?]

I have cut off like a weaver my life—(My life is cut off as by the weaver)] קפרתי kepadti. This verb is rendered passively, and in the third person, by the Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate.

Verse 13. The last line of the foregoing verse, מיום ער לילה תשלימני miyom âd laiyelah teshelimeni, "In the course of the day thou wilt finish my web;" or, as the Common Version has it, "From day even to night wilt thou make an end of me," is not repeated at the end of this verse in the Syriac version; and a MS. omits it. It seems to have been inserted a second time in the Hebrew text by mistake.

I reckoned till morning, &c.—(I roared until the morning like the lion)] For שויתי shiviti, the Chaldee has נהמית nehamith: he read שאגתי shaagti, the proper term for the roaring of a lion; often applied to the deep groaning of men in sickness. See Psalm xxii. xxxii. 3. xxxviii. 9. Job iii. 24. The Masoretes divide the sentence, as I have done; taking כארי ke-ari, like a lion, into the first member; and so likewise the Septuagint.

Verse 14. Like—a swallow—(Like the swallow)] כסיס ke-sis; so read two MSS. Theodot. and Hieron.

Mine eyes fail] For דלו dallu, the Septuagint read כלו kelu, ἐξελιπον. Compare Psa. lxix. 4. cxix. 82, 123. Lam. ii. 11.; iv. 17. in the Hebrew and in the Septuagint.

O LORD—(O Lord)] For יהוה yehovah, thirty MSS. and eight editions read אדני adonai.

Undertake for me—(Contend for me)] עשקה êshekeh, with ש shin, Jarchi: this sense of the word is established by Gen. xxvi. 20. "He called the name of the well, עשק êsek, because they strove with him:" התעשקו hithêseku, equivalent to יריבו yeribu, at the beginning of the verse.

Verse 15. I shall go softly all my years in the bitterness of my soul—(Through the rest of my years will I reflect on this bitterness of my soul)] ארדה ededeh; recogitabo, Vulg. reputabo, Hieron. in loc.

16 O LORD, by these things men live, and in all these things is the life of my spirit: so wilt thou recover me, and make me to live.

17 Behold [a] for peace I had great bitterness: but [b] thou hast in love to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption: for thou hast cast all my sins behind thy back.

18 For [c] the grave cannot praise thee, death can not celebrate thee: they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth.

19 The living, the living, he shall praise thee, as I do this day: [d] the father to the children shall make known thy truth.

20 The LORD was ready to save me: therefore we will sing my songs to the stringed instruments all the days of our life in the house of the LORD.

21 For [e] Isaiah had said, Let them take a lump of figs, and lay it for a plaister upon the boil, and he shall recover.

22 [f] Hezekiah also had said, What is the sign that I shall go up to the house of the LORD?

[a] Or, on my peace came great bitterness.——[b] Heb. thou hast loved my soul from the pit.

Verse 16. By these things men live—(For this cause shall it be declared)] Περι αυτης γαρ ανηγγελη σοι, και εξηγειρας μου την πνοην; Sept. They read in their copies, עליה יהיו לך ותחיי רוחי not very different from the present text, from which all the ancient Versions vary. They entirely omit two words ולכל בהן ulecol behen; as to which there is some variation in the MSS. A MS. has וככל ubecol, and in all; two others וכל vecol, and all, and ten MSS. have בהמ bahem, in them, in the masculine gender.

[Taking this as in the common Version, we may observe, it is not an unfrequent case, that afflictions, and especially such as tend to a speedy death, become the means not only of saving the soul, but also of lengthening the life.]

Make me to live—(Hast prolonged my life)] A MS. and the Babylonish Talmud read ותחייני vetechaiyeni, and so the ancient Versions. It must necessarily be in the second person.

Verse 17. For peace I had great bitterness—(My anguish is changed into ease)] מר לי מר mar li mar, mutata mihi est amaritudo. Paronomasia; a figure, which the prophet frequently admits. I do not always note it, because it cannot ever be preserved in the translation, and the sense seldom depends upon it. But here it perfectly clears up the great obscurity of the passage. See Lowth on the place.

Thou hast rescued] חשכת chashacta, with כ caph, instead of ק koph; so the Septuagint and Vulgate, Houbigant. See Chappelow on Job xxxiii. 18.

From perdition] משחת בלי mishachath beli, ινα μη απολητα, Sept. ut non periret, "that it may not perish." Vulg. Perhaps inverting the order of the words. See Houbigant.

[Thou hast in love to my soul—חשקת chashakta, thou hast lovingly embraced or kissed my soul out of the pit of corruption.]

Verse 19. Thy truth] אל אמתך el amiteca. A MS. omits אל el; and instead of אל el, an ancient MS. and one edition read את et. The same mistake as in Psa. ii. 7.

Verse 21. Let them take a lump of figs, &c.] God, in effecting this miraculous cure, was pleased to order the use of means not improper for that end. "Folia, et, quæ non maturuere, fici, strumis illinuntur, omnibusque quæ emollienda sunt discutiendave." PLIN. Nat. Hist. xxiii. 7. "Ad discutienda ea, quæ in corporis parte aliqua coierunt, maxime possunt—ficus arida," &c. CELSUS, v. 11. See the note on 2 Kings xx. 7. [Philmon Holland translates the passage as a medical man:—"The milke, or white juice that the figge tree yieldeth, is of the same nature that vinegre: and therefore it will cruddle milke as well as rennet, or rendles. The right season of gathering this milkie substance is before that the figs be ripe upon the tree; and then it must be dried in the shadow: thus prepared, it is good to break impostunes, and keepe ulcers open."

CHAPTER XXXIX.

The Babylonish monarch sends letters of congratulation, and a present, to Hezekiah, on account of his recovery from his late dangerous illness, 1. The king of Judah shows the messengers of Merodach-baladan all the treasures of his house and kingdom, 2. The Prophet takes occasion from this ostentatious display of the king to predict the captivity of the royal family, and of the people, by the Babylonians, 3—8.

AT [a] that time Merodach-baladan, the son of Baladan, king of Babylon, sent letters and a present to Hezekiah: for he had heard that he had been sick, and was recovered.

2 [b] And Hezekiah was glad of them, and showed them the house of his [c] precious things, the silver, and the gold, and the spices, and the precious ointment, and all the house of his [d] armour, [e] and all that was found in his treasures: there was nothing in his house, nor in all his dominion, that Hezekiah showed them not.

3 Then came Isaiah the prophet unto king Hezekiah, and said unto him, What said these men? and from whence came they unto thee? And Hezekiah said, They are come from a far country unto me, even from Babylon.

4 Then said he, What have they seen in thine house? And Hezekiah answered, All that is in mine house have they seen: there is nothing among my treasures that I have not showed them.

5 Then said Isaiah to Hezekiah, Hear the word of the LORD of hosts:

7 And of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away; and [g] they shall be eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon.

8 Then said Hezekiah to Isaiah, [h] Good is the word of the LORD which thou hast spoken. He said moreover, For there shall be peace and truth in my days.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXXIX.

Hitherto the copy of this history in the second book of Kings has been much the most correct: in this chapter that in Isaiah has the advantage. In the two first verses two mistakes in the other copy are to be corrected from this: for הוקיהו hezekihu, read ויחזק va-yechazek, and was recovered; and for וישמע va-yeshmâ, he heard, read וישמח vâ-yesmach, he rejoiced.

[Verse 1. At that time Merodach-baladan—This name is variously written in the MSS. Berodach, Medorach, Medarech, and Merurach.]

(And ambassadors)] The Septuagint add here και πρεσβεις; that is, ומלאכים u-malacim, and ambassadors; which word seems to be necessary to the sense, though omitted in the Hebrew text both here and in the other copy, 2 Kings xx. 12. For the subsequent narration refers to them all along, "these men, whence came they?" &c. plainly supposing them to have been personally mentioned before. See Houbigant.

Verse 6. To Babylon] בבלה babelah, so two MSS. (one ancient;) rightly without doubt, as the other copy, 2 Kings xx. 17. has it. [This prediction was fulfilled about one hundred and fifty years after it was spoken: see Dan. i. 2, 3—7. What a proof of the Divine omniscience!]

Verse 8. Then Hezekiah said] The nature of Hezekiah's crime, and his humiliation on the measure of God to him by the prophet, is more expressly declared by the author of the book of Chronicles: "But Hezekiah rendered not again, according to the benefit done unto him; for his heart was lifted up; therefore there was wrath upon him, and upon Judah and Jerusalem. Notwithstanding, Hezekiah humbled himself for the pride of his heart, (both he and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, so that the wrath of the LORD came not upon them in the days of Hezekiah.—And Hezekiah prospered in all his works. Howbeit, in the business of the ambassadors of the princes of Babylon, who sent unto him to inquire of the wonder that was done in the land, God left him, to try him, that he might know all that was in his heart." 2 Chron. xxxii. 25, 26, 30, 31.

[There shall be peace and truth in my days—I rather think these words should be understood as an humble enquiry of the king, addressed to the prophet. "Shall there be prosperity, שלום shalom, and truth in MY days?—Shall I escape the evil which thou predictest? Understood otherwise, they manifest a pitiful unconcern both for his own family and for the nation. "So I be well, I care not how it may go with others." This is the view I have taken of the passage in 2 Kings xxi. 19. Let the reader judge whether this, or the former, should be preferred.]

CHAPTER XL.

In this Chapter the Prophet opens the subject respecting the restoration of the Church with great force and elegance; declaring God's command to His messengers the Prophets to comfort His people in their captivity, and to impart to them the glad tiaings that the time of favour and deliverance was at hand, 1, 2. Immediately a harbinger is introduced giving orders, as usual in the march of Eastern monarchs, to remove every obstacle, and to prepare the way for their return to their own land, 3—5. The same words, however, the New Testament Scriptures authorize us to refer to the opening of the Gospel dispensation. Accordingly, this subject coming once in view, is principally attended to in the sequel. Of this the Prophet gives us sufficient notice by introducing a voice commanding another proclamation, which calls off our attention from all temporary fading things to the spiritual and eternal things of the Gospel, 6—11. And to remove every obstacle in the way of the prophecy in either sense, or perhaps to give a further display of the character of the Redeemer, he enlarges on the power and wisdom of God, as the Creator and Disposer of all things. It is impossible to read this description of God, the most sublime that ever was penned, without being struck with inexpressible reverence and self-abasement. The contrast between the great Jehovah, and every thing reputed great in this world, how admirably imagined, how exquisitely finished! What atoms and inanities are they all before HIM who sitteth on the circle of the immense heavens, and views the potentates of the earth in the light of grasshoppers, those poor insects that wander over the barren heath for sustenance, spend the day in continual chirpings, and take up their humble lodging at night on a blade of grass! 12—26. The Prophet concludes with a most comfortable application of the whole, by showing that all this infinite power and unsearchable wisdom is unweariedly and everlastingly engaged in strengthening, comforting, and saving His people, 27—31.

The course of prophecies, which follow from hence to the end of the book, and which taken together constitute the most elegant part of the sacred writings of the Old Testament; interspersed also with many passages of the highest sublimity; was probably delivered in the latter part of the reign of Hezekiah. The prophet in the foregoing chapter had delivered a very explicit declaration of the impending dissolution of the kingdom, and of the captivity of the royal house of David, and of the people, under the kings of Babylon. As the subject of his subsequent prophecies was to be chiefly of the consolatory kind, he opens them with giving a promise of the restoration of the kingdom, and the return of the people from that captivity; by the merciful interposition of God in their favour. But the views of the prophet are not confined to this event: as the restoration of the royal family, and of the tribe of Judah, which would otherwise have soon become undistinguished, and have been irrecoverably lost, was necessary, in the design and order of Providence, for the fulfilling of God's promises of establishing a more glorious and an everlasting kingdom, under the Messiah to be born of the tribe of Judah, and of the family of David; the prophet connects these two events together, and hardly ever treats of the former without throwing in some intimations of the latter; and sometimes is so fully possessed with the glories of the future more remote kingdom, that he seems to leave the more immediate subject of his commission almost out of the question.

Indeed this evangelical sense of the prophecy is so apparent, and stands forth in so strong a light, that some interpreters cannot see that it has any other; and will not allow the prophecy to have any relation at all to the return from the captivity of Babylon. It may be useful therefore to examine more attentively the train of the prophet's ideas, and to consider carefully the images under which he displays his subject. He hears a crier giving orders, by solemn proclamation, to prepare the way of the Lord in the wilderness; to remove all obstructions before JEHOVAH marching through the desert; through the wild, uninhabited, unpassable country. The deliverance of God's people from the Babylonish captivity is considered by him as parallel to the former deliverance of them from the Egyptian bondage. God was then represented as their King leading them in Person through the vast deserts, which lay in their way, to the promised land of Canaan. It is not merely for JEHOVAH Himself, that in both cases the way was to be prepared, and all obstructions to be removed; but for JEHOVAH marching in Person at the head of His people. Let us first see, how this idea is pursued by the sacred poets who treat of the Exodus, which is a favourite subject with them, and affords great choice of examples:

"When Israel came out of Egypt;
The house of Jacob, from the barbarous people;
Judah was his sanctuary,
Israel his dominion." Psa. cxiv. 1.

"JEHOVAH his God is with him;
And the shout of a king is among them:
God brought them out of Egypt"——
Numb. xxiii. 21, 22.

"Make a highway for him that rideth through the deserts:
O God, when thou wentest forth before Thy people;
When Thou marchedst through the wilderness,
The heavens dropped"—— Psa. lxviii. 4, 7.

Let us now see how Isaiah treats the subject of the return of the people from Babylon. They were to march through the wilderness with JEHOVAH at their head, who was to lead them, to smooth the way before them, and to supply them with water in the thirsty desert; with perpetual allusion to the Exodus:

"Come ye forth from Babylon, flee ye from the land of the Chaldeans with the voice of joy:
Publish ye this, and make it heard; utter it forth even to the end of the earth;
Say ye, JEHOVAH hath redeemed his servant Jacob:
They thirsted not in the deserts, through which He made them go;
Waters from the rock He caused to flow for them;
Yea, He clave the rock, and forth gushed the waters."
Chap. xlviii. 20, 21.

"Remember not the former things;
And the things of ancient times regard not:"
(That is, the deliverance from Egypt:)
"Behold, I make a new thing;
Even now shall it spring forth; will ye not regard it?
Yea, I will make in the wilderness a way;
In the desert streams of water." Chap. xliii. 18, 19.

But he that trusteth in me shall inherit the land,
And shall possess my holy mountain.
Then will I say: Cast up, cast up the causeway; make clear the way;
Remove every obstruction from the road of my people."
Chap. lvii. 13, 14.

"How beautiful appear on the mountains
The feet of the joyful messenger, of him that announceth peace;
Of the joyful messenger of good tidings, of him that announceth salvation;
Of him that saith to Sion, Thy God reigneth!
All thy watchmen lift up their voice, they shout together;
For face to face shall they see, when JEHOVAH returneth to Sion.
Verily not in haste shall ye go forth;
And not by flight shall ye march along:
For JEHOVAH shall march in your front;
And the God of Israel shall bring up your rear."
Chap. lii. 7, 8, 12.

Babylon was separated from Judea by an immense tract of country, which was one continued desert; that large part of Arabia called very properly Deserta. It is mentioned in history as a remarkable occurrence, that Nebuchadnezzar, having received the news of the death of his father, in order to make the utmost expedition in his journey to Babylon from Egypt and Phœnicia, set out with a few attendants, and passed through this desert. Berosus, apud Joseph., Antiq. x. 11. This was the nearest way homewards for the Jews; and whether they actually returned by this way or not, the first thing that would occur on the proposal or thought of their return, would be the difficulty of this almost impracticable passage. Accordingly the proclamation for the preparation of the way is the most natural idea, and the most obvious circumstance, by which the prophet could have opened his subject.

These things considered, I have not the least doubt that the return of the Jews from the captivity of Babylon is the first, though not the principal, thing in the prophet's view. The redemption from Babylon is clearly foretold; and at the same time is employed as an image to shadow out a redemption of an infinitely higher and more important nature. I should not have thought it necessary to employ so many words in endeavouring to establish what is called the literal sense of this prophecy, which I think cannot be rightly understood without it, had I not observed, that many interpreters of the first authority, in particular the very learned Vitringa, have excluded it entirely.

Yet obvious and plain as I think this literal sense is, we have nevertheless the irrefragable authority of John the Baptist, and of our blessed Saviour Himself, as recorded by all the Evangelists, for explaining this exordium of the prophecy of the opening of the gospel by the preaching of John, and of the introducing of the kingdom of Messiah; who was to effect a much greater deliverance of the people of God, Gentiles as well as Jews, from the captivity of sin and the dominion of death. And this we shall find to be the case in many subsequent parts also of this prophecy, where passages manifestly relating to the deliverance of the Jewish nation, effected by Cyrus, are with good reason, and upon undoubted authority, to be understood of the redemption wrought for mankind by Christ.

If the literal sense of this prophecy, as above explained, cannot be questioned, much less surely can the spiritual; which, I think, is allowed on all hands, even by Grotius himself. If both are to be admitted, here is a plain example of the mystical allegory, or double sense, as it is commonly called of prophecy; which the sacred writers of the New Testament clearly suppose, and according to which they frequently frame their interpretation of passages of the Old Testament. Of the foundation and properties of this sort of allegory, see De S. Poes. Hebr. Prælect. xi.

NOTES ON CHAP. XL.

[Verse 1. Comfort ye, comfort ye—"The whole of this prophecy," says Kimchi, "belongs to the days of the Messiah."]

Verse 2. Double for all her sins—(Blessings double to the punishment)] It does not seem reconcileable to our notions of the Divine justice, which always punishes less than our iniquities deserve, to suppose, that God had punished the sins of the Jews in double proportion: and it is more agreeable to the tenor of this consolatory message to understand it as a promise of ample recompence for the effects of past displeasure, on the reconciliation of God to His returning people. To express this sense of the passage, which the words of the original will very well bear, it was necessary to add a word or two in the version to supply the elliptical expression of the Hebrew. Compare chap. lxi. 7. Job. xlii. 10. Zech. ix. 12. חטאת chatah, signifies punishment for sin, Lam. iii. 39. Zech. xiv. 10. [But Kimchi says, "Double here, means the two captivities and emigrations suffered by the Israelites. The first, the Babylonish captivity; the second, that which they now endure."]

Verse 3. The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness—(A voice crieth: In the wilderness)] The idea is taken from the practice of Eastern monarchs, who, whenever they entered upon an expedition, or took a journey, especially through desert and unpractised countries, sent harbingers before them to prepare all things for their passage, and pioneers to open the passes, to level the ways, and to remove all impediments. The officers appointed to superintend such preparations the Latins call stratores. Ipse (Joannes Baptista) se stratorem vocat Messiæ, cujus esset alta et elata voce homines in desertis locis habitantes ad itinera et vias Regi mox venturo sternendas et reficiendas hortari. Mosheim, Instituta, Majora, p. 96. [He (John the Baptist,) calls himself the pioneer of the Messiah, whose business it was with a loud voice to call upon the people dwelling in the deserts to level and prepare the roads by which the King was about to march.]

Diodorus' account of Semiramis' marches into Media and Persia will give us a clear notion of the preparation of the way for a royal expedition: "In her march to Ecbatana she came to the Zarcean mountain; which extending many furlongs, and being full of craggy precipices and deep hollows, could not be passed without taking a great compass about. Being therefore desirous of leaving an everlasting memorial of herself, as well as of shortening the way, she ordered the precipices to be digged down, and the hollows to be filled up; and at a great expense she made a shorter and more expeditious road, which to this day is called from her the road of Semiramis. Afterward she went into Persia, and all the other countries of Asia subject to her dominion; and wherever she went, she ordered the mountains and precipices to be levelled, raised causeways in the plain country, and at a great expense made the ways passable." Diod. Sic. lib. ii.

The writer of the apocryphal book called Baruch, expresses the same subject by the same images; either taking them from this place of Isaiah, or from the common notions of his countrymen. "For God hath appointed, that every high hill, and banks of long continuance, should be cast down, and vallies filled up, to make even the ground, that Israel may go safely in the glory of God." Chap. v. 7.

The Jewish church, to which John was sent to announce the coming of Messiah, was at that time in a barren and desert condition, unfit without reformation for the reception of her King. It was in this desert country, destitute at that time of all religious cultivation; in true piety and good works unfruitful, that John was sent to prepare the way of the Lord by preaching repentance. I have distinguished the parts of the sentence according to the punctuation of the Masoretes, which agrees best both with the literal and the spiritual sense; which the construction and parallelism of the distich in the Hebrew plainly favours; and of which the Greek of the Septuagint and of the Evangelists is equally susceptible.

John was born in the desert of Judea; and passed his whole life in it, till the time of his being manifested to Israel. He preached in the same desert: it was a mountainous country; however not entirely and properly a desert; for, though less cultivated than other parts of Judea, yet it was not uninhabited. Joshua (chap. xv. 61, 62) reckons six cities in it. We are so prepossessed with the idea of John's living and preaching in the desert, that we are apt to consider this particular scene of his preaching as a very important and essential part of history: whereas I apprehend this circumstance to be no otherwise important, than as giving us a strong idea of the rough character of the man, which was answerable to the place of his education; and as affording a proper emblem of the rude state of the Jewish church at that time; which was the true wilderness meant by the prophet, in which John was to prepare the way for the coming of the Messiah.

Verse 4. Crooked] The word עקב âkab, is very generally rendered crooked: but this sense of the word seems not to be supported by any good authority. Ludolphus, Comment. ad Hist. Æthiop. p. 206. says, "that in the Æthiopic language it signifies clivus, locus editus:" and so the Syriac Version renders it in this place, ערמא ârama: Hebrew ערמה âramah, tumulus, acervus. Thus the parallelism would be more perfect: "the hilly country shall be made level, and the precipices a smooth plain."

Verse 5. (The salvation of our God)] These words are added here by the Septuagint: το σωτηριον του Θεου, את ישועת אלהינו et yesuâth eloheinu, as it is in the parallel place, chap. lii. 10. The sentence is abrupt without it, the verb wanting its object; and I think it is genuine. Our English translation has supplied the word it, which is equivalent to this addition from the Septuagint.

This omission in the Hebrew text is ancient, being prior to the Chaldee, Syriac, and Vulgate versions: but the words stand in all the copies of the Septuagint; and they are acknowledged by Luke iii. 6. [The whole of this verse is wanting in one of my oldest MSS.]

Verse 6. The voice said, Cry—(A voice saith, Proclaim)] To understand rightly this passage is a matter of importance; for it seems designed to give us the true key to the remaining part of Isaiah's prophecies; the general subject of which is the restoration of the people and church of God. The prophet opens the subject with great clearness and elegance: he declares at once God's command to His messengers, (His prophets, as the Chaldee rightly explains it,) to comfort His people in captivity, to impart to them the joyful tidings that their punishment has now satisfied the Divine justice, and the time of reconciliation and favour is at hand. He then introduces a harbinger giving orders to prepare the way for God, leading His people from Babylon, as He did formerly from Egypt, through the wilderness; to remove all obstacles, and to clear the way for their passage. Thus far nothing more appears to be intended than a return from the Babylonish captivity: but the next words seem to intimate something much greater,—

"And the glory of JEHOVAH shall be revealed;
And all flesh shall see together the salvation of our God."

He then introduces a voice commanding him to make a solemn proclamation. And what is the import of it? that the people, the flesh, is of a vain temporary nature; that all its glory fadeth, and is soon gone: but that the word of God endureth for ever. What is this, but a plain opposition of the flesh to the spirit; of the carnal Israel to the spiritual; of the temporary Mosaic œconomy to the eternal Christian dispensation? You may be ready to conclude, (the prophet may be disposed to say,) by this introduction to my discourse, that my commission is only to comfort you with a promise of the restoration of your religion and polity, of Jerusalem, of the temple, and its services and worship, in all its ancient splendour. These are earthly, temporary, shadowy, fading things, which shall soon pass away, and be destroyed for ever; these are not worthy to engage your attention in comparison of the greater blessings, the spiritual redemption, the eternal inheritance, covered under the veil of the former, which I have it in charge to unfold unto you. The law has only a shadow of good things; the substance is the gospel. I promise you a restoration of the former, which, however, is only for a time, and shall be done away, according to God's original appointment: but under that image I give you a view of the latter; which shall never be done away, but shall endure for ever. This I take to be agreeable to St. Peter's interpretation of this passage of the prophet, quoted by him, 1 Pet. i. 24, 25. "All flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away; but the word of the Lord endureth for ever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you." This is the same word of the Lord of which Isaiah speaks, which hath now been preached unto you by the gospel. The law and the gospel are frequently opposed to one another by St. Paul, under the images of flesh and spirit: "Having begun in the spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh?" Gal. iii. 3.

Surely the people—(Verily this people)] So the Syriac, who perhaps read העם הזה ha-âm hazzeh.

Because the Spirit of the Lord—(When the wind of Jehovah)] רוח יהוה ruach yehovah, a wind of Jehovah, is a Hebraism, meaning no more than a strong wind. It is well known that a hot wind in the East destroys at once every green thing. Compare Psa. ciii. 16. Two MSS. omit the word יהוה yehovah, Jehovah.

Verse 9. O Zion, that bringest good tidings—(O daughter that bringest glad tidings to Sion)] That the true construction of the sentence is this, which makes Sion the receiver, not the publisher, of the glad tidings, (which latter has been the most prevailing interpretation,) will, I think, very clearly appear, if we rightly consider the image itself, and the custom and common practice from which it is taken. I have added the word daughter to express the feminine gender of the Hebrew participle, which I know not how to do otherwise in our language: and this is absolutely necessary in order to ascertain the image. For the office of announcing and celebrating such glad tidings, as are here spoken of, belonged peculiarly to the women. On occasion of any great public success, a signal victory, or any other joyful event, it was usual for the women to gather together, and with music, dances, and songs, to publish and celebrate the happy news. Thus after the passage of the Red Sea, Miriam, and all the women with timbrels in their hands, formed a chorus, and joined the men in their triumphant song, dancing and throwing in alternately the refrain or burden of the song:—

"Sing ye to Jehovah, for He is greatly exalted;
The horse and his rider hath he cast into the sea."
Exod. xv. 20, 21.

So Jepthah's daughter collected a chorus of virgins; and with dances and songs came out to meet her father, and to celebrate his victory, Judg. xi. 34. After David's conquest of Goliah, "all the women came out of the cities of Israel singing and dancing to meet Saul, with tabrets, with joy, and with instruments of music;" and, forming themselves into two chorusses, they sung alternately,—

"Saul has slain his thousands:
And David his ten thousands." 1 Sam. xviii. 6, 7.

And this gives us the true sense of a passage in the sixty-eighth Psalm, which has frequently been misunderstood:

"Jehovah gave the word; (that is, the joyful news;)
The women, who published the glad tidings, were a great company;
The kings of mighty armies did flee, did flee:
And even the matron, who staid at home, shared the spoil."

The word signifying the publishers of glad tidings is the same, and expressed in the same form by the feminine participle, as in this place; and the last distich is the song which they sung. So in this place, Jehovah having given the word by His prophet, the joyful tidings of the restoration of Sion, and of God's returning to Jerusalem, (see chap. lii. 8.) the women are exhorted by the prophet to publish the joyful news with a loud voice from eminences, whence they might best be heard all over the country; and the matter and burden of their song was to be, "Behold your God!"

Verse 10. His reward is with him, and his work before him—(His reward is with him, and the recompence of his work before him)] That is, the reward and the recompence, which He bestows, and which He will pay to His faithful servants: this He has ready at hand with Him, and holds it out before Him, to encourage those who trust in Him, and wait for Him.

Verse 11. Shall gently lead those that are with young—(The nursing ewes shall he gently lead)] A beautiful image, expressing, with the utmost propriety as well as elegance, the tender attention of the shepherd to his flock. That the greatest care in driving the cattle in regard to the dams and their young was necessary, appears clearly from Jacob's apology to his brother Esau, Gen. xxxiii. 13. "The flocks and the herds giving suck to their young are with me; and if they should be overdriven, all the flock will die." Which is set in a still stronger light by the following remark of Sir John Chardin: "Their flocks," says he, speaking of those who now live in the east after the patriarchal manner, "feed down the places of their encampments so quick, by the great numbers that they have, that they are obliged to remove them too often; which is very destructive to their flocks on account of the young ones, who have not strength enough to follow." Harmer's Observ. i. p. 126.

Verse 16. And Lebanon is not sufficient] The image is beautiful and uncommon. It has been imitated by an apocryphal writer, who however comes far short of the original:

> "For all sacrifice is too little for a sweet savour unto thee:
> And all the fat is not sufficient for thy burnt-offering."
> Judith xvi. 16.

[Does not the prophet mean here, that all the burnt-offerings and sacrifices that could be offered were insufficient to atone for sin. That the nations were as nothing before Him, not merely because of His immensity, but because of their insufficiency to make any atonement by their oblations for the iniquities which they had committed. Therefore, the Redeemer was to come to Zion, &c.]

Verse 19. And casteth silver chains—(And forgeth for it chains of silver)] For צורף tsoreph, the participle, twenty-seven MSS. (five ancient,) and three editions, read צרף tsaraph, præt. third person.

[Verse 20. Chooseth a tree that will not rot—For what? To make a god out of it! The rich we find made theirs of gold and silver: the poor man was obliged to put up with a wooden god! From the words "he that hath no oblation, chooseth a tree," we may learn, that the gold and silver necessary to make the graven image was first dedicated, and then formed into a god! How stupid is idolatry! Strange that these people did not perceive that there could be no help in these molten and wooden idols!

Verse 21. Have ye not known—On this verse Kimchi has a very interesting comment, an extract of which I subjoin. "The whole world may be considered as a house built up; heaven its roof; the stars its lamps; and the fruits of the earth its table spread. The Master of the house is God, blessed for ever; and man is the steward into whose hand all the business of the house is given. If he always consider in his heart, that the Master of the house is continually over him, and that He keeps His eye upon his work; and if, in consequence, he acts wisely, he shall find favour in the eyes of the Master of the house. But if He find wickedness in the house, then will He remove him מן פקידתו min pakidato, from his stewardship.—The foolish steward does not think of this: for, as his eyes do not see the Master of the house, he saith in his heart: 'I will eat and drink what I find in this house, and will take my pleasure in it; nor shall I be careful whether there be a master over this house or not.'—When the Lord of the house marks this, He comes and expels him from the house speedily, and with great anger; therefore is it said, ver. 23. He bringeth the princes to nothing." It seems that this parable had been long in use among the Jews, as our blessed Lord alludes to it in His parable of the unjust steward. Or, did the Rabbin, finding it to his purpose, steal the parable from the Gospel? In both places, it has great and peculiar beauties.]

Have ye not understood from the foundations of the earth—(Have ye not understood it from the foundations of the earth)] The true reading seems to be ממוסדות mimosedoth, to answer to מראש mi-rosh, in the foregoing line. It follows a word ending with מ mem; and out of three mems concurring, it was an easy mistake to drop the middle one.

23 That bringeth the [c] princes to nothing; he maketh the judges of the earth as vanity.

24 Yea, they shall not be planted; yea, they shall not be sown: yea, their stock shall not take root in the earth: and he shall also blow upon them, and they shall wither, and the whirlwind shall take them away as stubble.

25 [d] To whom then will ye liken me, or shall I be equal? saith the Holy One.

26 Lift up your eyes on high, and behold who hath created these things, that bringeth out their host by number: [e] he calleth them all by names by the greatness of his might, for that he is strong in power; not one faileth.

27 Why sayest thou, O Jacob, and speakest, O Israel, My way is hid from the LORD, and my judgment is passed over from my God?

28 Hast thou not known? hast thou not heard, that the everlasting God, the LORD, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary? [f] there is no searching of his understanding.

29 He giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might he increaseth strength.

Verse 22. As a curtain—(As a thin veil)] "It is usual in the summer season, and upon all occasions, when a large company is to be received, to have the court sheltered from heat, or inclemency of the weather, by a velum, umbrella, or veil, as I shall call it; which, being expanded on ropes from one side of the parapet wall to the other, may be folded or unfolded at pleasure. The Psalmist seems to allude to some covering of this kind in that beautiful expression of spreading out the heavens like a curtain." Shaw's Travels, p. 274.

Verse 24. And he shall also blow upon them—(And if he but blow upon them)] The Septuagint, Syriac, Vulgate, and MS. Bodl. and another, have גַּם gam, without the conjunction ו vau.

[Verse 26. Lift up your eyes on high—The Rabbins say, He who is capable of meditating on the revolutions of the heavenly bodies, and does not meditate on them, is not worthy to have his name mentioned among men.]

Verse 28. There is no searching of his understanding—(And that his understanding is unsearchable)] Twenty-four MSS., two editions, the Septuagint and Vulgate, read וְאֵין ve-ein, with the conjunction ו vau.

Verse 31. They shall mount up with wings as eagles—(They shall put forth fresh feathers like the moulting eagle)] It has been a common and popular opinion, that the eagle lives and retains his vigour to a great age; and that, beyond the common lot of other birds, he moults in his old age, and renews his feathers, and with them his youth. "Thou shalt renew thy youth like the eagle," says the Psalmist, ciii. 5.; on which place St. Ambrose notes, Aquila longam ætatem ducit, dum, vetustis plumis fatiscentibus, nova pennarum successione juvenescit:—["The eagle lives to a very advanced age; and in moulting, his youth is renewed with his new feathers."]

Phile, De Animalibus, treating of the eagle, and addressing himself to the emperor Michael Palæologus junior, raises his compliment upon the same notion:

Τουτου συ, βασιλευ, τον πολυν ζωοις βιον,
Αει νεουργων, και κρατηνων την φυσιν.

"Long may'st thou live, O king; still like the eagle Renew thy youth, and still retain thy vigour."

To this many fabulous and absurd circumstances are added by several ancient writers and commentators on Scripture: see Bochart, Hieroz. II. ii. 1. [Rabbi Saadias says, every tenth year, the eagle flies near the sun; and when not able any longer to bear the burning heat, she falls down into the sea, and soon loses her feathers, and thus renews her vigour. This she does every tenth year till the hundredth, when after she has ascended near the sun, and fallen into the sea, she rises no more. How much proof do such stories require!] Whether the notion of the eagle's renewing his youth is in any degree well founded or not, I need not inquire; it is enough for a poet, whether profane or sacred, to have the authority of popular opinion to support an image introduced for illustration or ornament.

CHAPTER XLI.

The Prophet, having intimated the deliverance from Babylon, and the still greater redemption couched under it, resumes the subject. He begins with the Divine vocation of Abraham, the root of the Israelitish family; and his successful exploits against the idolaters, 1—7. He then recurs to the Babylonish captivity, and encourages the seed of Abraham, the friend of God, not to fear, as all their enemies would be ultimately subdued under them, 8—16. And every thing furnished necessary to refresh and comfort them in their passage homewards through the desert, 17—20. The Prophet then takes occasion to celebrate the prescience of God from His knowledge of events so very distant, as instanced in the prediction concerning the messenger of glad tidings which should be given to Jerusalem to deliver her from all her enemies; and challenges the idols of the heathens to produce the like proof of their pretended divinity, 21—27. But they are all vanity, and accursed are they that choose them, 28, 29.

NOTES ON CHAP. XLI.

Verse 1. Keep silence before me, O islands—(Let the distant nations repair to me with new force of mind)] Εγκαινιζεσθε, Septuagint; for החרישו ha-charishu, be silent. They certainly read in their copy החדישו hachadishu, be renewed; which is parallel and synonymous with יחלפו כח yechalephu coach, recover their strength; that is, their strength of mind, their powers of reason; that they may overcome those prejudices, by which they have been so long held enslaved to idolatry. A MS. has הר har, upon a rasure. The same mistake seems to have been made in this word, Zeph. iii. 17. For יחריש באהבתו yecharish be-ahabto, silebit in dilectione sua, as the Vulgate renders it; which seems not consistent with what immediately follows, exultabit super te in laude; the Septuagint and Syriac read יחדיש באהבתו yechadish be-ahabto, [" he shall be renewed in his love." אלי ali, to me, is wanting in one of De Rossi's MSS. and in the Syriac.]

Verse 2. The righteous man] The Chaldee and Vulgate seem to have read צדיק tsadik. But Jerom, though his translation has justum, appears to have read צדק tsadak; for in his comment he expresses it by justum, sive justitiam. However, I think all interpreters understand it of a person. So the Septuagint in MS. Pachom. εκαλεσεν αυτον, he hath called him: but the other copies have αυτην, her. They are divided in ascertaining this person: some explain it of Abraham; others of Cyrus. I rather think, that the former is meant; because the character of the righteous man, or righteousness, agrees better with Abraham than with Cyrus. Besides, immediately after the description of the success given by God to Abraham, and his posterity, (who, I presume, are to be taken into the account,) the idolaters are introduced as greatly alarmed at this event. Abraham was called out of the east; and his posterity were introduced into the land of Canaan, in order to destroy the idolaters of that country; and they were established there, on purpose to stand as a barrier against idolatry, then prevailing, and threatening to overrun the whole face of the earth. Cyrus, though not properly an idolater or worshipper of images, yet had nothing in his character to cause such an alarm among the idolaters, ver. 5—7. Further, after having just touched upon that circumstance, the prophet with great ease returns to his former subject, and resumes Abraham and the Israelites; and assures them, that as God had called them, and chosen them for this purpose, He would uphold and support them to the utmost, and at length give them victory over all the heathen nations, their enemies; ver. 8—16. [Kimchi is of the same mind, and gives the same reasons.]

He gave them as the dust to his sword—(Hath made them like the dust before his sword)] The image is strong and beautiful: it is often made use of by the sacred poets; see Psa. i. 4. xxxv. 5. Job xxi. 18. and by Isaiah himself in other places, chap. xvii. 13. xxix. 5. But there is great difficulty in making out the construction. The Septuagint read קשתם חרבם kashetam, cherebam, their sword, their bow, understanding it of the sword and bow of the conquered kings: but this is not so agreeable to the analogy of the image, as employed in other places. The Chaldee paraphrast and Kimchi solve the difficulty by supposing an ellipsis of לפני lipeney, before those words. It must be owned, that the ellipsis is hard and unusual: but I choose rather to submit to this, than, by adhering with Vitringa to the more obvious construction, to destroy entirely both the image and him, and made him rule over kings? he gave them as the dust to his sword, and as driven stubble to his bow.

3 He pursued them, and passed [a] safely; even by the way that he had not gone with his feet.

4 [b] Who hath wrought and done it, calling the generations from the beginning? I the LORD, the [c] first, and with the last; I am he.

5 The isles saw it, and feared; the ends of the earth were afraid, drew near, and came.

6 [d] They helped every one his neighbour; and every one said to his brother, [e] Be of good courage.

7 [f] So the carpenter encouraged the [g] goldsmith, and he that smootheth with the hammer [h] him that smote the anvil, [i] saying, It is ready for the sodering: and he fastened it with nails, [k] that it should not be moved.

8 But thou, Israel, art my servant, Jacob whom I have [l] chosen, the seed of Abraham my [m] friend.

9 Thou whom I have taken from the ends of the earth, and called thee from the chief men thereof, and said unto thee, Thou art my servant; I have chosen thee, and not cast thee away.

the sense. But the Vulgate by gladio ejus, and arcui ejus, seems to express לחרבו lecharbo, to his sword, and לקשתו lekashto, to his bow, the admission of which reading may perhaps be thought preferable to Kimchi's ellipsis.

Verse 3. And passed safely—(He passeth in safety)] The preposition seems to have been omitted in the text by mistake: the Septuagint and Vulgate seem to have had it in their copies: εν ειρηνη, in pace, בשלום be-shalom, prosperously. [It is so in one of De Rossi's MSS.]

Verse 4. Who hath wrought and done it—(Who hath performed and made these things)] A word is here lost out of the text. It is supplied by an ancient MS. אלה elleh, these things; and, by the Septuagint, ταυτα; and by the Vulgate, hæc; and by the Chaldee, אלין elin, [all of the same meaning.]

Verse 5. Were afraid—(And they were terrified)] Three MSS. have ויחרדו vayecheridu, adding the conjunction ו vau, which restores the second member of the sentence to its true poetical form.

Verse 7. That it should not be moved—(That it shall not move)] Five MSS. (two ancient,) and the ancient Versions, add the conjunction ו vau, "and" reading ולא velo, which seems to be right.

Verse 9. And called thee from the chief men thereof—(And called from the extremities thereof)] אציל מאציליה etsil mietsileyah, signifies the arm, axilla, ala; and is used like כנף canaph, the wing, for any thing extended from the extremity of another, or joined on to it. It is here parallel and synonymous to מקצות miketsoth, from the ends, in the preceding member.

[Verse 10. Be not dismayed—ואל תשתע ve-al tishetâ, AND be not dismayed. The ו vau is added by twenty-one of Dr. Kennicott's MSS., thirty of De Rossi's, and one of my own, and three editions. It makes the sense more complete.

Verse 14. Fear not, thou worm Jacob—In the Rabbinical commentary on the five books of Moses, Yelamedenu, it is asked, Why are the Israelites called a worm? To signify, that as the worm does not smite, that is, gnaw the cedars, but with its mouth, which is very tender, yet it nevertheless destroys the hard wood; so all the strength of the Israelites is in prayer, by which they smite the wicked of this world, though strong like the cedars, to which they are compared, Ezek. xxxi. 3.]

Verse 19. I will plant in the wilderness the cedar] The two preceding verses express God's mercy to them in their passage through the dry deserts, in supplying them with abundant water, when distressed with thirst, in allusion to the Exodus. This verse expresses the relief afforded to them, fainting with heat in their journey through that hot country, destitute of shelter, by causing shady trees, and those of the tallest and most beautiful kinds, to spring up for their defence. The apocryphal Baruch, speaking of the return from Babylon, expresses God's protection of His people by the same image. Even the woods and every sweet-smelling tree shall overshadow Israel by the commandment of God." Chap. v. 8.

[The oil tree—This, Kimchi says, is not to be understood of the olive tree, for the olive is distinguished, Neh. viii. 15.: but it means the pine or fir, from which pitch is extracted.]

Verse 20. And consider] The verb ישמו yasimu, without לב leb added, cannot signify to apply the heart, or to attend to a thing, as Houbigant has observed; he therefore reads ישמו yeshemu, they shall wonder. The conjecture is ingenious: but it is much more probable that the word לב leb is lost out of the text; for all the ancient Versions render the phrase to the same sense, as if it were fully expressed, ישמו לב yasimu leb; and the Chaldee renders it paraphrastically, yet still retaining the very words in his paraphrase, וישון דהלתי על לבהון vayishavun dehalti âl lebehon, that they may put my fear in their heart. See also ver. 22. where the same phrase is used.

Verse 21. Bring forth your strong reasons—(Produce these your mighty powers)] "Let your idols come forward, which you consider to be so very strong." Hieron. in loc. I prefer this to all other interpretations of this place; and to Jerom's own translation of it, which he adds immediately after, Afferte, si quid forte habetis.—["Bring it forward, if haply ye have any thing"] The false gods are called upon to come forth, and appear in person; and to give evident demonstration of their foreknowledge and power by foretelling future events, and exerting their power in doing good or evil.

Verse 23. That we may be dismayed, and behold it together—(Then shall we be struck at once with admiration and terror)] The word ונרא ve-nore is written imperfectly in the Hebrew Text: the Masoretes supply ה he at the end; and so it is read in twenty-two MSS. and four Editions; that is, ונראה ve-noreh, and we shall see. But the true reading seems to be ונירא venira, and we shall fear, with י yod supplied, from ירא yara.

Verse 24. Your work of nought—[Your operation is less than nought)] For מאפע meaphâ, read מאפס meaphas; so the Chaldee and Vulgate. A manifest error in the text; compare chap. xl. 17. The Rabbins acknowledge no such error; but say, that the former word signifies the same with the latter, by a change of the two letters ס samech and ע ain. Sal. ben. Melech in loc.

is, says Kimchi, the Messiah. The king of Assyria placed the ten tribes in Chalach, and Chabar, by the river Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes, 2 Kings xvii. 6., which lands lie northerly and easterly."]

He shall come upon princes—(He shall trample on princes)] For יבא yabo, Le Clerc reads יבס yebes, from the Chaldee, who seems to read both words. "Forte legend. ויבס vayebes vel וירמס vayirmes: sequitur ס." ["This should perhaps be read ויבס vayebes, or וירמס vayirmes: a ס samech follows."] Secker. See Nah. iii. 14.

[Verse 26. Your words—אמרתיכם imrateycem: but instead of this, one of my most ancient MSS. has דבריכם debareycem. The meaning is nearly the same: but in this reading this MS. is singular.]

Verse 27. The first shall say to Zion, Behold, behold them—(I first to Sion gave the word, Behold they are here)] This verse is somewhat obscure by the transposition of the parts of the sentence, and the peculiar manner in which it is divided into two parallel lines. The verb at the end of the sentence belongs to both parts; and the phrase, Behold, they are here! is parallel to the messenger of glad tidings; and stands like it, as the accusative case to the verb. The following paraphrase will explain the form and the sense of it. "I first, by my prophets, give notice of these events, saying, Behold, they are at hand! and I give to Jerusalem a messenger of glad tidings."

Verse 28. Among them—(Among the idols)] For ומאלה umeelleh, I read ומאלים u-me-ellim, with the Septuagint, και απο των ειδωλων. See Exod. xv. 11. Isa. lvii. 5.

[R. D. Kimchi has many good observations on this Chapter. Bishop Lowth follows him in applying it to Abraham, and not to Cyrus; the whole being spoken in the past tense, which is not used, or rarely, in such a case for the future. Almost the whole of the Rabbins understand it of Abraham. On Kimchi's plan, the following is a paraphrase.

The righteous man—Abram—from the East—The land of his nativity, called the land of the children of the East, Gen. xxix. 1.

Brought him to his feet—Withersoever his feet went, he preached righteousness and truth, as it is written, "There he proclaimed in the name of JEHOVAH." Gen. xxi. 31. And he called it ויקראהו vaiyekrachu—that is, צדק tsedek, righteousness, to his feet, enabled him to hold it forth wherever he went.

He called the nations—To leave their idols, and worship Him, who made the universe. He taught them the way of righteousness, truth, and faith. Was there ever a prodigy like to this! A man who had been an idolater, rising up against all the nations of the earth, reproving their faith, and not fearing before them nor their kings! Who stirred up his heart to do this? Was it not the Lord?

Gave the nations before him—And made him rule over kings—Chederlaomer, and the kings which were with him: whom the Lord gave as dust to his sword, and stubble to his bow.

He pursued them—He and his three hundred and eighteen servants.

He passed safely—שלום shalom for בשלום beshalom, in safety; so said, because he lost not one of his men in this expedition. See Kimchi.]

CHAPTER XLII.

The Prophet sets forth the meekness of the Messiah's character, and the extent and blessings of His kingdom, particularly among the Gentiles, 1—9. In consequence of this he calls on the whole creation to join him in one song of praise to God, 10—12. After which he seems again to glance at the deliverance from the captivity; although the words may full as well apply to the deliverance vouchsafed to the church; to the overthrow of her most powerful enemies; and to the prevalency of true religion over idolatry and error, 13—17. The Prophet then reproves the Jews for their blindness and infidelity in rejecting the Messiah, and gives intimations of those judgments which their guilt would draw on them, 18—25.

The prophet, having opened his subject with the preparation for the return from captivity at Babylon, and intimated that a much greater deliverance was covered under the veil of that event, proceeded to vindicate the power of God, as Creator and Disposer of all things; and His infinite knowledge, from His prediction of future events, and in particular of that deliverance. He went still further, and pointed out the instrument by which He should effect the redemption of His people the Jews from slavery; namely, a great conqueror, whom he would call forth from the North and the East to execute His orders. In this Chapter he proceeds to the greater deliverance; and at once brings forth into full view, without throwing any veil of allegory over the subject, the Messiah. "Behold, my servant, Messiah," says the Chaldee. St. Matthew has applied it directly to Christ; nor can it with any justice or propriety be applied to any other person or character whatever.

NOTES ON CHAP. XLII.

[Verse 1. Behold my servant, whom I uphold—אתמך בו etmach-bo, on whom I lean. Alluding to the custom of kings leaning on the arm of their most beloved and faithful servant. All, both Jews and Christians, agree, that the seven first verses of this Chapter belong to Christ:—Now, as they are evidently a continuation of the prophecy in the preceding Chapter; that prophecy cannot belong to Cyrus, but to Christ.]

He shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles—(He shall publish judgment to the nations) Four MSS. (two ancient,) add the conjunction, ומשפט ve-mishpat. See. Matt. xii. 18.

The word משפט mishpat, judgment, like צדקה tsedekah, righteousness, is taken in a great latitude of signification. It means rule, form, order, model, plan; rule of right, or of religion; an ordinance, institution; judicial process, cause, trial, sentence, condemnation, acquittal, deliverance, mercy, &c. It certainly means in this place the law to be published by Messiah; the institution of the gospel.

Verse 4. He shall not fail nor be discouraged—(His force shall not be abated nor broken)] Rabbi Meir ita citat locum istum, ut post ירוץ yaruts, addat כוחו coacho, robur ejus, quod hodie non comparet in textu Hebræo, sed addendum videtur, ut sensus fiat planior. [" Rabbi Meir cites this passage so as to add after ירוץ yaruts כוחו coacho, his force, which word is not found in the present Hebrew Text, but seems to be added to make the sense more distinct."] Capell. Crit. Sac. p. 382. For which reason I had added it in the translation, before I observed this remark of Capellus.

Verse 6. A covenant of the people—(A covenant to the people)] For עם âm two MSS. [of Dr. Kennicott's, and one of my own] read עולם ôlam, the covenant of the age to come, or, the everlasting covenant; which seems to give a clearer and better sense.

[The word ברית berith, here, should not be translated covenant, and covenant sacrifice, which meaning it often has; and undoubtedly in this place. This gives a stronger and clearer sense.]

Verse 7. To open the blind eyes] In this verse the prophet seems to set forth the spiritual redemption, under images borrowed from the temporal deliverance.

Out of the prison-house—(And from the dungeon)] The Septuagint, Syriac, and four MSS., (one ancient,) add the conjunction ו vau, ומבית u-mibeith, and from the house.

[Verse 8. I am the LORD—אני יהוה ani yehovah—This is the famous tetragrammaton, or name of four letters, which we write Jehovah, Yehovah, Yehveh, Yeveh, Jhuh, Javah, &c. The letters are Y H U H. The Jews never pronounce it; and the true pronunciation is utterly unknown.

That is my name—A name peculiar to myself.]

Verse 10. Ye that go down to the sea] This seems not to belong to this place: it does not well consist with what follows; "and the fulness thereof." They that go down upon the sea means, navigators, sailors, traders, such as do business in great waters: an idea much too confined for the prophet, who means the sea in general; as it is used by the Hebrews, for the distant nations, the islands, the dwellers on the sea-coasts all over the world. I suspect that some transcriber had the 23d verse of Psalm cvii. running in his head, יורדי הים באניות yoredey hayam be-anioth; and wrote in this place יורדי הים yoredey hayam, instead of יערם הים yeraâm hayam, or יריע yeriâ, or יהן yaran; "let the sea roar, or shout, or exult." But as this is so different in appearance from the present reading, I do not take the liberty of introducing it into the translation. Conjeceram legendum יגידו yegidu, ut ver. 12.: sed non favent Versiones. ["I would propose to read יגידו yegidu, as in verse 12.: but this is not supported by the Versions."] Secker.

Verse 11. Let the wilderness] The most uncultivated countries, and the most rude and uncivilized people, shall confess and celebrate with thanksgiving the blessing of the knowledge of God graciously imparted to them. By the desert is meant Arabia Deserta; by the rocky country, Arabia Petræa; by the mountains, probably those celebrated ones Paran, Horeb, Sinai, in the same country; to which also belonged Kedar, a clan of Arabians, dwelling for the most part in tents: but there were others of them, who inhabited or frequented cities and villages, as may be collected from this place of the prophet. Pietro della Valle, speaking of the people of Arabia Deserta, says, "there is a sort of Arabs of that country called Maédi, who with their herds, of buffaloes for the most part, sometimes live in the deserts, and sometimes in cities; from whence they have their name, which signifies wandering, going from place to place. They have no professed houses: nor are they probably Bedaui, or Beduui, that is, Deserticoli, who are the most noble among them, and never abide within walls, but always go wandering through the open country with their black tents; nor are they properly Hhadesi, as they call those who dwell in cities, and lands with fixed houses. These by the latter are esteemed ignoble and base: but both are considered as of low condition." Viaggi, Parte III. lett. ii.

[The villages that Kedar doth inhabit—The Arabs, according to the Targum.

The inhabitants of the rock—They who dwell in fortified places. The Vulgate has habitatores Petrææ, "The inhabitants of Arabia Petrea." Those, who make the rock, Jesus Christ; the inhabitants of the rock, true believers in Him; the singing, rejoicing for the salvation they have received; abuse and disgrace the passage, and the pulpit. I have heard a clergyman,—a magistrate,—a justice of the quorum, spend an hour in showing from these words, 1. That they meant Jesus Christ, and none other.—2. That He might be fully compared to a rock, as the foundation on which His church was built, and on which all true believers rested for their salvation.—3 A rock, because of His strength and might in destroying His enemies, and supporting His friends.—4. A refreshing rock—like that in the wilderness, and that Rock was Christ.—5. A perspective rock, from which true believers could discover their heavenly inheritance—"When my heart is overwhelmed, lead me to the rock that is higher than I, &c." Now all this is true in itself: but false in respect to the words on which it was professedly built, for they have no such meaning.]
